He also said that the word "exhibit" as applied to motion pictures would, as it must be, be supplanted by the word PRESENT; that the day of exhibiting had passed and that it was the presentation of the picture that now counted. [It would be presumption on the part of the writer to say what the term presentation embraces, but those who have visited the Rialto theatre know what I mean.—Ed.] A source of much surprise to Lester Bowen was the announcement by Mr. Rothapfel that upon completion of his new theatre, now in course of construction at Broadway and Forty-ninth street, Mr. Bowen was to be placed at the head of a staff of ten operators, he to have direct supervision over all things relating to projection. Messrs. Joseph Basson, George Bothwell and A. M. Beatty spoke briefly, after which J. H. Hallberg, vice-president of the United Theatre Equipment Company, was introduced by the toastmaster as the "Swedish Electrical Engineer," for which the editor of this department received the blame.

Mr. Hallberg gave an interesting and instructive talk, during the course of which he said that the motion picture operator was fast becoming an artist, and that the operation of a picture machine was more than a profession, it was an art, and that the American Projection Society would soon become a society of artists if they progressed at the same rate as they had during the short time they have been organized.

After all the speakers had been heard from, a toast was proposed to the progressiveness and success of the world's foremost "Projectician" and the president of the society. After the toast had been drunk, music was furnished by the "jazz band," and dancing was enjoyed by those who were lovers of the terpsichore until the wee sma' hours.

Among those present, including members and guests, were: Lester Bowen, Miss L. Miller, Joseph Basson and wife, George C. Edwards and wife, Hector McKinnon and sister, J. I. Rabel and wife, Walter E. Green (alone), A. P. Lombard and wife, George Bothwell and wife, B. F. Porter and wife, Mrs. E. M. Porter, Harry Rubin and wife, Ivan Bowen and wife, Jack Lazarus and wife, F. H. Richardson and wife, J. H. Hallberg and wife, Leslie Reed, A. M. Beatty, Thomas Costello, S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto theatre; Joseph La Rose, Mr. Rothapfel's assistant; Miss Belle Siegel, secretary to Mr. Rothapfel; Will C. Smith, toastmaster, and your humble servant, I. G. Sherman, of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Next week we will reverse it,
but this week we say:

"A Tree is Known by its Fruit"

When you see a particularly admirable piece of work in any line, your mind naturally goes back to the skilled brains and hands that produced it.

The man who operates the Simplex, whether in Chicago or in Shanghai, is bound to have a wholesome respect for those who are back of this excellent piece of mechanism.

And the Exhibitor, even one who is not a mechanic, feels the same way. The favorable results of Permanently Perfect Projection on the box - office receipts, the insignificant repair bills—these and other things give him a good opinion of the men who put their hearts and souls into the production of the Simplex.

If you haven't yet had a taste of the fruit of the Simplex Tree, apply to our Distributor, or ask us for Catalog "N."

shows vitalized views of every detail of moving picture production and manufacture—a complete revelation.

Our Laboratory-Studio was selected as the subject of this one reel feature for obvious reasons which you will understand and appreciate when you see the "picture."

It shows:—

How the raw stock is perforated, camera loaded—how scenery and "props" are built—how a multiple-set studio is lighted and operated.

The mysteries of Screenland are disclosed—you see how the players make-up—you see them in action.

Then you see how the negative is exposed, developed and made ready for printing. You see the positive prints processed until finally on the screen you view the finished "picture."

Mary Pickford

in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

Prophecies Fulfilled

The temptation to boast "I told you so" is great, but the critics are so generous in their praise that we realize that the wisest course we can pursue is to merely transmit to you their words of disinterested praise, rather than our own words of exultant acclaim.

Telegraph (New York), September 3

One of the most elaborate, beautiful and appealing film offerings ever presented. "Little Mary," with her effervescent youth, her genuine comedy and her knowledge of dramatic technique, is the ideal person to immortalize the little girl of the New England village.

Journal (New York), September 5

Mary Pickford's presentation of "The Poor Little Rich Girl" will live long in the hearts of American picture patrons. However, even greater than "The Poor Little Rich Girl" is "Rebecca" . . . the crowning achievement of her wonderful career.

Tribune (New York), September 3

Now, along comes "Rebecca," and all must capitulate. Miss Pickford is quite irresistible and never has she had such wonderful opportunities. The story is delightful.

Herald (New York), September 3

Probably no other actress could even approach her in suitability to this role.

Sun (New York), September 3

Mary Pickford is big hit at Strand. . . . It gives Miss Pickford another chance to play a small girl who, as she puts it herself, is only "the beginnings of a young lady," and to reveal that her winsome vein of comedy has not suffered arrested development through being subdued in her previous pictures to the more important purposes of making folks shiver and gasp.

It doesn't take much showmanship to put across a Mary Pickford picture, but that doesn't mean that good showmanship and progressive advertising won't make it a still greater success.

From the novel of the same title by Robert Hichens. Scenario by Charles Maigne—directed by Maurice Tourneur.

NEW YORK PRESS UNANIMOUS

Every New York paper has given unstinted praise to Elsie Ferguson's triumph in "Barbary Sheep." Here are a few extracts:

American—
In this presentation of "Barbary Sheep" the highest Broadway standards were maintained.

Morning Telegraph—
She sets new standard of character creation.

Times –
Hichens' novel is presented with a wealth of atmosphere, and the many fine pictures go far to justify the production.

Tribune—
It was beautifully done. The scenes are magnificent and the cast was excellent.

Herald—
Establishes herself as one of the most captivating figures in photographic drama.

Commercial—
During the afternoon and evening, lines of men and women two abreast, extended along Seventh avenue toward Forty-third street, and it was found necessary at intervals to stop the sale of tickets, and close the doors to the eager and persistent crowds that besieged them.

Can any producer say anything that will add to the laurels of a picture so widely acclaimed by an unbiased press?

(From the New York World.)

Baldpate on Screen Crowds the Rialto—"Seven Keys to Baldpate," in moving picture form, was shown at the Rialto theatre yesterday before crowds that packed the house several times. In the evening several hundred persons were so anxious to see the film that they waited over an hour outside the theatre until the first crowd left and the second showing began.

(From the New York Herald.)

George Cohan has done his best work in "Seven Keys to Baldpate," presented yesterday at the Rialto Theatre.

(From the New York American.)

As a motion picture the story is no less entertaining and Hugh Ford, the director, has retained all the tricks of construction which made the play the theatrical novelty of its season.

(From the New York Tribune.)

"Seven Keys to Baldpate" loses nothing in screen version at the Rialto.

Since its presentation at the Rialto this Cohan masterpiece has packed the great circuit of Loew theatres in New York City, each of them showing the picture a full week.

MAN'S WILL— AND NATURE'S VENGEANCE!

The woman he loved was as beautiful, as delicate as a lily—but as cold, as passionless as that snow-white blossom.

Another woman, glowing with youth and life like a deep red rose, sought his love, offered him the full measure of her heart—but for her he had only scorn

In despair, he longed to set Nature aright—to give to the lily the passion of the rose, to give to the rose the cold heart of the lily.

Fate gave him his opportunity. An accident placed both women under his care. He performed the miracle—interchanged personalities, and the lily came forth with a red, flaming heart and the rose with a heart that was cold.

He had succeeded! He had cheated Nature. He had meddled with destiny!

Yes,—and then he paid!

The Mark of the Highest in Photoplay Art

AN OVERWHELMING SUCCESS!

H. M. Anderson, Clay and Wigwam Theatres, Detroit, Mich., says:

"Ran 'The Fighting Trail' in both houses last night and broke all house records in the Clay Theatre on a week night for last five (5) years. Also doubled any week night business at the Wigwam, which I have ever had since the house was under my control. I consider 'The Fighting Trail', without fear of contradiction, one of the best serials and biggest money makers for an exhibitor which I have ever had the pleasure of booking, and can highly recommend it."

ALBERT E. SMITH In presenting WILLIAM DUNCAN AND CAROL HOLLOWAY

in "THE FIGHTING TRAIL"

Has Given Exhibitors The Greatest Box Office Attraction the Serial Field Has Ever Known

F. H. Hable, Gem Theatre, Washington, D. C., says:

"I ran the first episode of 'The Fighting Trail' at the Gem Theatre on Saturday, September 15th, and broke all Saturday records---and had to go some to do it. This is due to 'The Fighting Trail.' Great! Keep up the good work!"

Bob Sawyer, Broadway Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah, says:

"Opened 'Fighting Trail' to capacity business. Jammed them in all day long. This is a weak matinee town, but we certainly packed them in on The Fighting Trail.' Filled place time and time again, something unusual here. More than lived up to its advance advertising."

ALL RECORDS BEING SMASHED!

A. R. Zimmer, Elks Theatre, Blackwell, Okla., says:

"At the present writing we have screened episodes one and two and the receipts have exceeded those of any serial we have ever run. We are positive we have taken out a fifteen (15) week insurance policy on Monday's business."

WITH BOX OFFICE RETURNS AT HAND EXHIBITORS ARE UNANIMOUS IN PROCLAIMING

"THE FIGHTING TRAIL"

C. D. Haug, Rex and Majestic Theatres, Knoxville, Tenn., says:

"This serial is going to be the greatest success of any ever released. It is now 10:30 a. m., house packed to doors on second chapter, breaking all records. On first chapter they were lined up in lobby, packed, waiting for opening. In thirty (30) minutes house packed, had to stop selling tickets. My patrons are going wild over this serial, and I have never heard so many cheers."

THE MOST MARVELOUS MELODRAMA OF THE GREAT OUTDOORS EVER PRODUCED Fifteen Episodes

by J·STUART BLACKTON and CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY
Directed by WILLIAM DUNCAN

Ned Pedigo, Highland Theatre, Guthrie, Okla., says:

"I have played serials and then some more serials, but 'The Fighting Trail' is the king bee of them all. Opened the serial on Friday night, almost always a poor night for me, but I could hardly handle the crowd. Advertising on the serial is great. The two 24 sheets had a great deal to do with giving it a boost---different from anything else I have ever tried."

Goldwyn Pictures

Why Quote Hundreds When All Agree?

MADGE KENNEDY and "Baby Mine"—the second Goldwyn release—have been even more enthusiastically welcomed and approved by exhibitors and the American public than the spectacular "Polly of the Circus," starring Mae Marsh. Since the reviews and exhibitor telegrams are unanimous we quote five out of hundreds as representing the pulse of the industry:

NEWSPAPERS:

NEW YORK TRIBUNE:—Just as everyone had about decided in his mind whether he preferred Marguerite Clark or Mary Pickford, along comes Madge Kennedy and upsets all the calculations. She is sweet, she is subtle and her style is inimitable.

NEW YORK HERALD:—This new star, Madge Kennedy, will prove a gold mine in the motion picture business. She keeps her audiences laughing constantly.

ZIT: NEW YORK JOURNAL:—An even greater picture than it was a play. Margaret Mayo's great farce was made to be screened. Madge Kennedy is a wonder.

THE VOICE OF THE EXHIBITOR:

J. W. & W. J. DUSENBURY, GRAND THEATRE, COLUMBUS, O.:—We played to capacity business at our opening and we are maintaining our prices at the highest point ever received regularly by any picture theatre in this city. By doing this we keep Goldwyn Pictures above any idea of mediocrity; they are worth the advance. Goldwyn's marked advance will increase the interest of all educated Americans in motion pictures.

J. J. PARKER, MAJESTIC THEATRE, PORTLAND, ORE.:—Goldwyn Pictures are proving remarkable money-getters for the Majestic Theatre. The Portland photoplay public is today clamoring for Goldwyn Pictures; the Goldwyn publicity had popularized them long before they came upon the screen. And I am not the least bit backward in commending your "Polly of the Circus" as a money-getting picture from every standpoint.

These are not unexpected messages of approval for Madge Kennedy or Margaret Mayo's great farce. Others now tell you what Goldwyn itself has forecast for months. Exhibitors will find that Goldwyn promises less in its advertising than it always delivers.

"The worst-spoiled girl in America", and how she was brought to her senses and to a realization of the true values of life—that is the story in a nutshell. Gentlemen:-

In response to your letter making inquiries regarding The Lone Wolf would state that I never played a picture in the Hamilton theatre that met with better commendations, I heard not one complaint as to story, production, acting, etc., and would think that some more pictures of this class with the same star would go big here. I am satisfied that after showing the Wolf that the name Brenon in connection with the production of any other photoplay in the future insures success in my theatre. I do not see where any improvement could be made over this production.

"From Studio to Screen"

How many times have you heard people say, "I wish I could go to a Studio and watch them take pictures—to see just really how they are made—it must be wonderfully interesting." Yes, it is wonderful—and the 15,000,000 people who attend motion picture theatres daily think so, too, and wish that they could visit a great big up-to-date studio. Few have had this opportunity—but—

"From Studio to Screen" a one-reel feature, shows the life of the film world and discloses to the patron its mysterious workings. It is full of action from beginning to end and intensely interesting. A trip thru the dressing rooms—how the players make up—the setting up of big scenes—studio lighting—developing and printing the film, and finally you view the finished picture on the screen. This is truly a picture every one will want and enjoy seeing. It is now playing at the Strand Theatre, Broadway, New York.

An Exhibitor Crisis

THERE will be a crisis this year in the exhibitor business.

This would be our answer if we were asked to define the one outstanding phase of the picture industry for 1917-18.

The exhibitor is being put to the test.

He is under the high pressure of high rentals, high wages, and increased maintenance costs all along the line.

To put it bluntly he has got to stand this high pressure—or bust.

This is the plain truth even if it hurts; and we are making the blunt statement in the hope that it will hurt, and thereby induce action in the exhibitor's own salvation if to no other end.

Let's Clear the Air

THE exhibitor is the retailer in this business.

As in every other industry, he is the foundation stone of the whole picture business. Its security, the security of each story of the edifice, depends upon the exhibitors' security—that is to say his substantial, enduring success.

Because of this importance—which is simply the importance of any retailer in any industry—the exhibitor has been coddled. The manufacturer has coddled him; so has the distributor; so have certain self-seeking individuals who want to organize the exhibitor to their own ends—even if that end is so little as the securing of an easy job; who, with honeyed words, preach the rank anarchism that the exhibitor is an independent force so mighty that he can invite the rest of the industry to bend its knee to him.

We don't believe that any exhibitor swallows the guff; and we believe he sees clear through the sophistry and insincerity of the man who preaches it.

All the same, it is about time to stop coddling, to clear the air generally and point out some practical business truths.

Two Ways Out

THERE are just two ways for the exhibitor to meet the high pressure the year has put upon him.

One is through higher admission prices; the other is by being a better retailer.

Let us again emphasize the unpleasant truth—that it's a case of meeting this pressure or buckling under it. Buckling under means the loss of your house.

Exhibitors as Retailers

IN two previous editorials we stated that exhibitors are poor retailers, that they do not measure up to the merchandising abilities of the retailers of other goods. This is a fact. It is true of an astoundingly large number of exhibitors.

We don't claim to be good exhibitors ourselves. Entering the business we would probably do as badly as the average greenhorn. But our statement is based upon partly an outside and partly an inside view of conditions that are as plain as daylight.

Exhibitors are not good retailers. They lean too much upon the motion picture and its popularity with the public. In other words, they expect the people to come in; they don't try to pull them in, and make them come again.

They lean too much upon the manufacturer. They expect him to pull the public in—through a great array of stars and other sensations; they lean supinely upon him and a regular and sufficient supply of his goods. They make no effort to build up the name of their house in the public eye, so that they will be independent of the line of goods they handle. They make no effort to build up their own clientele; they are simply building up a clientele for the manufacturer. It is an actual fact that such exhibitors are not proprietors of their own houses. They are not retailers. They are, in principle, simply the hired theatre managers of the manufacturer whose pictures they rely upon so completely.

They lean too much upon the exchange. They expect service without asking for it, or without making any effort on their part to take full advantage of it. They take paper and then mess up the front of their house with it, so that the public looks—is bewildered—and passes by.

We are not striving here to lay all the burden upon the exhibitor. The successful retailing of pictures is a co-operative matter. Good pictures are just as necessary as their successful presentation and the judicious advertising of them. But it is our candid belief that, while picture production has advanced ninety per cent. in the past four years, ninety per cent. of the picture houses are

Speaking Editorially:

Higher Rentals

AGAIN we call the manufacturers' attention to his high rentals. Are they based upon the theatres' potential drawing power, or upon what the manufacturer thinks he can get?

They must be based, and they can be based, upon the number of people—the full number—who can be got into the theatre, through good advertising, to see such pictures. They must not be based upon the impossible.

The solution demands good pictures, and definite facts, and figures upon theatre and theatre population.

Buy Another Bond!

MANY of us, who are eking along on salaries, have just paid the final instalment on our Liberty Bond. Before we have time to recover our breath—and our slim bank balance—along comes Liberty Loan number two!

What are we going to do about it?

Film men saw, and arose quickly to their patriotic opportunity, when the tang of novelty still flavored the first bond offering.

Now the novelty is gone. The second bond is a humdrum thing.

The first was a patriotic novelty. The second bond is more than that—a patriotic necessity.

Don't hold back. We know now that wars aren't picnics. It costs money to fight—and we are confident that every film man will do his duty.

Our allies look upon America as a fountain of enthusiasm.

no better run than in the days when there was nothing to do but let the public in and out again.

The Inevitable Result

AND now comes the period of high pressure. It was inevitable that it should come. Economic conditions within and without the industry—as in many another—have brought about increased costs. Wages, repair costs, supplies of all kinds have gone 'way up; and now higher rentals make the crisis acute.

The former meagre profit and the full and easy profit will both be wiped out.

What's to be done?

The answer is two-fold: higher admission prices, and the better retailing of pictures.

And there are two horns of the dilemma also: either you—the present exhibitor—will have to rise to the occasion, or some other man or circuit that can, will come in and take your place.

It's sad, but it's true. It is not a pleasant duty to tell a man his home is on fire, but it's better than to smile and pass on.

Go After the New Public

THE situation is anything but hopeless. The potential theatre-going population of the country is very great; it hasn't been sounded yet. Bad retailing, a helpless reliance upon the people who come anyway, is holding millions of the public from picture theatres.

If we are now playing to fifteen per cent. of our population, then we can—and must—play to thirty per cent. This new public can be had.

The situation is equally applicable to city and country theatres.

There are a number of large and beautiful city theatres which are making handsome profits, very large in proportion to those of other branches of the industry. Location, pictures, luxury of appointments have a lot to do with their success. But in every instance you will also find successful management, keen and alert in advertising, in innovations of service, in novelties, in good music for the millions of music-lovers—good retailers in other words, who have made their houses, not merely their pictures known; who rely upon their own brains and enterprise, not merely upon motion pictures.

We learned recently of one house, in the outlying districts of a large city, a poor location, whose receipts were nearly trebled within three months. How? Not by changing its program but by adding an advertising manager who knew how to get the public in. And the prices were advanced!

We learned of a large, closed theatre, opened up and put upon its feet in little over a month. By good management, that's all! Good retailing!

The Small Town Exhibitor

A SMALL town exhibitor told us, the other day, that in his estimation six out of every seven small town exhibitors were not up to their jobs. If this be true, the backbone of the industry—and the small houses make the backbone—is not strong enough to support its body.

From our own observations the statement is about correct. We ran an article in our Service Department a few weeks ago, the advice in which, if followed by every country exhibitor, would in our candid opinion bring a million more people into picture theatres.

Its advice was simple. It told the exhibitor how to get value out of his unused country weekly; how to cover his new territory so greatly broadened by the automobile; how to dress his theatre front like the best merchants dress their window. What small town exhibitor is doing this now?

We learned by letter this week of an exhibitor in a town of 1,700 population who played to 800 admissions. How many are duplicating this success?

Higher Prices—Next Week

FOR lack of room we shall have to treat of higher prices next week.

In the meantime we call attention to the concerted advance in prices by New York theatres and to similar advances by theatres in other cities and sections throughout the country. It is the most striking sign of the Fall business.

And in particular we call attention to the fact that at this writing it seems probable that the war tax is back again on theatre admissions.

Higher admission prices must come.

Houses Throughout Country Generally Raise Admissions

Ninety Per Cent of Moss Theatres Put Higher Scale into Effect—Some Loew and Fox Houses Understood to Have Raised Prices—No Falling Off in Attendance

FACED with the alternative of reducing the quality of shows given or of increasing admission prices to a degree which will cover the higher cost of exhibition, big and little exhibitors from coast to coast have made a concerted move toward higher prices and consequently better pictures.

B. S. Moss, William Fox and Marcus Loew, all controlling strings of houses where the best pictures are shown, have in many cases, according to reports raised the scale of admissions in their theatres anywhere from five cents to twenty-five. Higher overhead cost, brought on for the most part by increased film rental, has necessitated putting a share of the burden onto the shoulders of the public. Yet reports from practically every section of the country indicate that these raises have been met with good spirit on the part of the public which has been educated to the better class of pictures.

Moss Theatres All Raise

B. S. Moss, the magnate who controls many popular priced houses in and around New York, the majority of which run feature pictures in conjunction with vaudeville, last week admitted that ninety per cent of his theatres had put in effect a small raise in prices, of five or ten cents, and predicted that if conditions did not improve a still higher price was probable in the not so distant future. Mr. Moss explained the circumstances attendant to his policy as follows:

"About ninety per cent of our theatres were raised in admission price five or ten cents according to locality. We prefer a low price, and would keep it low if we could. The fact that we have gone up is proof enough that we had to. The change that has been made, in our own, and for that matter in other competing theatres face to face with the same situation, was made because we were in one sense backed up against the wall, and had to order an increase at the door.

"The situation in the popular-priced theatre showing pictures and vaudeville is not a result of the war. In truth, the increased price would have come sooner if it had not been for the abnormal conditions that prevail owing to the war. The war has served to make business better, considering the number of admissions. More people go to the theatre, and I think to motion picture places also, than before the war. There is wide interest in the news reels, and that interest will increase as more of our soldiers get to the front. Then war brides and wartimes profit have found their way in part to the theatre box-office.

"Competition in Excellence" Cause

"What has forced us to raise prices is what I call a competition in excellence. The kind of vaudeville we showed ten years ago we can't put on at all nowadays. In those days there were no feature pictures—they were simply movies. We have bettered the show, and bettered the show, and again bettered the show until the cost drives us to increase admission prices. This is not the whole story but it is the main reason.

"About seven or eight years ago a show in one of our popular priced theatres, say the ten, fifteen and twenty-five house, would consist of a service program the cost of which would be from $75 to $125 a week. The vaudeville portion of the program would not exceed $400 in cost per week.

"Today the manager of popular-priced house thinks nothing of putting in a picture the cost of which is $1,000 a week, and upwards, and at the same time the vaudeville show which costs $1,500 to $2,000 per week and upwards."

Mr. Moss called in his booking manager to verify this statement and read off act after act for which $1,750 had been paid, vaudeville teams who had received as much as $350, and single performers who had been paid upward of $200. He then discussed the other phases of the problem. Mr. Moss said:

All Items Now More Costly

"I cannot now think of a single item in construction, repair, maintenance or opera-

A VOICE FROM THE SOUTH PACIFIC

An editorial writer of the Evening Star, Fielding, New Zealand, has thus expressed his appreciation of the way American producers showed their patriotism when war was declared:

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS FOR MAY 5 INDICATES THE PATRIOTISM OF THE FILM PRODUCERS WHEN AMERICA DECLARED WAR. IT WAS POINTED OUT THAT SEVERAL NEW BIG PICTURES WOULD HAVE THE EFFECT OF RETARDING ENLISTING OF FIGHTERS. "VERY WELL, THEN," SAID THE PROPRIETORS; "WE WILL WITHDRAW THOSE FILMS." THE NEWS, WHICH IS A WONDERFUL RECORD OF THE TRADE, REPORTS A CLOSER ORGANIZATION OF PRODUCING INTERESTS.

"Raise Admissions?—Well, I Should Say Not!"

So Says E. F. Albee, Executive Head of the Keith Interests, Who Says He Has Not Raised the Price at the Door a Penny

"NO use to see me. I can't help you a bit. I see no reason at all to raise admission prices."

The speaker was E. F. Albee, of the Keith theatres. He was just about to leave his office—the head center of the most gigantic business in the theatre industry.

"Haven't admission prices been raised already in some Keith theatres?"

"Not much! We have not put up admissions and we don't intend to. There is no reason to do it. If the theatres want to raise anything let them raise salaries. I see some excuse for that, but no excuse at all for raising admissions."

"Other theatre owners talk in a different way, Mr. Albee. Why is——"

"Of course they do," interrupted the chief executive of the Keith interests; "they want the money."

"But pictures cost them more money. It costs more to produce them."

"It costs double what it cost to produce ten years ago," admitted Mr. Albee, "but that is no reason for raising admissions. Cost of production has gone up, but so have the number of admissions, the population of the towns, and the profits of running a theatre. Things were never better in the business than they are today."

"Is that true of the big cities as well as the small towns?"

"Certainly it is true. In the old days when we had a theatre in Fourteenth street, if another was started in Harlem, at 125th street, we felt sore about it. We were afraid it was going to send our business to the dogs. New York had 2,000,000 then and now we have 6,000,000. We have hundreds of theatres. Why, they stand side by side down the block. We don't care how many there are. More people pay at the box office than ever before—and they pay oftener. I tell you there is no excuse to raise admissions."

"Do you think that is true of the motion picture places—theatres that show nothing but pictures? You are not in the picture business exclusively, altogether?"

"In the picture business? I guess we are in the picture business!" put in Mr. Albee emphatically. "We have scores, many scores of houses that show nothing but pictures. I think this house is the leading exhibitor of motion pictures."

"And you have not raised prices to those theatres?"

"Not one penny—and we are not going to," responded Mr. Albee. Then he added by way of explanation: "I ought to say that we have made five and ten cent raises here and there, or perhaps lowered prices to a like extent here and there. These changes have nothing at all to do with the present situation. They are changes made for local reasons, and are incident to the business, going on all the time, this year and every year. What I am saying is that there is no reason, no general reason, to increase admissions."

What To Do with Cigarettes and Pennies

1. Pack cigarettes carefully in boxes of 100 (boxes can be secured from local tobacco stores) in which slightly moistened blotters in envelopes are placed to prevent cigarettes from drying.
2. Arrange with the commissary department of the camp where men from your section will go for distributing the cigarettes contributed at your theatre.
3. In case this is impossible, or in case you have superfluous cigarettes, send them by parcel post, carefully packed, directly to Motion Picture News, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.
4. Pennies and other coins collected should be deposited at your bank and a check for the amount sent weekly, made payable to Motion Picture News. These checks will be turned over to the Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund for purchasing tobacco and cigarettes to be sent to our soldiers in France. Receipts for these packages (every 25 cents you send buys 45 cents worth of tobacco) will be sent to you directly by the soldiers who receive them. You will receive a postcard message of thanks directly from the trenches for each 25 cents you contribute.

   For example: If your cash contributions amount to $100 weekly, you will receive 400 cards. These should be displayed in your lobby or, better still, sent out to your mailing list.
5. Keep closely in touch with your local newspaper. Let the editor know your results and urge him to co-operate with you. It will mean more subscribers for his paper—more patrons for your theatre.
6. If you haven't sent for a "Drop a Penny" or a "Drop a Cigarette" card, send for it—NOW!

"Smokes" Fund Will Have Mighty Boost During Thanksgiving Week

THE motion picture division of the "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," will be given a strong impetus during the week of November 25, December 1, when it is hoped every motion picture theatre will take part in this splendid patriotic movement.

Next week, fifteen thousand letters will be mailed out to exhibitors all over the country, outlining the plan to them, and urging them to participate. The letter reads as follows:

Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund

DEAR SIR:

As you perhaps know, the MOTION PICTURE NEWS has started a nation-wide campaign to secure smokes for our boys in the trenches in France.

In co-operation with them we are arranging to observe Thanksgiving week as a "Smoke" week in the motion picture industry, and our specific request to you is that you will give a benefit during this week, the proceeds of which will go to "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund."

If you agree to this, you can surely obtain the co-operation of some newspaper in your town, as most of them are now running tobacco funds for our soldiers. By this additional publicity you will be sure of packed houses, and the increased business and advertising will no doubt compensate you for any amount you contribute to the fund out of your receipts. According to the plan developed by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, each motion picture theatre places a receptacle in their lobby for contributions of tobacco or money. This is an additional feature which you can adopt to good advantage not only in this "Smoke" week but throughout the war.

We enclose a card which we ask you to return with your signature. When we receive your signed agreement to co-operate in this "Smoke" week we will see that the name of your theatre is prominently featured in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and you will receive any advertising helps that we can furnish you in the shape of posters, etc. It is understood that all the money contributed will be sent in to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and credited in their columns to the theatres sending it.

As Thanksgiving is some weeks off, you will have plenty of time to line up your publicity campaign and to make your plans. This is your chance to take part in the most popular patriotic movement before the public, and to get big publicity for yourself.

Very truly yours,
"OUR BOYS IN FRANCE TOBACCO FUND."

The postcards to be returned by exhibitors are as follows:

"OUR BOYS IN FRANCE TOBACCO FUND" OF MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

GENTLEMEN:

We shall be glad to put our theatre behind the movement to adopt a "Smoke" week throughout the motion picture industry. Count on us to conduct such an enterprise during Thanksgiving week at our theatre and send us such helps as you have.

We will send any money contributed direct to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS to be turned in to "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund."

Kansas Exhibitors' Convention, Oct. 15-16

Meeting at Manhattan, Kan., with Train Excursion to Fort Riley and Auto Trip to Camp Funston, Nearby

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kansas will have important matters of discussion before it at a semi-annual convention to be held Oct. 15-16 at Manhattan, Kan.

This is a town near a large cantonment, Camp Funston, and hotels are crowded. It is advisable for exhibitors, exchange and supply men, all of whom are invited, to make reservations in advance, to be sure of accommodations. Arrangements are being made for the largest convention ever held in Kansas. It is deemed essential that Kansas exhibitors, at any rate, should attent.

The Kansas State Agricultural College, at Manhattan, is responsible for the now famous film, "Winning with Wheat," and has taken much interest in the arrangements for the convention. The large gymnasium on the college grounds has been donated for the "movie ball."

J. J. Marshall, manager of the Marshall theatre, Manhattan, writes that efforts are being made to obtain motion picture stars for the meeting. They will attend the ball, of course, on the evening of the 16th.

Everybody at the convention is to be invited on a special trip over the M. C. & I. railway to Fort Riley. The Manhattan Motor Club has arranged an auto trip, including a visit to Camp Funston, ten miles away. The Holt Feature Film Company, of Manhattan, will film the convention activities.

Hotel reservations—under the circumstances necessary—may be made by writing direct to Mr. Marshall.

Plans for New Circuit Practically Completed

Plans for a new exhibitors' organization were formulated last week at a meeting held in New York by many of the most prominent men in the independent field. The new organization will be known as the Exhibitors' Co-operative Circuit. The details of the organization were not given out, but it is stated that the names of many of the big factors in the motion picture industry will appear on the roster when the final organization plans are announced next week.

It is announced that the plans of the new circuit have progressed to a point where the membership embraces almost every important film centre in the country, and with the completion of final details to be consummated at a special meeting to be held this week, the organization will be complete. A detailed announcement will be given out during the present week.

Marsden Quits Exchange to State Rights Films

Rufus D. Marsden, formerly manager of the Boston office of the K-E-S-E service, has resigned to enter the state rights field in New England. Mr. Marsden owns a large interest in the United Theatres Equipment Corporation, and he will also devote considerable of his attention to the exploitation of special features in the New England territory.

Michigan Exhibitors Lean Toward A. E. A.

The recently formed American Exhibitors' Association, which has been gaining momentum in the form of new members and supporters since its formation in Chicago, seems to have captured the whole State of Michigan, according to reports from Detroit last week, where it is said the new organization is "stronger than horseradish." A Detroit exhibitor, in speaking of the rapid development of the A. E. A., said: "No matter what exhibitor you talk to in Michigan, you will find him to be 'strong' for the new American Exhibitors' Association. The biggest exhibitors in the state believe that the association is conducting its activities along the right lines."

Both Detroit and Michigan charter associations have already affiliated with the new association, which leaves the M. P. E. L. of A. without representation in Michigan, it was stated in Detroit last week.

Injunction Against Inter-Ocean Feature Denied

An effort to block the presentation of the Russian feature, "Kerensky in the Russian Revolution of 1917," at Manager Schulman's Majestic theatre, First street and Second avenue, New York, last week, proved futile when the plea for an injunction against the film was heard before Justice Cohalan, of the Supreme Court. The Court ruled that the picture is not plagiarized from other pictures of the Russian revolution.

"Kerensky in the Russian Revolution of 1917" is controlled by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, and is being exploited as a state rights feature by M. S. Epstein.

Small Exhibitors May Escape Proposed Tax

Idea Prevalent That Houses Whose Admission Charge Is Under Twenty-five Cents Will Be Exempt—Film Men Hold Conference

THE idea that the motion picture theatres of the country charging an admission of twenty-five cents and under will be taxed in the bill now in Congress is not entertained by the leading exhibitors, nor by those of the exhibitors who have been in conference with the Senate Committee, according to developments in Washington last week. Although the bill has been changed from the original, and now includes the exemption of theatres charging a lower admission price than twenty-five cents, it is believed by those in a capacity privileged to speak that exemption will not include the houses charging less than twenty-five cents, even though some think that fifteen cents should be the minimum to be taxed.

In a conference with the Senate Committee last week concerning the proposed tax, the following representatives of the film business and picture theatres stated conditions very plainly to the Committee: Harry Crandall, president of the Crandall Amusement Company and an officer of the Government Board for mobilizing the motion picture interests; Tom Moore, president of the Moore Enterprises, and who has a controlling interest in the Exhibitors' Film Circuit; C. C. Pettijohn, of the Maryland Exhibitors' League, and Mr. Varnon, of the North Carolina Exhibitors. It was agreed that exemption of additional tax would be on admissions of twenty-five cents and under. Though the bill may go to the House with some changes, it is believed that it will not become a law, and that further conference will bring it to the original draft wherein the theatres under the twenty-five-cent limit will be exempt.

"The Senate committee very thoroughly understands the situation," said Mr. Crandall when asked about any change. "We feel very confident about that, though we are keeping very closely in touch with this matter. The motion picture industry is already hampered with many taxes, which are borne by the exhibitor, and lastly by the patrons of the theatres. Congress realizes that the motion picture house is the poor man's theatre, and as such does not come within the province of further taxation. We are charging as small admission price now as possible, and conduct a fair business."

Tom Moore spoke with the same confidence of exempting taxation of admissions of twenty-five cents and less. "It is not the purpose of the present tax bill to strike the little boys," he declared. "And the motion picture theatre comes within that range. We have discussed that matter thoroughly with the men of Congress, and have been assured that no further burden will be given us. The people could not stand it, for it is the people who would have to bear this tax. The world at large has come to regard amusement as a necessary relaxation at this time of depression, and this amusement is being furnished, to a very large extent, by the motion pictures."

New Photoplay Theatres Opening in Boston

Loew's Columbia Makes Gala Event of Opening, with Arbuckle Feature as Drawing Card—Castle Square Being Remodeled

THE immediate present in Boston is being used to great advantage by the motion picture industry, which is making great strides forward in this section of the country. The fact is forcibly evidenced by the several new photoplay houses which are being erected in the city and by enlargements and improvements in some of the exchanges. One theatre was given a grand opening last week, and others are now in the process of construction.

Marcus Loew's new Columbia theatre on Washington street has been completed after a year or more of work, which was greatly delayed by a devastating fire which visited the house last February after it had been nearly finished. The management celebrated the grand opening of the theatre Monday evening, September 24, with the house filled to capacity.

Great pains were taken by Manager Samuel D. Messing in arranging the premiere performance at the Columbia. The big feature of the program was the appearance of Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, who accepted an invitation of Marcus Loew to come on to the Hub City to attend the opening of the house and speak a few words to the audience. The remainder of the program consisted of vaudeville acts, William S. Hart in "The Cold Deck," "Fatty" Arbuckle in "His Wedding Night," and the Hearst-Pathe News Weekly.

The Old Castle Square theatre, formerly the home of John Craig's stock company, is being remodeled and rebuilt into a moving picture house, which will be opened within a short time. Work on the reconstruction of theatre is progressing rapidly, and Allan Brothers, who own the house, believe that it will be ready for opening in a few weeks. The Castle Square is being made over into one of the finest photoplay houses in New England, and will be equipped with every possible modern device and equipment for the convenience of its patrons. The theatre is located in the South End, and will need to fight no opposition in that vicinity.

The largest film exchange in New England will open shortly on Pleasant street, and will be occupied by the World Film Corporation. It is probably one of the biggest exchange buildings in the country. Manager George M. A. Fecke, of the New England headquarters of the World organization, is highly pleased with the plans for his new exchange. The structure is already built, but needs several changes in the interior. Manager Fecke states that he believes he will get into his new offices about December 15. The Boston Exchange of the World Film Corporation for the past year or more has been sorely in need of larger quarters, owing to the tremendous increase in business attained by the Boston office, and these new quarters will adequately meet their needs.

tion which has not gone up in price. Take carpets and I find I am paying $3.40 a yard for what could be bought for $1.25 a few years ago. In the summer refurnishing of theatres we must pay higher prices for labor and for each and every item of material. Wages have gone up, but I am ready to admit not enough considering the tremendous increase in the cost of living. Coal, supplies, settings, everything costs more.

"It will be apparent to any fair man that face to face with a situation like this the increase in prices of admissions would have come long ago but for the abnormal business. This postponed the day, but finally we had to come to it. I think myself that vaudeville and pictures should be separated. We should have vaudeville houses and picture houses. As it is now the man who goes to a show sees more than he can readily assimilate. It is like the table d'hote dinner—after a man eats one clear through from soup to nuts he is finished for that day and for several days afterward.

Public Looks for the Best

"We have been forced to keep on bettering the show because we could not help ourselves. Now that we have brought the public up to the point where the best is expected and demanded there is no going back. This is the reason I say that all I can see ahead is the possibility of a still larger admission price.

"Take Fourteenth street as an example. Fox has a theatre there and so have we. Fox put on a picture, and we put on a picture. Fox put on a comedy number and we put on a comedy number. Fox put on a news reel and we added a news reel. Now there are something like eight numbers on the bill and all the finest.

"Having educated the public up to it any reasonable person can see that the only way out for the owner, if he is to keep his head above water, is to put up the admission price a little—as little as is possible. Theatre men have no two opinions about the popular priced house. We all agree that the price ought to be low. If the price goes up it is because we cannot help ourselves in any other way."

Other Theatres in Line

A number of the Loew theatres have previously been reported as increasing their admission scale in the same proportion as the Moss Houses. Some of William Fox's theatres are also understood to have found it necessary, in order to maintain the high standard of shows, to put into effect a higher set of prices.

In Philadelphia, picture houses both in the outlying and downtown sections have raised prices with no falling off of patronage. The situation in Baltimore may be judged from a typical example—the announcement of the West End theatre from five to ten cents at matinees, and ten to fifteen cents at the night performances.

The Allen theatre, a big house in Calgary, Canada, recently made announcement of increase in admission prices from fifteen and twenty-five cents to twenty and thirty, taking a full page ad in the newspapers.

The Famous Players Film Service of Canada has put a higher scale of prices into effect in many of its Western Canadian theatres. In Edmonton in a one floor theatre, the scale went from ten and fifteen cents to fifteen and twenty-five. Increases in the same proportion have been put into effect in Calgary, Regina and other cities.

From correspondents it is learned the increase move is general throughout the country, and there have been no reports of a falling off in attendance.

WHAT CAN YOU DO FOR BETTER BUSINESS?

Are the people walking by your theatre and patronizing your competitor?

Of course you feel very sure that you are running "much better" films and that you have the "best" house, but still you are not getting the business.

Your film rental is higher than that of your rival, you have a greater seating capacity and you have everything the public ought to like. Get that word ought?

You can't fit a forty waist on a "perfect 36." If you don't know what we mean, ask your wife. In other words, you cannot sell the public an entertainment that the public is not looking for. Why not make it LOOK?

We want to hear from you fellows who are having the hardest rows to hoe. It takes harder work to help you, but that's what we are here for.

Don't sit back and wait for the crowds to come to your house. Take out the old lasso and pull 'em in.

Jerome Abrams, Philadelphia, Is Organizing for Foursquare

Jerome Abrams, Philadelphia manager for Foursquare Pictures, Inc., has just returned from a trip to Pittsburg, Cleveland and Cincinnati, establishing Foursquare exchanges in all these cities.

Alleged Chaplin Pirate Stopped by Court

Judge Hough, in the United States District Court of Southern New York, last week granted an injunction against an alleged name pirate of Charlie Chaplin and supplied the incentive which Chaplin has grasped to push what he characterizes as "a fight to the finish." In the injunction action it was claimed that unauthorized persons prepared two films featuring Chaplin's name, and that the high-salaried comedian had nothing at all to do with the production. According to Nathan Burkan, attorney for Chaplin, the injunction will not only restrain the imitators or pirates from offering the films for sale, but will mark the inauguration of similar suits against any imitators who may come to light.

Lamb Goes to Chicago for Extended Visit

H. W. Lamb, vice-president and general manager of the American Standard M. P. Corporation, has left for Chicago, where he expects to remain several weeks. His mission to the Windy City is to close a deal with distributors to handle their productions in this territory, and upon his return the company intends to announce its future plans and distributing methods, as well as the names of the exchanges throughout the country that will handle the American Standard program.

In speaking of the program Mr. Lamb said: "It is our intention to make pictures featuring some of the best known and well liked stars, actors and actresses, who have been known to the exhibitor in the past as box-office attractions. We are in a position to handle our productions and distribute them to the exhibitor at prices that will give him bigger profits."

"The Burglar" Begins Engagement at Park Theatre

"The Burglar," a World-Brady feature, with Madge Evans, Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in the leading roles, is beginning an engagement at the Park theatre, on Columbus Circle, which carries with it indications of unusual success. The screen drama follows closely the play of the same title by Augustus Thomas. The stage version of the story has been seen by many thousands of theatre patrons, many of whom, no doubt, will turn naturally to the film version. The production, directed by Harley Knoles, is thought by William A. Brady to be very nearly perfect, and the three leading roles are said to fit Mr. Blackwell, Miss Evans and Miss Greeley "as though the players had been melted and poured into them"—quoting Mr. Knoles.

Famous Players-Lasky Plan Big Advertising Campaign

Appropriation of One Million Dollars Set Aside for Purpose—Newspapers, Magazines and Electric Signs Will Be Used—Local Exhibitors Should Reap the Full Benefit

WHAT is claimed to be one of the greatest advertising campaigns, in point of territory involved and money expended, that has ever been undertaken since the motion picture became one of the leading industries of the world, will be launched by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation immediately, according to an announcement made last week.

The plans include the advertising of Artcraft and Paramount features in the principal newspapers and the leading national magazines and upon some of the most important electric signs in the chief cities of the United States. For this purpose Famous Players-Lasky have set aside the sum of $1,000,000 to be used in making Paramount and Artcraft pictures better known and more popular in every place where motion pictures are flashed across the screen.

Campaign Linked with Exhibitor

The most important feature of the campaign, it is announced, will not be the large sum set aside for securing the publicity, but the manner in which the campaign will be linked with the local exhibitor. The entire purpose of the advertising drive will be to pull the public into the local theatres, and all means have been planned for the purpose of hooking up the national and local advertising with the theatre in each instance. The campaign will be two-fold in its character because of the use of the two different types of mediums represented by the newspapers and the national magazines and the electric signs.

The cities in which every newspaper in town will carry the names of advertising space of Paramount and Artcraft stars under the Famous Players and Lasky banner include New York, Chicago, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis, San Francisco, Detroit, Cleveland, Kansas City and about seventy others throughout the country. This means that the exhibitor will get valuable aid in 300 newspapers in the leading cities, with a combined reading circulation of over 19,000,000. This estimate is considered exceedingly low and conservative, as it is aimed by Famous Players-Lasky to bring their advertising in newspapers to the notice of nearly sixty million people.

Eighteen Magazines Included

The campaign in the magazines will be pushed in proportion to the rest of the plans for publicity. At least eighteen of these mediums will be used, among them The Saturday Evening Post, Cosmopolitan, and The Ladies' Home Journal. These three publications have a reading circulation estimated at about forty-two million. In addition to the three, Famous Players-Lasky intend to use the nationally circulated motion picture magazines which represent a wide percentage of motion picture fandom.

Directly on the heels of the newspaper and magazine advertising will come the electric sign publicity, admittedly one of the chief means of putting things before the public. The number of people attracted by these signs in the cities is estimated in the millions, and by constant repetition they get their message over with a punch, invariably. The message of Paramount and Artcraft will be flashed forth by these signs in New York, Chicago and several other of the leading cities.

In addition to these plans, which have been completed and now await only the order to begin putting them into effect, numerous other phases to the campaign are being perfected, but which are being withheld for the present. They will first be carefully worked out, it is announced, before the details are given out.

Trade-Mark Is Direct Link

The direct means of linking up the advertising lay-out directly with the exhibitor will be the distribution by Famous Players-Lasky of Paramount and Artcraft trade-marks from its exchanges, in order that every exhibitor in his advertising will be able to insert the trade-marks and thus tell the public that the pictures are to be presented in his particular theatre. The exchanges will also issue trade-mark posters for exhibitors to display outside the theatre. Animated trailers will accompany the trade-marks.

In charge of the entire campaign will be John C. Flinn, director of advertising and publicity of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. In the announcement made from his office last week, Mr. Flinn stated his intention of getting the extensive campaign under way during the early part of October, and he feels reasonably sure that the project will reach proportions never before attempted by producing companies. The venture will no doubt be worth many times over the amount of the initial expenditure.

Zukor Tells the Reason for Move

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in speaking of the launching of the advertising campaign, said: "This is the first time in the history of the industry that a producing and distributing concern has spent a million dollars for the purpose of telling the public of its stars and plays, but we are already accustomed to taking revolutionary steps. Our decision to expend this sum on advertising in a year is only another indication of our implicit faith in the wonderful future of motion pictures and in our stars, productions and organization. It is not a question of bragging about ourselves, but a conviction that the public ought to be told about what we have to offer. We confidently expect the exhibitor who is showing our productions to see the value of telling the public that our pictures can be seen at his theatre. We have made a long and careful survey of the situation and are very much pleased to find that the large majority of exhibitors who are showing our pictures are constant advertisers in their local papers. We have now worked out a plan whereby they will be able to link up their local advertising with our great national campaign and we are going to render every possible service in assisting them to do so."

American Exhibitors Meet for Discussion

A meeting of the Board of Directors of the recently formed American Exhibitors' Association has been called by President Jake Wells for October 4 at the headquarters in the Times Building, New York. Many matters of importance will be discussed at the meeting, after which it is expected that an announcement of vital interest to the exhibitors will be made

The rapid growth of the new association indicates that the exhibitor members have formed an organization founded upon business principles, and that something really worth while for the exhibitors will be accomplished. The fight that representatives of the association made in Washington against a prohibitive tax on motion picture theatres and the efforts now being made to reach a satisfactory agreement over the music tax, have demonstrated that the officers are working energetically in the cause of the exhibitor.

At the same time the announcement of the call for the meeting was made, it was also made known that Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, went to Indianapolis on September 27 to attend a meeting of the directors of the Indiana local of the organization. Frank J. Rembusch, chairman of the organization committee of the A. E. A., and Mr. Pettijohn addressed the meeting of the Indiana directors and outlined to them the work already accomplished by the association.

Select Pictures Run Full Week in Atlanta

Criterion Theatre Gets Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge and Alice Brady Features — New Exchange in St. Louis

THE last week in motion picture circles, for Select pictures, was an unusually eventful, as well as busy one, with indications that there will be no cessation of activities on the part of the company for some time to come. Not the least important occasion of the week was the closing of a contract whereby Select pictures will go into Atlanta, Ga., for a full week's run, an unusual thing in that section. In addition to this announcement, work was begun on the first of Alice Brady's Select pictures, and C. E. Shurtleff, sales manager of Select pictures, went West to open an exchange in St. Louis.

Through the Atlanta representative, Walter Price, the contract was closed with Sig Samuels, proprietor of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, to play the entire list of Select pictures during the coming year. The Criterion theatre is unique among picture houses in this section of the South, in that this theatre puts on feature plays for a solid week's run, and the one picture constitutes the entire program. The Criterion is a new house, situated on Peachtree street in the heart of Atlanta. The week-run feature was instituted by the owners about five months ago and has proved a success.

In the list of attractions which the Criterion gains from its new contract are the Select Series of Star Pictures, including the pictures of Clara Kimball Young and her own company, whose first picture is "Magda"; Norma Talmadge, beginning with her current release, "The Moth"; Constance Talmadge, whose "Scandal" has just been completed, and now a new Select Pictures star, Alice Brady. In addition are numerous single features distributed by Select, among which "The Public Be Damned" is the current release.

Work was begun last week in the Paragon studio at Fort Lee on the first of Alice Brady's Select pictures. The name of this production has been changed from "The Red Mouse" to "Her Silent Sacrifice." The former title was that under which the play by Henry W. J. Dam was produced when it was given its New York presentation. The scenario of "Her Silent Sacrifice" was prepared from this material by Eve Unsell. In the cast which is being selected to support Miss Brady are Robert Payson Gibbs, Henry Clive, Blanch Craig and Edmund Pardo. The production is being directed by Edward Jose.

C. E. Shurtleff, sales manager of Select Pictures, left New York last week on a trip of several days, the main object of which will be to open a Select exchange in St. Louis. This new branch is in addition to the eighteen Select exchanges now operating in the United States. The St. Louis exchange will be placed in charge of Edward W. Dustin, formerly of the Pathe organization and until recently the Triangle branch manager in St. Louis.

On the same train leaving New York and accompanying Mr. Shurtleff was A. H. Derham, comptroller for Select. Mr. Derham paid a short visit in St. Louis and then proceeded to Des Moines. In Des Moines and Kansas City the Select Pictures Corporation is taking over the former Selznick exchanges operated for Lewis J. Selznick Productions, Inc. A. H. Blank, the Middle West operator, has had direction of these exchanges in Kansas City and Des Moines. In the latter place Mr. Derham will conduct an auditing of accounts preparatory to the transfer of this branch to Select Pictures, which transfer will be made under Mr. Shurtleff's supervision.

Doubt Among Exhibitors Concerning Music Tax

Charles Pettijohn Makes Statement in Which He Shows Clear Way to Straighten Difficulty—Would Banish Misunderstanding

CHARLES PETTIJOHN, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, in commenting upon the music tax question last week, said: "There seems to be considerable doubt among exhibitors over the music tax question. The facts of the case as it stands today are more or less befuddled through misunderstanding among the exhibitors as to the rights of the publishers to demand a tax. The Supreme Court of the United States has rendered a decision in favor of the owners of copyright music enabling them to charge a license fee for the privilege of playing their music. Under the law they are in the right, but it is possible to reach an amicable arrangement with the publishers, I believe, whereby the exhibitors who wish to play their music will not suffer.

"The American Exhibitors' Association in several conferences held with gentlemen representing the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has been making an effort to convince these gentlemen that their schedule of licenses as applying to motion picture houses is impractical and too high in price. In these conferences we are trying to do something for the motion picture exhibitor who wants to play music controlled by this society, a license for which must be procured.

"The motion picture exhibitor who does not care to use this music, and who would conduct his program without playing music coming within this class, can avoid the license by not using this music. The various trade papers have been, and, I understand, will continue to furnish information as to the companies and their music the use of which does not require this license.

"To sum the whole proposition up so there will be no further misunderstanding, we will endeavor, first, to obtain what concessions we can for those exhibitors who desire to use music upon which a royalty must be paid, and, second, to furnish as much information as possible to the exhibitors who do not care to use this music, letting them know just what music can be played without paying a license."

Edward H. Griffith Becomes War Deputy

The latest individual in the motion picture industry to cast aside the mantle of business to enter his country's service is Edward H. Griffith, the director. He has left his work at the Edison Studios to become a representative of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities. It is said he was preparing for the production of a war drama, for which he made the scenario from a story, when notified that his experience as a motion picture producer and newspaperman could be of service to the Commission. Accordingly it was arranged to transfer the production to another director, and Griffith was appointed to the training camp post.

Pathe War Feature Booked by William Fox

The claim that Pathe's new official French war picture, "In the Wake of the Huns," is one of the best box office aids recently released in three reels, has been further borne out by the announcement this week that the feature has been booked by William Fox for his theatres.

In connection with the showing of the picture, M. Ratisbonne, delegate of the Cinematographic of the French army, and who represents his government in the matter, has issued the following statement: "'In the Wake of the Huns' is the title of the official French war picture of which Pathe Exchange, Inc., has been chosen as the American distributor and which they have announced for release September 23. There have been some patched up pictures put out spuriously as official French films and we wish to make it clear that the Pathe picture has the sanction of the French government and was taken by the Cinematographic Division of the French Army."

Maciste Is Very Much Alive, Says Raver

Henry Raver is very emphatic in denying the reported death of Maciste, the herculean player in "Cabiria," which report gained wide circulation last week after being given credence through a statement by a well-known film representative. It was announced that Maciste met death while fighting on the Italian battle front. In a statement this week Mr. Raver gave prominence to the contents of a telegram received from Italy in answer to his message of inquiry sent immediately after the report of Maciste's death was circulated. The telegram read: "Maciste enjoying his usual appetite."

It was Mr. Raver who first introduced Maciste to this country in "Cabiria," after which the giant star was also presented in "The Warrior."

Lesser Returns to the Coast

Sol L. Lesser, following out instructions of his physician that he must take a complete rest for at least thirty days, has returned to his home in San Francisco, having sufficiently recovered from his recent attack of typhoid fever to make the trip to the Coast. It is announced that he expects to return to New York in November.

Exhibitors Offer Operators Ten Per Cent Increase

Conditions and complications caused recently by the letters sent by the Motion Picture Operators to exhibitors who run more than one matinee a week in addition to the evening performance, demanding a wage increase based on the number of hours the operator works, more money for overtime and additional pay for the supper hour, are fast coming to a head, and it is expected the crisis will be reached in a manner that will be satisfactory to both sides.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League united to fight this proposition advanced by the operators, and, to better reach a debatable ground, a committee of nine was appointed to formulate a tentative proposition as a working basis. A special league meeting was held last week to hear what the committee had to offer, which was a flat wage scale of 62½ cents an hour for all theatres in the Cleveland district, with a minimum of four hours' work at each show. The suggestion was approved by the League, and it was resolved to present it to the operators' union.

At the meeting of the operators and exhibitors committees last week it was learned the former intend to demand a weekly wage increase, only of those houses which are notified by them of an increase, and an increase of one dollar for matinees on any day but Sunday. This caused the exhibitors to suggest that a supplementary offer be made to the operators, offering them ten per cent. increase for all houses in the Cleveland district covered by their letter of September 7. The suggestion was approved, and the next step is being awaited.

Crisis Corporation Is Awarded Damages

A precedent in legal circles of the industry was set last week when the Crisis Picture Corporation was awarded damages amounting to $141.15 against the American Express Company, in the Montclair District Court.

According to the complaint, the picture corporation on June 5 delivered to the American Express Company two boxes of film consigned to the Chambers Street theatre in Phillipsburg, N. J. The films were to be shown on June 6 and 7, it was said, and in the meantime the town had been thoroughly billed. There was no show on the dates set, because the films failed to arrive, it was claimed, and no trace of them could be found. Four days later the films were located at Buffalo, according to the complaint. Through the loss of the films, it was claimed, the manager of the theatre in Phillipsburg had to close his house.

Mrs. Dessez Begins Long Tour for Conquest

Mrs. Elizabeth Rickey Dessez, in charge of the community service department of the George Kleine System, left Chicago last week on an extended tour of the country in behalf of Conquest Programs. To Mrs. Dessez falls the function of promoting the interest of both exhibitors and theatre patrons in the Conquest pictures produced by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and released through the George Kleine System.

A Progressive City Wants Progressive Producers

The wide-awake, up-and-coming Chamber of Commerce of Charleston, S. C., wants the ear of progressive producers for a moment. We have no axes to grind for Charleston, but their message is stated in a manly, businesslike way, deserving of thought:

IN LINE WITH OTHER PROGRESSIVE CITIES IN THIS SECTION, CHARLESTON, THRU THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, EXTENDS TO THE MOTION PICTURE PRODUCERS, A WELCOME, OFFERING ALL THE ADVANTAGES, CLIMATIC, SCENIC AND OTHERWISE, TO BE HAD IN THE SOUTH, AND MORE THAN OTHER PLACES IN THE WAY OF LOCATIONS, HISTORICAL, MILITARY AND NAVAL.

A SPECIAL DEPARTMENT IN CHARGE OF AN EXPERIENCED MOTION PICTURE MAN HAS BEEN ORGANIZED BY THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE TO WAIT ON AND BE OF MATERIAL ASSISTANCE TO PRODUCERS WHILE THEY ARE WORKING IN THIS TERRITORY, AND INVITES CORRESPONDENCE WITH SUCH PRODUCERS AS CONTEMPLATE COMING SOUTH THIS SEASON. WE CAN ASSURE THEM OF A PLEASANT AND PROFITABLE STAY IN CHARLESTON.

National Board Shatters Delinquency Idea

Results of Investigations Show Industry Is Burdened by Discrediting Responsibility — Facts Vindicate Pictures

THAT the idea that much juvenile delinquency is traceable to motion pictures is erroneous has been practically proven by an investigating committee detailed to gather the facts by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. All accounts coming to the knowledge of this Board, concerning criminal action on the part of youngsters, have been thoroughly looked into, with the result that the following announcement has been made by H. F. Sherwood, assistant secretary of the Board:

"Two or three weeks ago the city press published a story of a Brooklyn boy who nearly hung himself while, it was stated, he was imitating a scene in the movies. Morris, twelve years of age, according to the accounts, in company with other boys, was re-enacting a film scene on the roof of a tenement house. He volunteered to be the "traitor." A gallows was erected on the roof, and so placed that the guilty person should hang over the edge. The facts as reported by the investigator of the National Board of Review were as follows: Morris said there were no boys on the roof except himself, and that he was playing with a rope. He placed the rope around his neck as he had seen it done in the picture, so that it would not fall to the backyard. In doing this, the other end of the rope caught around the chimney. He tripped, and knew nothing more until he regained consciousness in the hospital. The boys reported to be with him were interviewed and said they were elsewhere. One of them, however, who was on the fire-escape of the next house saw the accident, and screamed. Their statements were corroborated.

"It is to be noted from this report that the boy did not see any one actually hanged in a motion picture. As a matter of fact, it is doubtful if any motion picture company would attempt to show a film of a man in the act of being hung. It certainly would be eliminated by the National Board of Review.

"Sometimes investigation reveals that there was no foundation for the account whatsoever. This was true, for instance, of a case reported in a Kansas City paper. In the course of a half-column story, it was stated that a certain fifteen-year-old boy, after watching gentlemen burglars in the movies, had perpetrated at least thirty robberies. He was said to have made such a confession to the police. Inquiry of the appropriate city officials of Kansas City resulted in the statement that the boy had a record of crime before he was arrested for the robberies which were the basis of the article; that he had escaped from the detention home where he was awaiting trial; and that the detective who arrested the lad said that he could not recall any conversation that the boy had had with any person in which his career in crime was attributed to suggestion from motion picture films. This officer added that he felt that the reporter was responsible for the statement.

"This corroborates the results of other investigations which tend to show that many of the cases in which the films are blamed are those of youngsters who either already have a record of delinquency, or are mentally defective. Last year certain Wisconsin papers published stories regarding boys 'jailed as a result of lurid films inspiration.' The lads twelve years of age, when arrested for seven incendiary fires, had testified that they 'saw it in the movies.' Investigation revealed that one of the boys had been declared a mental defective."

Assistant Secretary Sherwood has also cited other cases that were reported in which motion pictures were blamed, and each of these were found to be greatly exaggerated or untrue. Concluding his statement, Mr. Sherwood said: "It might as well be held that circuses are to blame for the broken arms and legs of small boys, and the league baseball games are responsible for the cracked heads and bruised fingers of youthful baseball enthusiasts. The motion picture has been much maligned by those who credit it with being the chief motive for juvenile delinquency. The National Board of Review seeks to eliminate from motion pictures anything which, if imitated, would be a basis for crime."

It Might Pay Some Live Exhibitor Looking for a Place to Invest to Examine This Prospect

This is an extract from a letter received last week:

"IT DOESN'T DO MUCH GOOD TO WISH FOR THINGS, BUT ONE OF MY MOTION PICTURE THEATRE WISHES WOULD BE A NICE ONE IN OUR TOWN. THE PICTURE USED IN THE SIMPLEX ADVERTISEMENT LAST WEEK SHOWS A BEAUTIFUL INTERIOR. ONE IN OUR TOWN ONE FIFTH AS BEAUTIFUL — AND HOW HAPPY A BUNCH OF 'US FANS' WOULD BE!

"CHAS. E. CASTELL,
"MURRAY, OHIO."

Thomas Holding to Play Leads for Petrova

Thomas Holding, who was recently engaged by Madame Olga Petrova for the part of the Crown Prince of Belmark in the first of the eight pictures to be made by the Petrova Picture Company this year, has signed a contract with the star whereby he becomes her leading man for the next four pictures. A clause in the agreement gives her an option on his services for further pictures. It is announced that the first picture in which Mr. Holding will appear with the Polish star was completed this week and will be released about October 22.

Brenon Under Knife—Studio Work Stops

Herbert Brenon was operated on for appendicitis by Dr. John F. Erdmann a few days ago, and is progressing favorably.

Mr. Brenon has been in excellent health until lately when it is said, that strain and overwork in producing his latest photo-drama, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," now running at the Broadway theatre, aggravated the attack.

At the Post Graduate hospital he is under the care of Dr. Erdmann and two trained nurses. He has been obliged to cancel all work at his studio on Hudson Heights where Rupert Hughes' "Empty Pockets" is in course of production.

Mr. Brenon is one of the foremost figures in the motion picture industry. As a producer and director he stands in the first rank, and he is responsible for such successes as "Neptune's Daughter," "The Daughter of the Gods," "War Brides," "The Lone Wolf," and "The Fall of the Romanoffs," his latest triumph.

Norma Talmadge Finishes New Feature

Norma Talmadge is taking a few days' rest away from the studio, following the completion of the final scenes of "The Secret of the Storm Country," by Grace Miller White. Within a few days Miss Talmadge expects to begin work on her next production.

This latest Talmadge feature will be released following "The Moth." It is a sequel to "Tess of the Storm Country," by the same author, which has also been presented on the screen. Most of the scenes for the "Secret of the Storm Country" were made in Ithaca, where Miss Talmadge and her entire company spent two or three weeks among the scenes where the original scenes of the story were laid.

Managing Editor of News Weds Ex-Governor Glynn's Niece

Robert Emmett Welsh, managing editor of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, was married on Thursday morning of last week to Miss Cecelia Hickey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Hickey, Valatie, N. Y., suburb of Albany. The ceremony was performed at the Catholic Church, Valatie, the home of the bride. The attendants were Miss Jane Cusack, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and Joseph L. Kelley, New York. After the ceremony, a wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride, and Mr. and Mrs. Welsh left for Atlantic City where they will spend their honeymoon. They will be at home, Elmhurst, L. I., after October 15.

The bride is a niece of Ex-Governor Martin H. Glynn, of New York. She was graduated from Mount St. Vincent's Seminary, Poughkeepsie, and is an accomplished vocalist. Mr. Welsh is a well-known newspaper man and for the past five years has been engaged in publicity and editorial work in the motion picture business. About a year ago, Mr. Welsh became managing editor of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Today he is one of the best known and most popular editors of the motion picture trade paper field.

EXHIBITOR SERVICE BUREAU

A department devoted to the problems of every theatre manager

Make the Serial Star Aid You

Mutual Tells the Exhibitor to Capitalize on Popularity of Helen Holmes — Use of Photographs

MUTUAL is one of the veteran producers of serials and one of the most successful. Its current continued story is Helen Holmes in "The Lost Express," which is being released in fifteen chapters. This is the way that Mutual explains its serial policy: "The one thing that counts in every motion picture production is the money at the box-office window." Mutual's conclusion as to the best way to produce that result is "to render service to the exhibitor."

Mutual conducts no extensive newspaper advertising campaigns, although in connection with "The Lost Express" it has issued a special co-operative plan of advertising in which the exhibitor takes part. Mutual opposes the general advertising campaigns as "shooting in the dark."

In the first place Mutual calls especial attention to the popularity of the star, for Helen Holmes is appearing in the serials which Mutual is putting out now. These are made by the Signal Film Corporation and the pictures are directed by the star's husband, J. P. MacGowan. Railroad adventures are used for these stories, taking advantage of the wonderful popularity that Miss Holmes won while she was appearing in "The Hazards of Helen," probably the most popular short reel subjects ever issued.

Every bit of the advertising, window display, billboards, etc., carries the name of Miss Holmes very prominently. Mutual urges that exhibitors feature pictures of the star everywhere possible, in the newspapers, house programs, and with every announcement made.

Mutual's sales force is working with the exhibitors who book "The Lost Express" by carrying suggestions from one exhibitor to another, aiding in the application of the various ideas which have proved successful in exploiting Helen Holmes pictures. Through the Home Office Bulletin the salesmen are kept informed on the various ideas that are worked out in other territories, each salesman and branch manager thus becoming a purveyor of exploitation ideas for his territory.

This is especially strong if the service men impress upon the exhibitor the manner in which to deal with his particular patronage. We have already discussed in connection with other serials the methods of keeping up interest. In some respects we took the cart before the horse.

Mutual's road forces are urged to impress on the exhibitor the necessity of starting the chaptered story off with a bang. Exhibitors are advised to do their local advertising for at least two weeks in advance of the opening of the first episode. With that in view Mutual offers the showmen free twenty-four sheet posters on "The Lost Express."

We believe that the exploitation of the star herself is the strongest card to use where a player is so well known in connection with serials as is Miss Holmes. Especially if you have played before serials in which she has appeared. Here the showman has a chance for a series of cards to be mailed to his patrons. He would suggest sending out one of regulation postal-card size, simply saying "Helen Holmes is Coming Again." Simply add the name of the theatre. This should be followed up by other "teaser" ideas; feature the title and her hunt for the lost train. A series of five postal cards, printed and addressed will cost you a very small amount, probably a total of seven cents a patron, remarkably cheap for getting a crowded house for the opening episode.

Here is a warning in connection with the first performance of a serial. Stop this thing of "papering" your house—of giving free admission to practically everyone who wants to come. In the first place there is no better way of cheapening a serial in the minds of your patrons than to admit them free to the first episode.

It would be far better to spend this ten cents that you would get for admission in souvenirs or in advance advertising. There isn't a bit of sense in going to expense to advertise a serial, work up the interest of the public and then practically announce that you are going to let everyone see the first chapter without paying admission. Of course such announcements are rarely made openly, but scores of theatres distribute these hundreds of passes. A lot of them think that they are getting away with it, but they are not. The motion picture fan is in a class by himself. He seems to be able to accumulate information in very mysterious ways. There seems to be a special "little bird" flitting around to tell him everything.

There is no surer way to disgust your paid patron than to have him find that his neighbors all around him haven't paid a dime to enter the house. And especially is this true of neighborhood theatres and small city houses where the serial does its heaviest business.

Figure it out for yourself. Suppose you count on playing to a thousand people on the first episode at ten cents admission. Don't you think it would be a great deal better to charge admission and spend the hundred in exploitation?

We think it would be much better business method to double the amount and spend a couple of hundred.

Instead of discouraging your audiences by letting them know that you are trying in inveigle them into your theatre, you are spending your money to convince them that you are going to show something that they cannot afford to miss. And while the patron who is admitted free may come back to the second episode as a paid patron, again, he may not. The chances are a great deal greater that if he has come to see the first episode because he is convinced that it is worth seeing, that he is a great deal more apt to be a constant attendant during the life of the story.

We don't believe for a moment in "bunk" advertising, or in exaggeration. But the free policy is as bad.

Try this idea as one advance method of creating interest in the serial. (We are not discussing general exploitation ideas for advance use here, because we have taken them up in previous articles of this series.) Mutual is furnishing a special cut of Helen Holmes for use as a program cover. Get your printer to use a heavy plate paper on this cover and you will be able to get an almost photographic effect. If your theatre is in a small town, even go to the trouble of sending to the "city" to get this printed. Either have the Mutual furnish you an interesting story of the career of the star, or write to the Exhibitors Service Bureau and we will supply it for you, and devote two inside pages of your program to this. If you are not issuing a program regularly, have a special little booklet gotten up. Then advertise on your screen the fact that you are going to give this booklet to all who will ask for it. Don't try to devote too much of this booklet to telling about "The Lost Express" itself. Remember, here you are trying to capitalize the popularity of the star and excite interest in her and you have ample material to work on.

This plan can be worked with any of the better known serial stars.

We are great believers in the actual photograph idea. Especially if you ever had any experience in conducting the photoplay department of a big newspaper or working on a trade publication, you would be struck by the desire of the fans for photographs of the players. You would find that bunches of your friends were imploring you to get these pictures for them. You can do that for your patrons at a reasonable expense, for any of the companies will supply you with these at cost. All the better if you can get pictures showing the star in the role in which she appears in the particular serial.

Were we conducting the exploitation of serials we would use this photographic plan with every serial. Here is a way that it can be used to insure attendance at at least the first two episodes. In the first place advertise your plan through your various meth-

How Mutual Plays on Helen Holmes' Popularity With the Fans

In featuring "The Lost Express," Mutual advises the exhibitors to use a lot of paper and offers to furnish the twenty-four sheets free to those who will post them. Note that the name of the star is featured above the name of the story. Below at the left is a cut for program cover and at the right how two theatres feature the name of Miss Holmes.

Views of the Two Sides of Kashin's Lobby Display, the City Theatre. Depth of the Corridor Made it Impossible to Photograph the Whole Effect in a Single Picture

Kashin, Famed for Lobby Displays Shows His First Work in Manhattan

M. Kashin, Who is "Showing" New York with His Lobby Displays

KASHIN has come to New York.

Men who have followed the recent developments of the industry carefully and thinking readers of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS will understand.

In the spring of 1916 M. Kashin, an advertising man, took hold of the Midway theatre in Montreal, a theatre that was having a rocky road because of poor business conditions. But to the situation he brought brains, ideas. He centered on his lobby displays. Readers of the NEWS are familiar with his work there through the numerous illustrated articles printed in these columns.

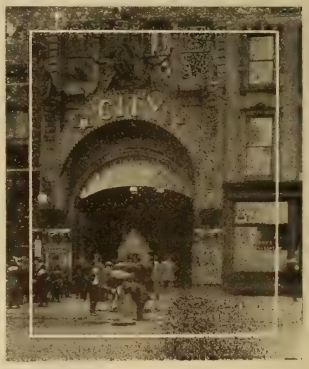
His splendid work attracted the attention of the whole industry, and especially that of William Fox who finally induced Mr. Kashin to come to New York and take hold of the lobby displays of several of his metropolitan theatres. For several weeks Mr. Kashin has been directing the lobby displays at the Comedy theatre, in the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn, a community of largely foreign population. He came to Manhattan with his initial display at Fox's City theatre, Fourteenth street, near Broadway.

And the display made New York sit up and take notice. Mr. Kashin brought something that New York had never seen before and the display on a single picture showed by box office receipts that lobby displays, properly conceived and executed along definite lines are big money getters. Fourteenth street was literally jammed with people; word of mouth advertising brought people from all parts of the city to see the novelty. And the novelty has come to stay.

Lobby display has long been a more or less legendary thing. It has consisted mainly in hanging up a lot of posters haphazardly, massing a bunch of lithographs with little idea for the effect and certainly without the intention of carrying out any specific idea. Mr. Kashin, as those who observe the displays at the City theatre will find, picks out one idea from the feature picture and advertises it. He gets the theme of the picture—the spirit of it.

New York exhibitors read about the work of Mr. Kashin in Montreal but most of them concluded that "it wouldn't work." But it has.

At the City theatre Mr. Kashin had a difficult task because the lobby is narrow and deep. It is one of the most artistic in the city and as one faces the ornamentation one wonders why its artistic appeal should be sacrificed to the human appeal that the Kashin displays make. But the artistic lobby makes the same appeal all the time; the Kashin idea makes a striking appeal on each particular picture.



Front of City Theatre During Kashin Display

"The Haunted House," a Triangle picture, was the first attraction which was used for a display. Mr. Kashin's task was to change the sameness of the lobby to an appealing ballyhoo that would not offend the most critical patron of this high-class theatre. Care was taken to see that every detail suggested realism and that the spectator should forget the "built" effect.

A replica of an old residence was constructed in the lobby, with strange shadow figures appearing at every window and colored flashes producing an eerie effect. This was accomplished by using an ordinary "Flasher." The box-office itself was part of the old building. All around the lobby, as far as the eye ranged, showing even the roof of the house, the age-worn walls suggested a mystery, which was further brought home by the legends printed on the curious old bulletin boards which were worker in to appear a natural part of the whole effect. Even the old cracked door was numbered "13."

A startling effect was attained, yet everything was in perfect harmony. It commanded the immediate attention of the

Taking a Tip from Wise Men

WE clip an advertisement from the daily papers. Its keynote is "In the Grasp of Today."

It's a railroad advertisement, but it's one that ought to make every motion-picture exhibitor think.

This railroad is spending lots of money in the daily papers telling the public that it is up to the opportunity of the moment. The Pullman company, once cursed as the most selfish of trusts, is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars in telling of the evolution of the sleeping car.

Here are two corporations that are not only doing things, but keep impressing the public that they are doing things.

"The industry is still in its infancy." How long have we been hearing this expression as applied to the motion picture? It's time to forget that infancy stuff. The trouble with so many of the showmen of the country is that they are treating their business as they would treat a child—with a whole lot of pampering and goo-goo nonsense.

The prophecy of long ago has been crystalized into fact; the future has become today and the motion picture industry is here as an enormous vital thing requiring your very best thought and your most serious work. The motion picture industry has already evolved, but have you?

Aren't you following the same lines of management that you followed five or ten years ago? In other words, have you grown up with the industry?

Every day is giving you more opportunity to get in with the leaders. The EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU is one of these opportunities, and you're most welcome here.

Up Go the Prices

IT is inevitable that the admission price of picture theatres must increase. It is needless to point out the increase in the cost of manufacturing, in the price of everything that goes into pictures. Rents are higher and it is costing you more to exhibit your pictures.

But you needn't expect to be able to automatically raise your price, if you follow the same once-trodden paths of yesterday.

The public is willing to pay more for better pictures, better exhibited, more intelligently exploited.

The manufacturers are giving you better pictures. But are you showing them in the same old way, following the same old idea that the patrons ought to come to your theatre while you are really doing nothing more to make them come than you did before?

Were it possible for the producers to increase the quality of their pictures two hundred per cent over night, you would not get a cent more out of them if you followed yesterday's methods.

It's a mighty good thing to let TODAY get hold of you. When you get in Today's grasp you may find that the newcomer is going to shake you up a bit, jar your self-confidence and get you to thinking how you can battle along with to-day on even terms.

You have got to get out and do things if you expect to keep up.

Every portion of the industry is progressing, every ROW.

portion except those showmen who are willing to sit back and say that they made money in 1912 by doing this and that and then continue to follow the methods of BURIED TIME.

We know one showman who controls a bunch of theatres. He had been one of the first exhibitors in the city. His name came to be one of the big ones in the industry. If it were mentioned here everyone who has been connected with exhibition for the past eight or ten years would know him. He was successful at the start, built his lone house into a chain of them and for a time practically controlled the city.

The Three Ingredients

BUT others entered the field with theatres of equal or a little better class, but they put thought behind their enterprise, service into their method and intelligence into their exploitation.

Directly the business of the original gentleman began to decline while the newer houses succeeded. This exhibitor declared that the other fellows couldn't last. He took a half hour to show the writer to a mathematical certainty that they couldn't afford to spend the money they were spending.

In the first place they had orchestras. They used quarter pages of advertising instead of an inch. They put efficiency into their houses, even if it did cost something.

Then became a gradual awakening. At first, the original exhibitor couldn't see why the other fellows progressed. He reasoned that he was the first on the ground, that he was giving better pictures than he used to give (but ONLY because the producers had raised the quality of their product), and that he had much finer houses. And he couldn't see why he didn't make money as he used to make it.

The logical ending to this story might have been the bankruptcy court. But it wasn't. The exhibitor got a sudden jolt. He woke up. He's in the procession with the rest of them now, but he had to take a bitter dose and follow the methods of his rivals. He did more. He bettered them.

Last week we commented on the attitude of showmen who "read with interest" stories about what others were doing to better themselves, pronounced the idea very fine and all that, but simply concluded that they couldn't do it.

We are here to show you how you can use all of these progressive suggestions in a more or less modified scale. You can get the benefit out of every good thing that any exhibitor does anywhere. You cannot reproduce the Rialto orchestra in a theatre in a small town that has a seating capacity of 300, but there are a whole lot of Mr. Rothapfel's ideas that you can use—you can get a lot of stimulus—THE GASOLINE OF THE PICTURE BUSINESS.

Come out in the open and let us talk about TODAY.

Watch the ideas that others are using and adapt them to yourself.

And you people that are springing ideas, new thought, putting new energy into the business, let us hear from you.

At least jump into TODAY.

BETTER STILL IF YOU CAN LIGHT INTO TOMOR-

Your Idea and Ours

HERE is the best advertisement of the week that has been brought to our attention. It is the work of the Strand theatre, Cleveland, O., and features "The Sin Woman." Note the liberal amount of white space used in this advertisement and the small amount of reading matter. Without any suggestive detail the display attracts the curiosity of the reader with the sketch of Eve, while the black and white effect makes the advertisement stand out beyond all others appearing on the same pages in the Sunday Cleveland papers.

When you want to say something in an advertisement, say it, but don't try to tell your patrons all about the picture all at once.

THIS photograph was sent to us to show what a big business Mary Pickford did in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" during its showing at the Columbia theatre, Dayton, O. The picture was taken on the night of the fourth day of the showing, and Manager C. J. Gross reports that it is the best picture in which the star has ever appeared.

However, this photograph suggests even more than this. Note the way that the manager has arranged his sidewalk electric sign so that it will not interfere with the front appearance of the theatre. The sign, at one side of the theatre, will attract the attention of persons going up and down the street and at the same time the full artistic effect of the front of the house is retained.

Some theatres might be called "the home of comedy—of errors."

PALACE THEATRE, Racine, Wis., believes in doing things on a big scale, and so when Manager Arthur Friedman booked the Paramount, Artcraft, Goldwyn and Metro productions for his house he did not expect the worth of the pictures alone to carry them over, but proceeded to exploit his attractions by page announcements in the newspapers. The one illustrated here is a dignified announcement of the attractions for the season, and one that is bound to make a deep impression upon the public. This advertisement also announces the increase of admission prices from ten to fifteen cents, but Manager Friedman, before reaching that point in his announcement, has made such a convincing statement of the attractions he is going to offer that we predict there will be no loss of revenue in the advance.

When you are doing something big, it pays to do it in a big way.

It is easy to see that the Tourney will immediately have the fullest co-operation of the Red Cross workers in his town, and it is not strange to find that practically every citizen bought one of these course tickets, thus supplying capacity crowds each Friday. The productions shown are named on the ticket illustrated here. Manager C. S. Edwards, Jr., of Pathe's Kansas City Exchange, who brings this to our attention, points out that three of the five pictures that are included are released by Pathe. This idea will go anywhere, no matter the size of the city, and no matter the class of the house. It will make you new patrons, and will stamp you in the minds of the public as an enterprising and patriotic exhibitor.

Take advantage of what is happening today; ancient history will care for itself.

POLI'S theatre, Scranton, Pa., has evolved the idea of mailing out a folder with each attraction. Poli's changes the bill twice a week, featuring moving pictures, but with vaudeville added. The booklet is four pages ten by eleven inches and the opening page is devoted to the current attraction. The second and third pages are occupied with two coming bills. On the back of the folder, as it is ready to mail is the question: "Where Are You Going TONIGHT?" while the address side carries the design reproduced herewith.

IN-attention to your patrons to-day will probably keep a number of them OUT of your theatre tomorrow.

MANAGER H. M. THOMAS, of the Strand theatre, Omaha, tried the novelty of advertising one of his Douglas Fairbanks pictures without using the name of the star. This style of advertising was used only once, but it served to pack the theatre. Even the few who did not know the player made it a point to pass by the theatre and solve the riddle, and a considerable percentage of these bought tickets.

This sort of "stunt" advertising is all right once in a while, but it is a question whether a logically written display would not have brought even more new patrons into the theatre.

If you worry more about your patrons and less about your competitors you're likely to find your rival left too far behind to even think about.

HERE is one of the best advertisements submitted during the week. In showing the Vitagraph feature, "Womanhood," the Rialto theatre, Columbia, S. C., used whole pages for advertising space and achieved excellent results without any special designs, merely using the matter furnished him by the exchange and having the compositor set this in attractive style. In the display space he used as few words as possible, attracting the direct attention to the name of the picture and to his theatre, and then to the prices. The reproduction of "news" matter has been so arranged as not to force the reader to go through with it unless he is sufficiently interested in the pictures. The cuts are stock cuts furnished him by his exchange.

"JUST RIGHT SORT OF MATERIAL" FOUND IN SERVICE SECTION

John P. McConville, publicity and service manager of the Famous Players Film Company of New England, writes:

"Permit me to take occasion to compliment you on the general excellence of the new department you have established known as 'Exhibitors' Service Bureau.'

"Carefully and capably edited and full of just the right sort of material that should be of practical help to exhibitors, particularly in solving their advertising probems, it is a concrete example of really valuable co-operative service; something which will surely be appreciated by theatre managers everywhere."

Here is a splendid example of maintaining simplicity in lobby display and getting the punch over. This was used by the Strand theatre, Denver, during the showing of the Mutual production, "Reputation." Note the emphasis given the name of the production in the larger letters and the repetition of it through the lobby. Note the striking manner in which the three-sheet of Edna Goodrich was used, especially the cut-out over the ticket office.

Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel

SEEING "a moving picture show" is one thing; seeing the Rialto show is quite another, and seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel brings one in the closest possible focus with the perfection that may be wrought by the exhibitor.

We found Mr. Rothapfel in the place where he always stands when he sees the performance through for the first time on Sunday afternoon. Nervous, watchful, as he stands there with two of his staff, he seems to see everything that goes on all over the house. At one moment he ordered a note taken with a slight change in the lighting effect on the stage, and an instant later was sending an usher after some one who was about to open one of the emergency exit doors at the side of the house.

He has spent the past week "thinking" this performance. He has spent nights inspecting pictures, he has seen fifteen or twenty reels from which to select the Rialto Animated Weekly, he has used hours arranging the musical score, the lighting effects, every little detail. It is expected that he would be "on his nerves" at the first public exhibition. Mr. Rothapfel is his own sternest critic and he is equally insistent that his assistants shall carry their work out to the finest point.

At one moment one of the soloists came from out the parted curtains just a bar of music too soon, although Mr. Rothapfel had just sent word to the stage manager how it should be arranged. Quick as a flash he caught the error and sent one of his aides to inquire why his directions were not followed. We'll bet it didn't occur again. Possibly no one in the audience noticed it, and the average exhibitor will say that a little slip like that doesn't matter. They think that the director of the Rialto is "too fussy" about these little things. It's the little things that make the successful theatre.

Rothapfel is the personification of interest in his patrons. If the exhibitors who read these Reviews of the Rialto with Rothapfel will get a little of this interest out of them they will have taken a step forward in their business.

The bill at the Rialto for the week beginning September 30 is as near perfection as can be reached in picture presentation. In the first place the orchestra has been permanently increased to fifty pieces and under the direction of Dr. Riesenfeld the effect is even more striking than before. There is greater flexibility, the tone variation power is increased, even though this is slight when one remembers the brilliant interpretations of the past.

Douglas Fairbanks in "The Man from Painted Post" is to feature. It will not be the purpose of this department to review the feature picture, this appearing as usual under the heading of "Screen Examinations." Mr. Rothapfel has achieved another novelty in the announcement and closing of the feature through animated cartoon effects, showing two boys opening and closing the doors. The music theme is excellent, with "My Maryland" brought in with an "old home" touch.

"Roumanian Rhapsody in A" is the splendid opening overture that held the capacity audience without a whisper and the big orchestra with its wonderful string melody literally sang the delight into the hearers. Selections from "The Pink Lady" was the other orchestra number. Both of the soloists this week sing in English, Greek Evans, baritone, rendering "I Want What I Want," and Florence Enneking, soprano, "At Dawning." In connection with this song Mr. Rothapfel achieved another of his artistic effects with a waterfall, and the dawning effect carried out with the marvellously mobile lighting system of the Rialto.

Special music was arranged by Mr. Rothapfel for the Rialto Animated Magazine. This is considerably longer this week than usual. Mr. Rothapfel finds that the interest in these features is growing, and he spends hours in going over all the weeklies and culling the most interesting features. In addition to this he himself went to West Point, Saturday, and took pictures of the visit of the Japanese commission and the review of the cadets. It was a "scoop" on the world. With the martial music it gave a thrill to the audience that brought a constant roar of applause.

One of the cleverest and timeliest bits was the presentation of a few feet of film showing Guynemer, the famous French aviator, who was recently lost. Every light in the theatre went out and as the soft organ music accompanied the picture the audience paid a most striking tribute to the lost birdman.

Another patriotic thrill came with the showing of Escoba winning the Futurity and the announcement that the owner, now serving in France, had given the winnings to the Red Cross. Rothapfel puts over these pictures of patriotism with a punch. The music has a great deal to do with it; the selection more.

Do you know that two weeks ago when films showing Americai troops parading in London before King George that the audience actually stood up to the playing of —the "Star Spangled Banner?"—no—of "God Save the King." That is some picture and music presentation power.

"The Development of the Watch" was another one of the highly interesting features of the magazine, and an especially strong effect was given when at the end, under the heading of "German Watches" was shown one which, closed, represented a death head. The audience immediately "got it" with a roar.

Launching of a cargo ship at Ashtabula, O.; Washington society girls and their mascot they sent to Pershing; Lifting the Quebec bridge; Human Caterpillar at San Francisco; scenes in Cashmere, India; Inter-class scrap at Case School, and the Jap commission at City Hall.

"Seals and Pelicans," made by Educational Films, is one of the most remarkable animal studies that have been shown in a long time.

The presentation is rounded out with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in "The Joy of Freedom," a clever little sketch. "I like the Drew comedies because they are so human," said Mr. Rothapfel. "They get right into the home."

And for an hour after this review of the performance the writer discussed with Mr. Rothapfel means whereby exhibitors all over the country can profit from the exhibition that he is given—even to the house with two hundred seats. We are going to discuss some of them here from week to week.

If every exhibitor in the country could "See the Rialto with Rothapfel" there would be a revolution in motion pictures. They cannot, so we are going to bring you as close to this wonderful man of ideas and accomplishments here each week.

Deception to Draw Money for the Moment Poor Business Policy for Exhibitors

This is the third of a series of articles by W. A. Bach, who is touring the Universal film exchanges in principal cities inaugurating service bureaus. After visiting Chicago Mr. Bach is now in Detroit.

I've noticed a little trick resorted to in Chicago and also in Detroit, that to some exhibitors may spell "showmanship," but to the thinking, far-sighted man would indicate a business suicide.

In Chicago, one house in the Loop is situated opposite a new house of somewhat larger dimensions than the former theatre. The new house is using new film of early run and is advertising heavily.

The smaller house eagerly watches the bookings of its bigger neighbor, and as soon as the advertising appears, indicating that Chaplin, Hart, Pickford, or whoever it may be, will be shown in their latest film play, the smaller house gets busy.

Within a short time on the smaller theatre, a big flaring sign will appear as follows for fictitous example:

CHARLES CHAPLIN,
star of
"THE IMMIGRANT,"
will appear in
"The Champion."

The big house will be showing "The Immigrant," and the little house an old release by the same man.

Of course, the argument is that the advertising is quite truthful, and it is up to the patron, but unfortunately as the greatest showman of them all said: "You can't fool all the people all the time," there is bound to come a day of reckoning.

And the fact that the above trick was mentioned to me by no less than five people, who patronize movies very liberally, show that this man's payment is almost due.

J. Maurice Ridge, Publicity Director, Famous Players, Cincinnati

Publicity Man Gives Special Aid to "Little Fellow"

J. Maurice Ridge is doing excellent work as the publicity manager for Famous Players Film Service in the Cincinnati territory. Mr. Ridge brought to the film industry long experience in the newspaper game, so essential to success in the publicity field. At the time of entering the industry he was the political editor of one of the Cincinnati newspapers and his familiarity with conditions and understanding of the field enabled him to get prompt results.

During the past two years the Cincinnati office has helped a great many of the exhibitors of that territory to keep their heads above the water. A special effort is being made to assist those managers who have had no experience as showmen but who have gone into the business from various walks of life. Mr. Ridge makes an effort to get into personal touch with these men and solve their individual problems. The office realizes that the "little fellows" are really the ones in the greatest need of advice.

12-Page Newspaper Starts Newark Theatre Opening

One of the largest special editions of a newspaper ever issued in connection with the opening of a playhouse, was that of the Newark Star Eagle of September 22, marking the first showing of pictures at the Newark theatre.

The Newark theatre section included twelve solid pages, every line of the reading matter and every inch of the advertising referring to the house. There is a full description of the theatre, sketches of the men responsible for its erection, the Spiegel Brothers, sketches of J. B. McNally, the manager, and of the heads of the various departments.

Many of those who had part in constructing the house and equipping it are represented in the advertising.

Is This Your Theatre?

In this column the Exhibitors' Service Bureau will print comment from week to week on theatres actually visited; pointing out faults found and commendable features. The name of the theatre will not be mentioned, but if it applies to you and you want improvement, write to this department.

Theatre C is located in a mining town with a possible appeal to about 8,000 persons within a radius of three miles—really a group of some five or six villages. With the exception of an airdome, operated only in summer and under the same ownership, this is the only theatre in this territory.

This theatre is well located, on one of the two principal streets, a few doors from the other main street. The building itself is well constructed, specially built for picture purposes and could be made very attractive in appearance. However, posters are pasted haphazardly all over the front of the house, covering not only the pictures he was then showing, but others days in advance.

The house is some forty feet in width and has a lobby about four feet in depth. This was filled with one sheets, pasted on boards which not only were unattractive, but which actually interfered with a person reaching the ticket booth. The young lady who was selling tickets was very attractive and seemed to have fully grasped her duties. She was courteous and wide awake. But there the service of the house ended.

A popularity contest was then in progress. At the entrance there were five young girls, all pleading for the checks as votes. It would probably be all right for the patron to be asked for his check by some one he knew, but in the case of a stranger and especially where one is set upon by a half dozen charming little girls it is embarrassing to say the least. In addition to these there was one usher, in his shirt sleeves, and three other boys. It was impossible to tell which one was the usher. The house was comparatively empty at the time, but this usher made no attempt to find what location the patron desired, but proceeded to lead him as far as possible down the aisle, that is, if the patron would follow. We ducked into one of the back seats and got much amusement watching others do the same thing. In each instance the usher would majestically stroll down to the front of the house and then turn around to find that he was all alone.

Some ushers insist upon filling the front of the house first and never think of asking patrons where they wish to sit. And the service idea might be carried still further if the usher would remember the sort of seats that the regular patrons like. It is not a great tax on the brain.

We say that we ducked into a seat. But we didn't stay there, for we found the said seat so sadly out of repair that it threatened to hurl us to the floor. We tried another one, a row or two away—with the same result. The manager of this theatre probably never sat through a performance himself and so he didn't know anything about the condition of his seats.

The interior of the house was neatly and simply decorated, the lighting was good, the clock placed far enough away from the screen to prevent annoyance, and the general arrangement good—EXCEPT

At the right of the screen there was a door presumably leading into the manager's private office, and four times during the showing of a five-reel feature the door was opened, letting a flood of daylight on to the screen.

The impression given of the projection was that it was run by a small boy. The feature film broke six times in the five reels, and during the intermission there were sounds of considerable converse from the operating room, and now and then an exclamation that would not look well in print.

In the row immediately in front of where we finally sat, after finding a seat that didn't "bend over," were three children, all of whom stood up in their seats while their mothers and the lone usher ignored the rights of those who sat behind. The usher was only concerned in "getting 'em in" and apparently getting them in as far as possible.

There was a "tin pan" automatic piano of the sort that plays a certain number of tunes and then plays the list over again. At one point, where the mother of the heroine was dying and leaving the charge to the daughter to live a pure life, the automatic played "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary."

This theatre was located in a town where there is no daily newspaper, where the only organ is a weekly "county" paper in which the theatre does not advertise. Yet there was not a slide on the screen to tell of any of the coming attractions, though we were advised where we could get the best ice cream and a few other things. The manager seemed content to let the front of the house, with its here and there posters, inform the public about what was coming.

And our party had come seventeen miles in an automobile to attend the show. But we came only to see "a movie show," for we hadn't the slightest way of knowing in advance what we were going to see.

Is this your theatre?

Ready Made Ad-Talks

"The Painted Doll," Russian-Made Picture Tragedy Enacted by Cast of Great Talent

(Pathe Six-Reel Production)

"The Painted Doll" is of special interest to patrons of the ——— theatre, as it is the first of a newly acquired set of Russian pictures which the Pathe Company is now presenting. These pictures were made by the Russian Art Film Company in Moscow, Russia, and in many respects offer a striking contrast to our own domestic made pictures. The members of the casts have been trained since childhood in the artifices of the stage. Only those of special talent and ability survive the rigid tests imposed by the Russian teachers and as a consequence patrons of the Royal theatres of Russia have long enjoyed the best in acting offered on the stage. The principal players of "The Painted Doll," Ivan Mozakin, Mme. Lesinko, Tanya Fetner and P. F. Sharoff, have all been recruited from the stage and of course have had the benefit of this rigid schooling. Russian authors never believe in soft soaping the truth. And so their stories are worked out logically, often, as in this case, to a tragic ending. "The Painted Doll" tells a strong story of a woman who took the easiest way, who lived in a world of falseness and deceit and who awoke too late to the fact that she was nothing more than a pupet of the man she believed loved her. It is ably performed by the above mentioned players and will be shown to patrons of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Vivian Martin in "Sunset Trail"—Story of How Mother and Daughter Find Happiness

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

The "Sunset Trail" is the picture in which Vivian Martin will be seen next at the ——— theatre. Miss Martin who has been always to advantage in some of the biggest and best productions on the screen is featured in this late one from the Lasasky Studios releasing on the Paramount program. She presents the part of Bess Aiken, who lives in the mountains of California. The settlement is thinly populated and Bess longs for people of her own age with which to associate. Her mother, even though she was young to an elderly man, is also dissatisfied with the lonely life in California. Before her marriage she was one of the brightest stars on the stage and it was her fondest hope to again shine behind the footlights. Vernon Hall, a nephew, Kirke, are camping in the mountains nearby. The love romance that develops from the meeting of Bess and her mother with the campers brings about a great change in the lives of both and both are given the happiness they have wished. Miss Martin is seen in a role that gives her every opportunity to appear at her best before the camera. Gifted with a pleasing personality, Miss Martin has only to act her own natural self, to entertain. She attempts to in her latest picture. The scenario was written by Beulah Marie Dix, who has to her credit some of the best stories ever adapted to the screen. With Miss Martin in the supporting cast are Henry A. Barrows, Harrison Ford, Charles Ogle, Carmen Phillips and Billy Elmer.

Vivian Martin will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "Sunset Trail," the crowning success of Miss Martin's career on the screen.

Age and Youth Appear in This Thanhouser —Frederick Warde and Badgley Kids Star

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

Wholesome sentiment is seldom to be found in pictures of the present age, and for this reason "The Heart of Ezra Greer" should come as a welcome change to patrons of the ——— theatre. Frederick Warde, veteran character actor essays the featured role, and in his support appear two of the cleverest children on the screen, Helen and Gerald Badgley. The contrast between Mr. Warde and the two juveniles, popularly known as the Thanhouser kidlets, is one of the most unusual yet seen on the screen and is responsible for some of the most delightful comedy and deepest pathos imaginable. Lloyd Lonergan, author, has furnished a fine vehicle for the three principals. Mr. Warde is cast as a valet who has slaved all his life to rear his only daughter in comfort. Just at the height of his happiness when he believes her coming home to him after school commencement he receives word that she has run away with a certain young man and that later he has deserted her. This delicate situation is artfully unraveled when the old valet hires himself out to the thoughtless youth and by his wise counsel proves the means of the fellow's making. Sentiment, however, does not play the only part in "The Heart of Ezra Greer" There are scenes of Broadway night life that portray an entirely different sort of action and help considerably to enliven the picture. It will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Margery Wilson Stars in "Wild Sumac" Gripping Story of the Great Northwest

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

A remarkable combination of talent is responsible for the production "Wild Sumac," shortly to be seen at the ——— theatre. Margery Wilson is its star. Ever since her remarkable portrayal of the French girl in D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance" Miss Wilson has been rapidly climbing the ladder to fame. As the girl in "Wild Sumac" charged with a murder of which she is innocent and of which she is exonerated only by the merest possible chance, Miss Wilson plays with an appeal that is truly stirring. Elaine Sterne furnished her with the role. It was Miss Sterne who won the Vitagraph-Sun scenario contest several years ago and by so doing established an enviable reputation for herself throughout the trade. Jack Cunningham prepared the scenario from the story and William V. Mong directed. Mr. Mong is noted for his special ability to stage pictures calling for an atmosphere of the great northwest and "Wild Sumac" will add much to his reputation along this line. The picture is full of the strongest kind of action, the suspense is admirably upheld and the acting from Miss Wilson down through all the other parts, great and small, is of the best. "Wild Sumac" will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week and patrons are urged not to miss this unusually good offering.

Roy Stewart in "One Shot Ross," Western Drama, Typifies "Sure-Hit Gun Expert"

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

A real, live story of the West with romance, "sure-hit" experts with the gun, sensational stage "hold-ups" and the reformations of a wild, lawless town by "One Shot" Ross, champion "two-gun" man of the West—this in brief is what you will see on the screen of the ——— theatre when "One Shot Ross," a five-part Triangle production, featuring Roy Stewart, supported by Josie Sedgwick. This is a "corking" good Western drama and the management of the ——— theatre has no hesitancy in extending an invitation to the public to see this production when it is shown ——— week for he feels assured that everyone, young and old, man and woman, will find enjoyment with every flash of the scenes in "One Shot Ross" on the screen. Mr. Stewart makes an ideal Westerner. He has every quality that goes to make for strong, impressive dramatic action, and he is never more at home than when presenting the type of the Western plains. Jack Richardson, Louis Durham, William Ellingford and Leo Willis are in the supporting cast, and together they make possible sixty-odd minutes of screen entertainment that is seldom equalled and rarely excelled. "One Shot" Ross is a character with whom you all will be pleased, for he is the man who loves justice and who will fight for right, even at the risk of his own life. There is a pleasing love romance running through the story that is nicely contrasted with the more "heavy" element which typifies the Western atmosphere. You will all find entertainment in this offering.

Old Fairy Tale Revived on the Screen "Aladdin" Capital Fun for All Ages

(Fox Eight-Reel Production)

Everyone of you know the story of "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp." If you don't know it you haven't been properly brought up. But there is the old adage—"Never too late to learn." William Fox presents a wonderful visualization of this old fairy tale, so delightful, so faithful to the illusion that those of us who are acquainted with it have painted in our mind's eye that it is like greeting an old friend to see it on the screen. The clever Fox kiddies have practically all the leading parts in "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" and duplicate their wonderful performances in "Jack and the Beanstalk." They are all extremely clever. Francis Carpenter as Aladdin, Virginia Lee Corbin as the Princess and Violet Radcliffe, dressed in boys' clothes and assuming the role of the villainous magician, are the principal juvenile players and contribute the best work that any children have ever given to the screen. Naturally "Aladdin" is just right for your children It is a picture that they will revel in from the very opening scene to the very last when Aladdin clasps the faithful little Princess in his arms just after she has been rescued from the villain. But it is by no means exclusively a children's picture. In fact, what picture enacted by kiddies fails to please the mature portion of the audience? C. M. and S. A. Franklin, directors, who have specialized in children's pictures for some time past, had charge of the production of this one and it can safely be acclaimed their best effort. The settings of ancient Bagdad are lavish in the extreme and are not to be compared with even the most pretentious scenes in a five-reel production. Bernard McConville furnished an excellent story for the Franklin brothers to work upon, adhering strictly to the old fairy tale. This special attraction will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Maxine Elliott, Stage Favorite, Makes Bow to Screen in "Fighting Odds"

(Goldwyn Seven-Reel Production)

Maxine Elliott, known the world over for her masterful impersonations of Shakespearian roles, both in this country and abroad, and who is one of the best known actresses of the legitimate stage is to be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre in a seven-part drama, titled, "Fighting Odds." The story was written by Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb, with reputations in the world of authors equally as great as that of Miss Elliott's on the stage. This will be Miss Elliott's first appearance in pictures. Like many another who has left the speaking stage for work before the camera, Miss Elliott has won instant success. Bringing to the screen all those dramatic qualities which won her success behind the footlights, she puts a certain strength and naturalness into her work that demands high praise from all who see her. The story is one telling of the unscrupulous methods often employed by unprincipled financiers and promoters of the business world today to gain their ends and to amass fortunes. Miss Elliott presents the part of Mrs. Copley, wife of a successful automobile manufacturer, who is led into a crooked business deal by one whom he trusted. His success in the business world excites the envy of John Blake and Blake succeeds in drawing him into a fake merger, which in the end results in Copley serving a term in prison. But Blake is made to suffer dearly for his crooked part in the deal and justice prevails.

Maxine Elliott, one of the best known interpreters of Shakespearian roles on the speaking stage, at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "Fighting Odds."

Most Talented Child Actress on Screen—Little Mary McAlister in "Young Mother Hubbard"

(Perfection Five-Reel Production)

Little Mary McAlister, the most talented child actress on the screen, is featured in "Young Mother Hubbard," a five-part drama to be shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This little screen actress has been seen by the millions of picture lovers and has afforded entertainment only equalled in its dramatic qualities in exhibitions by older and more experienced artists of the screen and stage. Little Miss McAlister needs no introduction. She has been seen to advantage in both short and full length features. Her work in the "Do Children Count? series will bear out the above statement. In her latest work she portrays the character of little, Mona Fairflax, whose mother's death left her in charge of three brothers and sisters. She is shown to the country-side as Young Mother Hubbard. Her stepfather, in debt and discouraged with life, leaves little Mona and her brothers and sisters, and Mona, being the oldest, determines to provide the best she can for the family. Her efforts, however, are frustrated by the arrival of the director of the Children's Welfare Society. Mona begs with the authorities for permission to remain at the old home for another night. Late at night she harnesses the old horse and she and her little family leave. The children fall asleep and the horse stops in front of a rich man's house, the owner of the farm on which she had lived. When the Welfare Society insists upon them leaving, the rich man says that he will adopt the entire family.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of next week, "Young Mother Hubbard," with Little Mary McAlister in the featured role.

Gail Kane in "Southern Pride"—A Heart-Interest Screen Drama of Genuine Interest

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

Gail Kane is one of the prime favorites of the silent drama. She will be seen on ——— of ——— week at the ——— theatre in "Southern Pride," a five-reel Mutual release. In the cast supporting Miss Kane are Cora Drew, Jack Vosburgh, Robert Klein, Spottiswoode Aitken, George Periolat and Lewis J. Cody. "Southern Pride" teaches a lesson—one that all will be the better for having learned. Miss Kane presents the part of Lucie De Montrond who, with her brother, Francois, a man of expensive tastes and habits, lives with their aunt in the South. The brother has fallen victim to the wiles of a woman of questionable character whose demands for money and elegant clothes causes Francois to steal, and in so doing he unwittingly places his sister in an embarrassing situation. Of aristocratic parentage but with little money with which to keep up appearances, the De Montronds sought a rich husband for Lucie. Robert Orme is in love with Lucie, but the aunt discourages marriage because young Orme, although of an aristocratic family, is not wealthy. Lucie's brother, Francois, steals certain jewels given to her by a rich suitor whom she does not love, and when he learns of this he attempts to force her to marry him or return the jewels. The story is brought to a most satisfying climax and as seen on the screen will afford sixty-odd minutes of real, genuine entertainment.

Gail Kane, one of the best known actresses on the screen, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "Southern Pride." Something different.

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

Western dramas never fail to please because, no matter in what form of plot they are presented on the screen, there is a certain strain of human interest running through the story told, that appeals to both young and old alike. "The Girl Angle," released on the Mutual program, with Anita King in the featured role, tells a story of the Southwest. Maud Wainwright is the character presented by Miss King, and a more likable person than Miss King is not to be found among our favarites on the screen. Maud Wainwright, because she has had an unfortunate affair with one whom she loved, leaves her home and friends and goes to the Southwest, resolved to forget men. She takes a homestead and settles down to what she hopes to be a life free from the attentions of all men. Maud is pretty, however, and it is not long before she becomes the centre of attraction and "Three Gun" Smith, the "bad man" of the country, determines that she will respond to his advances. The sheriff, too, likes Maud, and under the pretext of protecting her, forces his attentions. It develpes that the sheriff is a "wolf in lamb's clothing," and that the so-called "bad man" is a trusted employee of the government. How Maud is made to reconsider her resolve to forget men is told in this picture of the West.

"The Girl Angle," with Anita King in the leading part, is to be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Your interest will be held throughout the run of this, one of the best of current releases.

Stillman Theatre Celebrates Its Birthday at Cleveland

Stillman theatre, Cleveland, known as "the theatre beautiful," celebrated its first birthday on Sept. 30.

Just one year before a capacity crowd of handsomely gowned women and men in evening dress, representing Cleveland society, E. H. Sothern's first photodrama was shown, and since that time none but the highest class of photodrama. The theatre was frankly an experiment at first, and it did not succeed as well as expected financially. Only recently it came under the direction of Marcus Loew, whose first step was to lower the prices. The Stillman had been charging from 25 cents up to $2 for special attractions, and Mr. Loew changed them to 10 to 25 cents for all bookings. Mr. Loew does not depend on any special program, but books the best pictures that he can secure.

passerby, but yet it did not jar. As the writer stood before the entrance it seemed that three out of every four of the thousands of people who passed along Fourteenth street stopped to closely inspect the display. They did not merely give the design a look and pass on, but went through the lobby critically reading the sales arguments of Mr. Kashin. At a comparatively dull hour of the afternoon the writer counted thirty-seven inspecting the lobby at the same time. A considerable portion of these bought tickets. There was a continual stream of people into the house at a time the patronage is not ordinarily very heavy. While we do not know the comparative figures, we are not afraid to say that this display was the cause for records being smashed.

We asked Mr. Kashin to outline his policy in making this display and he replied:

"The why and wherefore of my lobby displays is best expressed in the words of the late O. Henry, who wrote the following sound philosophy regarding the American rubber industry:

"'New York is the Caoutchouc City. There is a tribe abroad wonderfully composed like the Martians, solely of eyes and means of locomotion. These devotees of curiosity swarm, like flies, in a moment in a struggling, breathless circle about the scene of an unusual occurrence. If a workman opens a manhole, if a street car runs over a man from North Tarrytown, if a little boy drops an egg on his way home from the grocery, if a casual house or two drops into the subway, if a lady loses a nickel through a hole in the lisle thread, if the police drag a telephone and a racing chart forth from an Ibsen Society reading-room, if Senator Depew or Mr. Chuck Connors walks out to take the air—if any of these incidents or accidents takes place, you will see the mad, irresistible rush of the 'rubber' tribe to the spot.

"I quote Henry extensively, because I am simply trying to show my theory in the words of a standard writer.

"The first link in the chain of my advertising ideas is that humanity is curious, and if we were not all curious to a greater or lesser degree, Mr. Edison would not be as valuable to the world as he is, nor would I be putting out fronts for theatres. That's the first step.

"The next thing is that seldom is the advertising matter furnished you for a film in conformity with your ideas or the needs of your theatre. Every man differs from his fellow-professional, and if you are a conscientious advertiser you will not put into practice the ideas you think are wrong.

"After that comes a far more important development: How to treat the subject before you. I try to do this simply by adhering to the theme of the film, and speaking of this theme to the public in a novel way.

"After all, advertising and selling are two words that ought to be one. The first requisite for a sale is to gain access to your prospective purchaser. I gain access readily to the public because of the fact that they are curious. My success will only come provided I make use of the right arguments and do that in the right way, that is, with clarity and novelty.

"Ninety per cent. of film theatres use illogical methods. Their fronts are great big confusions of posters and photos. You do not know what is playing today, and you may get the impression that today's feature is playing tomorrow, or vice versa. The advertiser should concentrate.

"I used the word clarity before. One must be understood. Speak to your patrons in their language. Do they like the sensational or the high-brow stuff? It is very difficult for me to speak in general terms. What I did in Montreal, or Brooklyn, or New York City, had to be dished up in different ways. In Montreal, because of the French element, I would have to advertise 'Camille,' in one manner; at the Comedy, on Grand street, Brooklyn, I would have to deal with the human side of the play, and make an appeal to the heart and passion, for the human heart knows no language, and Grand street is very cosmopolitan; on Fourteenth street, at Fox's City theatre, New York, I have to become metropolitan and make an appeal both to the senses and intelligence."

Naturally the interest of serials depends on the thrills. We will discuss the utilization of the sensational and mysterious next week in connection with the Paramount serial, "Who Is 'Number One'?"

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

Brawny, Masterful Wilfred Lucas Has a Part Here That He Should Thoroughly Enjoy. The Scenes Are From Commodore Blackton's First Paramount Release, "The Judgment House," Based on Gilbert Parker's Novel

Blackton Completes His Second Parker Story

"The Judgment House," Well Within Schedule, Will Be Released First—"The World for Sale" Will Follow Shortly After

J. STUART BLACKTON has lived up to his prediction, and has completed the second of his Sir Gilbert Parker stories for Paramount well ahead of the release date set for the first. Although it had been planned to release "The World for Sale" first, Mr. Blackton decided that the second one finished, "The Judgment House," should be given a presentation earlier owing to the fact that it contains much military material. At this time, when the whole country is alive with military movements, "The Judgment House" should prove quite timely. A battle during the Boer war is reproduced with what is said to be almost startling fidelity, and a great number of extra people were used in the scenes.

Commodore Blackton, it is said, was fortunate enough to secure the services of trained troops prior to the edict which made it impossible to employ them in motion pictures. The peaceful hills and valleys of Staten Island were transformed temporarily into a veritable vortex of flame and smoke of battle.

Another advantage that Commodore Blackton experienced in producing these two pictures was the presence of Sir Gilbert Parker during the process of filming them. He watched virtually every move that was made with keen interest and was able to suggest many points of great value.

Another recommendation is the excellence of the casts chosen for the productions. "The Judgment House" possesses almost an all-star cast. Conway Tearle, Violet Heming, Wilfred Lucas and Florence Deshon, every one enjoying a reputation for splendid work on the screen, appear in the cast. "The World for Sale" has Conway Tearle and Ann Little as the leading players, with a cast of types chosen particularly because of their suitability to the picturesque roles.

The human quality, love interest, situations that are unique and yet appeal powerfully to the emotions—all these things are included in the stories by Sir Gilbert Parker and have been transferred to the screen under the careful supervision of Commodore Blackton, who is a stickler for accuracy. A number of new effects, some of which have never before been used in a photodrama, are promised in these productions.

Metro-Yorke Acquires Rights to Elliott Novel

For the story of the first Metro wonderplay starring Harold Lockwood he will make in Metro's New York studio, where he and his staff moved from the West Coast, Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke Film Corporation, has acquired the rights to Francis Perry Elliott's novel, "Love Me for Myself Alone."

Mr. Balshofer expects to begin photographing the story this week. The piece is a comedy-drama and in it Lockwood has a part said to be particularly well suited to his line of work.

"Beautiful Adventure" Serves Ann Murdock

The Empire All Star Corporation is well under way with the production of "The Beautiful Adventure," with Ann Murdock in the star role, supported by David Powell.

The story was written by R. de Flers and A. de Caillavet, French authors who have a number of comedies to their credit.

"The Beautiful Adventure" tells a pretty, romantic love story that, for all its Gallic piquancy, is said to be as dainty as a fairy tale.

"Rasputin" and "The Burglar" on Regular Program

By way of making good the forecasts made by World Film in the past sixteen months, William A. Brady announced last week that "Rasputin, the Black Monk," in seven reels, and "The Burglar," which follows it, in six reels, will be placed on the regular World program at regular World prices.

"In doing this," said Mr. Brady, "we leave no room for flaws." "Rasputin," continued Mr. Brady, "by the crowds it has drawn in New York and by the laudations it has received from newspapers, has already established its right to rank.

"We intended to permit this photoplay to run on at the Park theatre throughout the period of our lease, which we had succeeded in extending for this purpose, but we could not find another suitable theatre just now in which to show 'The Burglar,' and so determined to curtail the run of the Russian picture."

Tower of Babel Used in Metro's "Draft 258"

A huge reproduction of the Tower of Babel was erected on Long Island for use in "Draft 258," Metro's patriotic feature which will shortly be presented on the screen for the approval of the general public. The picture will be released as a special feature, starring Mabel Taliaferro and directed by William Christy Cabanne. Mr. Cabanne also wrote the story, in collaboration with June Mathis. The feature is a successor to Metro's former patriotic picture, "The Slacker."

Two New Features Purchased by Jewel Co.

Officials of the Jewel Productions, Inc., last week announced the purchase of two new features to add to the list already secured by that company. The first one is "The Boss of Powderville," by Thomas Addison; the second the Lois Weber production of "The Price of a Good Time." Up to the present time Jewel Productions has bought besides these features "Come Through," "Sirens of the Sea," "Pay Me," "The Man Without a Country," and "The Co-Respondent."

Mildred Harris Hailed as Genuine "Find"

Mildred Harris, who plays the leading role in the new Lois Weber production, "The Price of a Good Time," which will shortly be presented under the Jewel banner, is declared by Miss Weber as a "real" find. Miss Harris has had little experience before the camera, but was selected without hesitation for the role of Linne, the department store heroine, in Miss Weber's new production, which has been scenarioized from a story in a popular magazine.

Pathe's Tremendous Resources Turned into Features

J. A. Berst Announces "Pathe Plays" on Star Series Plan—Mrs. Vernon Castle, Pearl White, Fannie Ward, Bessie Love, Bryant Washburn, Frank Keenan and Others in Leads

J. A. BERST, vice-president and manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that pictures, starring Mrs. Vernon Castle, Pearl White, Fannie Ward, Bessie Love, Bryant Washburn and Frank Keenan will be released as "Pathe Plays" under the star series plan. Exhibitors may book all the "Pathe Plays," featuring all "Pathe Plays" stars, or all the pictures featuring any one or more of them.

"Pathe Plays" will be in every way comparable to the biggest features on the market today and Pathe hopes to make this the new standard by which features should be judged.

"The Vicar of Wakefield," "Les Miserables," "Today" and "The Mad Love" are classed as neither Pathe Plays nor Gold Roosters as "Super-Features."

Russian Repertoire Also

The Pathe feature program will include a series of special Russian Art Films released every four weeks. They are beautiful in production, so powerful in story and so remarkable in acting that they are confidently expected to create a sensation.

The first in "Russian Repertoire" will be "The Painted Doll," a powerful drama which is said to have a truly remarkable "punch."

"Pathe Plays" will be accompanied by a heavy direct-to-the public advertising campaign conducted as actual and definite cooperation with exhibitors.

The name "Pathe Plays" is always to be used in two words in the plural and whenever printed will appear in a distinctive style of script designed by a great American type expert.

Until further notice, pictures starring Gladys Hulette, Antonio Moreno, and Baby Marie Osborne will be "Gold Rooster Plays." They will continue one each week up to the program released October 14. Thereafter they will be released intermittently. October 14 will see the release of the first of the "Pathe Plays," and the program will also include a remarkably strong five-reel "Gold Rooster Play."

J. A. Berst on New Plan

This does not mean that the Pathe program will always include two features, though it will do so very often. J. A. Berst says:

"We have been years equipping our plants so that we make all our own raw stock. This is a great advantage. We even make our own cameras. We make our great printing machines, the only ones of their kind in the world. The result is that we can print a reel of news film in about one-fifth the time that any one else can print it. This means that we can get out our News Weekly days ahead of any one else.

"Our News reel business has doubled in the last year. It is going to double again. We are a much bigger publishing concern today than the Saturday Evening Post and we are going to be still bigger.

"Nobody can catch us, because years ago Mr. Pathe perfected the machines that enable us to turn out thousands of feet of film while others turn out hundreds. In other words, like Ford and Ingersoll, we have the machinery which others don't have and the business of others would not justify them in spending the cost of installation, even if these machines of ours were for sale, which they are not."

"Millions are wasted annually because of imperfect business methods and systems in the exchanges. In fact, three exchanges could handle all the business of New York better than the present forty exchanges, if the three were run according to the proper system. The exhibitors pay for these thirty-seven superfluous exchanges. So the system which we are building up is a very big and important thing to exhibitors.

"Today practically every motion picture theatre in the United States runs the Pathe News; 8,000 run Pathe serials, and are going to do the same thing with features."

Stars on the Program

The first of the Pathe Plays will be Mrs. Vernon Castle in "Stranded in Arcady," by Francis Lynde, scheduled for release October 14. Francis Lynde is one of the most popular writers of this kind of fiction.

It is reported that Fannie Ward's first picture under the Pathe Plays banner will be the famous A. H. Woods's stage success, "The Yellow Ticket." By the terms of her contract with Pathe she receives one of the biggest salaries ever paid a picture star. It is reported that by an arrangement with A. H. Woods and Pathe, Miss Ward is to appear in the leading roles of "Common Clay" and "Innocence," in addition to "The Yellow Ticket." George Fitzmaurice, "the man who makes one hit after another," will be her director.

Frank Keenan, it is stated, will immediately begin work in Pathe Plays. He made his biggest screen success in Thomas H. Ince's "The Crab" and "The Bride of Hate." He was also starred in "The Thoroughbred" and "The Sin Ye Do."

Bessie Love was a success in Triangle pictures as Douglas Fairbanks's leading woman, in "The Good Bad-Man," "Reggie Mixes In," "The Mystery of the Leaping Fish," etc. Then she played with De Wolf Hopper in "Stranded," and then with Wilfred Lucas in "Hell-to-Pay Austin."

Bryant Washburn has made a series of personal triumphs during the past six or eight months, thereby earning his reputation which qualifies him as a "Pathe Plays" star.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Marty McHale Pitches One to Picture Fans

As a Producer with Tris Speaker of the Clevelands He Produces a Baseball Picture for State Rights Sale

MARTY McHALE, former Yankee pitcher, announces a five-part novelty feature for state rights consumption, entitled "The Baseball Revue of 1917." Directed by Tom MacAvoy, the picture offers every diamond celebrity of both major leagues in an intimate and original series of views.

Christened Martin H. McHale and born in Stoneham, Mass., twenty-seven years ago, McHale is a product of the University of Maine, where he figured prominently in college athletics. After practising law for a season, he received a bid from the Boston American Baseball Club, the result of his fame as a college pitcher.

Following a highly successful two years as twirler for the Hub team, McHale was purchased at a record price by the New York Yankees, ten thousand dollars changing hands in the transaction.

While pitching a game for the Cleveland American League team the star hurler wrenched his back, which accident cut short a career on the diamond which had placed him with the top notchers. In the fall of 1911, he organized the Red Sox Quartette and with the redoubtable Rube Marquard, played all of the big time vaudeville houses in the country.

Acceding to the wishes of his managers, the following season McHale joined hands with Mike Donlin, New York diamond idol, and the pair were diverting vaudeville audiences with their skit when the former conceived the idea of producing a feature film woven around the personalities of the celebrities of the national pastime. The Baseball Revue of 1917, termed an epic of bat and ball, was the result.

Sponsored by McHale and Tris Speaker, the famous player of the Cleveland Club, the Athletic Feature Film Company was formed and offices opened at 218 West Forty-second street, New York. The picture will be ready for the state rights market this week and already several tentative offers have been received from prominent buyers.

While McHale has already planned a series of athletic novelties in film to follow the Baseball Revue of 1917, it is his intention to again join the Cleveland Club next season as one of the regular twirling staff. Speaker, associated with McHale in the new company, appears prominently throughout the five reels.

"Shooting" Liberty Recalls Years Gone By

Eugene Morin, a Metro photographer, has had his memory refreshed by taking pictures at the Statue of Liberty, in New York Harbor, recently for scenes in Metro's patriotic production, "Draft 258." He recalled that the first time he photographed "Miss Liberty" was in Paris in 1878. The head of the giant statue was on exhibition at the Universal Exposition in Paris. Morin, then a boy of twelve years, photographed it. This was the first picture he had ever taken and it was a good exposure. Now almost forty years later when he again photographed the Statue of Liberty, it vividly recalled his first effort in his profession.

Jewel Changes Broadway Presentation Date

The Jewel Productions, Inc., through a change in arrangements, has announced that the date of the presentation at the Broadway Theater, New York, on October 7 of the new Lois Weber production, "The Price of a Good Time," has been changed. Instead, it is announced, the same company at the same theater on the same date will present Elaine Hammerstein in "The Co-Respondent," a Ralph Ince production, from the play of the same name by Alice Leah Pollack and Rita Weiman.

Fox Introduces Innovation

William Fox, in announcing last week the completion by Fox Film of an allegorical film play which he has termed the "photodramatic poem," has come to the fore with another innovation. This new picture, which is announced as an unusual one, is to be released under the title of "Conscience," with Gladys Brockwell as star. Bertram Bracken directed the feature. The release date set is September 30.

"Jack and Jill" Feature for Pickford-Huff

Jack Pickford and Louise Huff will lose no time in getting to work upon their next Paramount production following the presentation of their current one, "The Ghost House," announced for release on October 1. The picture selected upon which they will center their attention, and in which they will star jointly, has been written especially for them by Margaret Turnbull, arranged for the screen by Gardner Hunting and directed by William D. Taylor. The title, "Jack and Jill," is enough in itself to draw unusual attention.

The "Mother Goose" title, however, is not to be taken literally, for this is anything but a fairy tale, according to report. It is derived from the fact that the two young people, whose fortunes are followed in the story, are inseparable, have been since childhood, and as a consequence they have been dubbed "Jack and Jill." Primarily, it is the story of a lad who is seeking lightweight honors in the squared circle—but there's a lot more to it besides and from all indications the story is one of the most "plotful" in which the duo have as yet appeared. The picture takes on the aspects of a western drama in spots because there are cowpunchers involved and some Mexican bandit troubles complicate matters.

The pictures in which Jack Pickford and Louise Huff have hitherto appeared as co-stars include "Great Expectations," "Seventeen," "The Varmint," "Freckles," etc. All of these were adaptations from novels. "Jack and Jill" is to be released early in November.

Triangle Spends $500,000 at Culver City Studios

H. O. Davis on the Bridge Is Driving Huge Machine to Its Limit in Speed—Trying to Surpass Record of All Other Producing Companies—Soon to Be Three Months Ahead

First Glance, it Looks Like Ringling's Big Top at 5 in the A. M. However, This is the New Comedy Stage, 304 x 80, Going Up on the Triangle Culver City Lot

IN an effort to make its Culver City studio the largest picture-producing plant in the world the Triangle Film Corporation is rushing improvements that will cost aproximately $500,000 and will increase the area of the plant to 26 acres.

A force of about three hundred carpenters and mechanics now are erecting a closed comedy stage 304 feet by 80 feet. Among the other structures to be built will be two glass and concrete drama stages, 250 by 60 feet, a scene dock 304 by 20 feet, a three-story, concrete electric power plant, a camera vault with lockers and accommodations for twenty-five camera men and their assistants, and a branch office of the engineering and production department.

The dressing room building, which extends the length of the present plant, will be extended along the entire twenty-six acres and will contain modern dressing-rooms and offices for 600 players and directors. The new drama stages will cost $50,000 each and the comedy stage $20,000. The scene dock will be equipped with two big concrete traps in the floor for use in making "water stuff" and producing under-light effects.

H. O. Davis Supervises

All of the construction work is being done under the direction of H. H. Barter, engineering and technical director of the corporation, directly supervised by general manager and vice-president H. O. Davis.

With elaborate sets crowding the stages and every available space in the eleven-acre studio, directors shooting day and night, the production department working on a 24-hour schedule and hundreds of players taking time off only to eat and sleep, the Culver City plant is shipping East at the rate of from two to four five-reelers weekly. Soon the producing plant will be about three months ahead.

The best proof that no time is being lost in attaining this mark was furnished when Auditor H. R. Hough announced that a scene painter whose weekly wages averages about $30 drew $72 in overtime last payday, and a carpenter's helper listed on the payroll at $18 separated the cashier from $54 the same week.

Half a score of companies working at Culver City and the Hartville ranch studio are expected to set a new production record for fall and early winter. Every stage on the big lot at Culver City is in use, two companies are at work at Hartville, and another company is working on a water piece at San Pedro Harbor.

Novelties in Production

Something new in "vamping" will be shown when Director Walter Edwards's picture, "The Fuel of Life," on which he is now at work, is released. In this story the wife is the victim of a "business vampire." Belle Bennett is being featured in this picture, with Texas Guinan playing a prominent role.

Some surprising photography is promised in "Up or Down?" which Director Lynn Reynolds is now completing at Santa Barbara. Reynolds has worked scenic miracles in this picture. The play features George Hernandez.

One of the handsomest homes ever set up on a Triangle stage is being used by Director E. Mason Hopper in his new picture, "Blue Blood," in which Alma Ruebens is being featured.

Director Jack Dillon is busy on a comedy drama, "Indiscreet Corrine," in which Olive Thomas is being featured. In this picture a pampered society girl seeks adventure in the garb of a café dancer, lying skillfully to manufacture for herself a past which in the end comes near costing her life's happiness.

Other New Features

The thrilling adventures of a newspaper man, drugged and forced to pose as a millionaire after he has been fired from his paper for falling down on a story, is the plot of the picture, "External Circumstances," being made under the direction of Ferris Hartman with Charles Gunn in a leading role.

Director Cliff Smith is working on a Western drama, "The Guardian of El Dorado," in which Roy Stewart is being featured, portraying the young sheriff who was the first of many elected to the post to collect his initial month's pay.

Direcor William Gittens, latest addition to the Triangle forces, is at work on a seafaring picture which will include many difficult water stunts, among them being a battle at sea between a sailor and a shark.

The following October productions have just been completed: "One Shot Ross," directed by Cliff Smith and featuring Roy Stewart; "Doing Her Bit," directed by Jack Conway and featuring Ruth Stonehouse; "Wild Sumac," directed by William V. Mong and featuring Margery Wilson; "The Firefly of Tough Luck," directed by E. Mason Hopper and featuring Alma Ruebens; "The Stainless Barrier," directed by Thomas E. Heffron and featuring Irene Hunt.

And This is How the New Triangle Studios Will Appear When H. O. Davis Has His Plans Worked Out to a Conclusion

J. A. Berst, for Pathe, Saw Russian Film

Deal to Distribute Art Pictures Was Made with N. S. Kaplan After This Review—Twenty-six Plays Included

TWENTY-FIVE five and six-reel productions, the so-called Russian Art Films, will be delivered to Pathe in completing the deal described in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The transfer will be made before N. S. Kaplan returns to Moscow.

Before Pathe decided to distribute these pictures the head of the company, J. A. Berst, reviewed them in person. He was impressed with the truly wonderful acting, the strong series, the fine lighting effects and photoplay, the costly sets and able direction.

It is announced that Mr. Kaplan will make more pictures in Russia and that these too will be distributed by Pathe. Mr. Berst says:

"In these Russian Art Pictures appear the most famous celebrities of the Russian theatre, a theatre that is in no way inferior to the greatest in any land. They also embody the thought of the leaders of Russian literature—Tolstoy, Dostoevsky, Turgenieff, Pushkin, Ostrovsky, Andrieff and Sienkiewiecz. Thus a national literature already known to lovers of good books in every land will be disclosed to millions of persons who up to now have lacked the opportunity to become familiar with it.

"Among the pictures are such masterpieces as Tolstoy's 'War and Peace,' Sienkiewicz's 'The Deluge,' Dostoevsky's 'Nicholas Stravrogin' Ostrovsky's 'The Busy Inn,' Pushkin's 'The Queen of Spades' and many others.

"A racial intensity of thought and depth of emotion that is eye-opening are apparent in all these stories. When one considers they are interpreted by artists of the caliber of Mozukin who plays the heroic roles at the Imperial Dramatic theatre at Moscow, a theatre which is subsidized by the government and which draws Russia's best talent; Mme. Gzovskaia of the Dramatic Art theatre, a star so great that when she is billed to appear the house is sold out weeks in advance; Vera Cholodnaia, formerly of the Moscow Imperial theatre who may be said to be Russia's national beauty; Mme. V. A. Karalli, prima ballerina of the Ballet Russe of Moscow and Petrograd, idol of the Russian nation; Mme. Orlova, the most delightful of ingenues; Tatiana Pavlova of the Petrograd Dramatic theatre; Mme. Karabanova, the beauty of the Kief Dramatic theatre; Mme. Lisenka, the queen of Russian motion pictures; M. Rimski, who was lent by the Rusian Imperial theatre for this work, and Mme. Lesienko, of the Moscow Art theatre, one appreciates the great wealth of talent, accomplishment and beauty which thus becomes available for the amusement and instruction of the American public.

"Many of these names mean little to that public at the present time, but they are names which ring throughout Europe as being leaders in their field."

Another departure is made by Goldwyn in the handling of Jane Cowl's first starring vehicle, "The Spreading Dawn."

This play, adapted from the Saturday Evening Post story by Basil King and directed by Larry Trimble, is really the dramatization of a diary presumably kept by a New York society belle of the 'sixties. The action follows this diary through, page by page, from cover to cover.

Dorothy Bernard Rejoins Wm. Fox Company

Dorothy Bernard has returned to the Fox forces in the Eastern studios at Fort Lee, N. J. Miss Bernard is before the camera in the role of Eponine in "Les Miserables," the massive production starring William Farnum. Jewel Carmen plays Cosette. Frank Lloyd is the director.

Miss Bernard's last production for William Fox was "Sporting Blood," which was by Bertram Bracken, now directing Gladys Brockwell in California.

Eleven pictures stand to Miss Bernard's credit. In some of these she was featured. Her screen record for Fox Film Corporation includes "A Soldier's Oath," "Fighting Blood," "The Bondman," "A Man of Sorrow," "The Broken Law," "The Little Gypsy," "The Song of Hate," "Dr. Rameau," "Princess Romanoff," "Sins of Men," and "Sporting Blood."

"Bon Voyage" to Sir Gilbert Parker

Sir Gilbert Parker, British novelist, whose works have been translated to the screen for Paramount by J. Stuart Blackton, is en route for his home in England. He was bidden God-speed by numerous friends in this country, among them Commodore Blackton and his family, whose guest Sir Gilbert has been on several occasions. He said:

"I am confident that motion pictures have not as yet reached the apex of their excellence. This is not to say that they have not made wonderful strides forward, as I believe the screen versions of my own books, made under Commodore Blackton's supervision, will evidence, together with many other fine pictures I have seen."

Morey Returns to Studio Following Vacation

Harry Morey, Vitagraph star, has returned to the studio in Brooklyn, following his vacation, and is at work on the script for a new play, the title of which has not been announced.

During his rest Morey made an auto tour of upper New York State, spending only a day or two in each place. He is tanned and hardened by his four weeks of outdoor life, looks a picture of health and says he feels up to the hardest work Vitagraph can hand him. He delayed his return in order to visit Niagara Falls on his way back to New York. Incidentally, Morey has many interesting tales of his trip to tell to interested friends.

Name Chosen for Alice Brady's Next Picture

"A Maid of Belgium" is the name chosen for Alice Brady's next World-Picture, with the first scenes laid in that war-torn little country across the seas at the outbreak of the conflict. The heroine goes mad when the roof is shot from over her head and her relatives are killed. An American tourist and his wife find the wandering waif and smuggle her to their home in America, where she is the innocent cause of a separation between her rescuers.

Petrova Director Gets Greenwich Village Artists

Practically all the artists in Washington Square were corralled recently for one of the scenes for the first Petrova picture. Among them are many well-known magazine cover illustrators.

The set for which Bobby North, Mme. Petrova's studio manager, scoured New York in search of real artists, is laid in a large atelier in Paris where dozens of art students are sketching from one model. Since their easels are shown toward the audience, Mme. Petrova and Director George Irving decided that ordinary "supers" would not do and that real artists must be secured. The opportunity to be photographed while actually at work on a pastel or wash drawing appealed very strongly to those who have already arrived, as well as to the "near artists" of Greenwich Village and Washington Square, and they flocked to take part in Petrova's picture.

Falcon Produces Prize Ring-Society Story

The current Falcon feature, "The Climber," released through General Film, is being hailed as one of the really novel productions of the day. It is not often that a screen hero climbs back into society through the ropes of the prize ring, but Henry King, as William Beerdheim Van Broon, does that very thing in this feature. The story of how he accomplished the unusual feat is said to make the production one of the most entertaining of the Falcon series. It is filled with action and is blessed with a swiftly moving plot.

Henry King is cast excellently as the hard-hitting Van Vroon, and is ably assisted in the picture by a supporting cast which includes Lucille Pietz, Bert Ensminger, Bruce Smith, Leah Gibbs, Arma Carlton, Mollie McConnell and Ruth Lackaye. King performs the double role of star and director, under the supervision of H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer. Following "The Climber," Falcon will release through General Film "The Understudy," with Ethel Ritchie and Neal Harding featured.

Theda Bara's "Camille" Presented First Time Sept. 30

The first presentation of the first Theda Bara Superpicture, "Camille," was announced by William Fox to take place on September 30, when the feature was scheduled to take the screen at the Academy of Music. The direction of the picture was by J. Gordon Edwards, and the supporting cast for Miss Bara was carefully selected.

The picture is described as a "masterpiece of films from a masterpiece of fiction." "Camille" has been well known as a novel, a play and an opera for fifty years. Actresses of the legitimate stage have all sought the role because of its histrionic possibilities. Miss Bara's impersonation of the woman rebelling against the narrowness of convention is said to be particularly suited to her emotional qualities.

Mr. Fox has given the picture an especially fine setting.

Proper Niche for the Screen Drama is Named

Has Developed Into Eighth Art of the World by Making Rapid and Unequaled Progress Along Right Path

(By SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON)

Pres. S. S. Hutchinson, American Film Company

AS far back as 1907 I believed that the motion picture art would eventually become the eighth art—the Screen Art. From the very first moment of my interest in screen drama I have been a firm believer in the theory that there is nothing that literature has done that cannot be reproduced upon the screen. Anything that can be put in type can be put in pictures, with the added values of pantomimic expression and motion.

The art of the motion picture drama has progressed more rapidly and more eventfully than any other important movement of this era. It was not so many years ago that the plan to produce photoplays of a thousand feet of film aroused derisive laughter. If I had broached the plan I had in mind at that time, of some day presenting photoplays of five reels, I suppose they would have quickly read me out of the ranks of the screen business for disseminating revolutionary ideas.

There were no definite plots in the pictures at that time. In fact, the general public then regarded motion pictures rather in the light of a transitory amusement for the less intelligent class of the public who demanded a cheap amusement.

I have always maintained that the public is not only endowed with intelligence, but with a large percentage of decency. I go to considerable trouble and expense in selecting and producing plays for this type of audience, and it has invariably produced desirable results in our accounting department. So much for the man who declares that clean plays do not pay. They do pay—both in money and in self respect. As long as I am president of the American Film Company we will produce no other brand of picture. Our company has maintained this attitude from the very first of the film business, when the pictures were largely chaotic and had little plot value and less continuity of purpose.

Time and effort have wrought the changes for which we hoped. We have brought more and better creative forces into play. We have seen the best of our stage folk come over to the screen; we have the trained writers who formerly sneered at the scenario. We demand not only the best of scenarios for our people, but trained workers in every line who who know and appreciate the value of applied technique.

I admit no limitation to screen literature. We have developed a most definite and decided screen literature, which has made and maintained for itself a place in art. It is a wonderful development of the pantomime with all its crudities softened and diffused by the motion and the depth of the shadow art. Add to this the dramatic values of the screen and we have, in my mind, the eighth art which is practically an expert combination of all that is most desirable and selective in the other seven.

"Madame Who," Bessie Barriscale's Second Paralta Production is Completed, and is Said to be a Beautiful, Dramatic Work—by Far Her Best Endeavor. Howard Hickman Leads the Supporting Cast

Mary Charlson Engaged to Play Leads for Walthall

MARY CHARLSON, who appeared opposite Henry B. Walthall in many of his Essanay pictures, has been engaged as leading woman with the Henry B. Walthall Pictures Corporation. The productions of this company, it is announced, will be made under the executive direction of Paralta Plays, Inc.

Miss Charlson has had a wide and varied experience in the hall of drama. Her father was one of the "heavies" of his time in Ireland, and she made her first appearance while yet a baby in arms. Since that time she has been connected with the stage until her entrance into pictures.

Speaking of her work in the silent drama, Miss Charlson said: "It was about seven years ago that I first went into pictures, playing with the old Reliance Company in New York, after which I joined the Vitagraph forces, remaining with them for two years and then went with Lubin. I have appeared in a number of feature pictures for the World Film Company and for the Selig Company, and joined the Essanay Company, where I received my first opportunity to play leads with Mr. Walthall, which was about a year ago.

"My work today is vastly different from what it was with the Vitagraph Company, for I was with them at the time when the wild West pictures were at the height of their popularity, and I appeared in many roles as a dashing girl of the plains"

Among some of the pictures in which she has appeared with Mr Walthall are "Burning the Candle," "The Saint's Adventure," "The Truant Soul," and "Little Shoes." She has also appeared in "Mr. Barnes of New York," "The Prince Chap," "Sealed Lips," "Passers-By" and "The Country that God Forgot."

Billy West Discloses Strange and Adventurous Career

THE varied and interesting career, both professional and private, of Billy West, the King-Bee comedian, who is starred in productions of that company, has come to light, through the unconcealed interest of his many admirers who consider his screen work among the most popular in the picture industry. Were his adventures and experiences put into book form there is no doubt the result would be a narrative bordering fiction, and equally as interesting.

West's remarkable adventures, as he remembers them, can be traced back to Russia, the land of his birth in 1895, where the murdering of his aunt before his very eyes gave him the most vivid recollection of his life. Shortly after that he fled to London, where he received his education and took up the study of medicine. However, before finishing his studies in medicine, West came to America and took up aviation. It is told by his friends that one flight cured him of all ambitions along that line, and a little later he stumbled into vaudeville as a character comedian. His first venture into motion pictures was a failure, supposedly through the inexperience of his backers, but he stuck to the industry and was later featured in Unicorn pictures. Then came a five-year contract with King-Bee, and it seems that the varied career of Billy West will not settle down into the accustomed routine of motion picture life.

"Land of the Free" Title of Beban Picture

George Beban's next Paramount feature will be called "The Land of the Free," and is a revival of the playlet of the same name which was written by Wm. C. DeMille several years ago and produced in New York. The picturization is the first of the two additional productions in which Mr. Beban will star for Paramount.

The character of Luigi Ricardo, a typical New York Italian, will afford Mr. Beban a role that, it is said, will be, if anything, more effective than any in which he has hitherto appeared. It is a characterization which gives the delineator of Latin types broad scope for his dramatic powers.

A strong supporting cast has been chosen to portray the other characters, and, naturally, the idea will be greatly enlarged upon.

Essanay Makes Travesty on Mother Hubbard

Old Mother Hubbard, of the nursery rhyme, has been put into a travesty in the shape of a five-reel comedy drama by Essanay for its six-year-old star, Little Mary McAlister. The picture sets forth, in the lightest vein, the theory that times have changed but little since Old Mother Hubbard's time. The picture is called "Young Mother Hubbard," and will be released on the Perfection Pictures program October 29.

"Young Mother Hubbard" presents Little Mary in the role of an impoverished child whose renegade parents have deserted her. Undaunted by the terrors of her plight, the child "adopts" a baby she finds on a doorstep and starts "housekeeping" in a drygoods box. Forthwith child welware workers of the type that neglect their own homes in order to pry into others, seek to interfere. How Mary successfully battles them off, with the aid of her dog, "Bobo," and eventually wins hapiness and love completes the picture story.

Elliott Dexter Appears with Elsie Ferguson

Elliott Dexter has returned to the Artcraft fold. The announcement of his return was made last week, when it was made known he will be cast in the leading role opposite Elsie Ferguson in her next picture, "The Rise of Jennie Cushing." Mr. Dexter's last work with Artcraft was opposite Mary Pickford in "A Romance of the Redwoods." In Miss Ferguson's second Artcraft picture, Dexter will appear in the role of a young artist who falls in love with Jennie Cushing.

In the supporting cast to Miss Ferguson are other well-known players, including Fania Marinoff, Frank Goldsmith, Callie Delatorre, Mae Bates, Edith McAlpin, Isabel Vernon, Blanche Craig, James Cogan and Marie Burk. The production is being staged at the Fort Lee studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Company under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, who also directed Miss Ferguson's initial Artcraft picture, "Barbary Sheep."

Bessie Barriscale at Work on "Within the Cup"

Bessie Barriscale finished work on "Madam Who," Harold MacGrath's military secret service romance, and four days' later began the production of her third Paralta picture, "Within the Cup," under the direction of Raymond B. West.

The story of this play was written by Monte M. Katterjohn, and relates the career of a daring young literary woman. The atmosphere is strictly Bohemian. The opening scenes are laid in the Latin Quarter in Paris, and then shift to old Greenwich Village, New York.

Clara K. Young Donates to "Militia of Mercy"

Clara Kimball Young, it was announced last week, has formed a Unit for the "Militia of Mercy," and through personal help and donations has made possible the complete outfitting of some of the "boys" in the service.

Membership in the Unit increased so rapidly that it was found necessary to appoint the following officers: Treasurer, Gertrude Monroe; secretary, Mrs. J. H. Lehnberg; instructress in charge of work, Mrs. Frank Farrington, and among the lads who are to benefit by Miss Young's patriotic service are George Merlo, actor; James Ewens Ewens, assistant director; Thos. Brennen, stage hand; Joe Comasa, stage hand; Howard Kapp, film printer—all formerly connected with the studios.

Paris of 1832 Reproduced by William Fox

In the Fort Lee studio of William Fox carpenters are erecting a cross-section of a part of Paris of 1832. Nine city blocks of the St. Antoine district are being reproduced. This will be the setting for the Fox production of "Les Miserables," Victor Hugo's masterpiece.

In the setting are cobble streets. Care has been taken to obtain cobbles old and worn by the constant passing of heavy-laden carts, and drains have been set down in hollows that the streets of Paris may not be overfull of puddles.

Paramount Officials Touring at Los Angeles

Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount, and Ben Schulberg, general manager, arrived in Los Angeles Friday from New York. A reception was tendered them at the station by Jesse L. Lasky, Cecil B. deMille and other executives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation engaged in work at the Coast studios. Friday and Saturday were spent in visiting the several plants where pictures are made for Paramount and Artcraft programs.

On Saturday Messrs. Abrams and Schulberg spent several hours at the Mack Sennet studios, and in the afternoon they were guests of Thomas H. Ince at his studio.

Messrs. Abrams and Schulberg came direct to the Coast from New York, and from here will start on their tour of the country, which provides a visit to the principal cities made in the interest of subjects released by Paramount.

Famous Players-Lasky Buy Paragon Studios

Paramount and Artcraft Pictures to Be Produced in a Permanent Home Provided with Best Daylight Facilities

THE Paragon studio and printing plant at Fort Lee, N. J., have been purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The company comes into possession of what is admitted by technical experts to be the best equipped daylight studio in the world. It will be used for both Paramount and Artcraft productions. Both these organizations have been working at the Paragon studio already, but the actual purchase was not made known. The newly acquired plant will be the Famous Players-Lasky Eastern studio, to distinguish it from the Famous Players studio in New York.

The studio has immense floor space to put on more spectacular scenes and interiors even more elaborate than those which have been seen in Paramount and Artcraft productions. The building is 200 x 200 and there is approximately 20,000 feet floor space, exclusive of the work rooms and offices. The glass roof at the peak is 75 feet from the floor. Underneath the floor boards is a concrete base which obviates danger of jarring which sometimes ruins an important scene. There are two revolving stages and a steel bridge which travels the length of the studio, enabling the cameraman to photograph from any desired angle of elevation.

A 20-foot terrace extends around the entire plant and in the side walls are sliding panels permitting of the use of this terrace for additional floor space when required. This admits of numerous striking effects. The printing plant adjoins the studio and is said to be the largest in the country.

Among the more recent productions made or under way for Paramount and Artcraft at the Fort Lee plant may be mentioned "Arms and the Girl," Billie Burke's second Paramount picture; "Barbary Sheep," in which Elsie Ferguson has made such a remarkable success for Artcraft. Lina Cavalieri is working there now under Director Emile Chautard on her first Paramount offering, "The Eternal Temptress." Maurice Tourneur has just completed "The Rise of Jennie Cushing" for Artcraft, starring Elsie Ferguson, at the former Paragon studio.

The acquisition of the Paragon plant will greatly facilitate production work in the East for both Paramount and Artcraft. Not only the studio itself but the lot surrounding it is of particular value, because of its natural adaptability to scenic features. There are trees and gullies which serve admirably in many productions, and there is so much room that battle scenes may be staged—such episodes as the invasion of a Belgian town as shown in "Arms and the Girl," and for which a small army of extras was employed.

Edward Earle Begins Work on New Five-Reeler

Work on the second picture in which Edward Earle will be directed by Wesley Ruggles has been begun by Greater Vitagraph. The feature is called "The Agony Column," and is a five-reel subject adapted from the story in The Saturday Evening Post.

Percy Standing, who plays a prominent role in Earle's supporting cast, has been accepted for service in the Royal Flying Corps of Canada, and just as soon as he finishes this picture will go to Canada and enter training. Earle, who played the role of an American aviator in "For France," twice tried to enlist in the Royal Flying Corps of Canada, but in both instances was rejected on account of eyesight and other physical defects.

Essanay-Chaplin Comedy Features Auto Chase

"A Jitney Elopement," the second of the new prints of Charlie Chaplin's Essanay comedies being released monthly through the General Film Company, has as a feature an automobile chase, ending when one machine falls into the ocean. To carefully balance this thrilling side of the film a vein of romance runs throughout the story, and this, with the style of comedy that put Chaplin on the road to fame, gives the picture a general appeal that is counted upon by Essanay to make it universally liked.

Goldwyn Hurries Out Trade Prints of "The Manxman"

TRADE prints of Hall Caine's greatest story, "The Manxman," are being placed in all Goldwyn offices throughout North America this week. Early next week exhibitors in the various territories will be invited to see George Loane Tucker's production, which is now available to all exhibitors under the policy of wide open bookings.

Brand-new prints have been shipped to all the Western and Coast points, and there will be no delay in the trade presentations, in which, judging by inquiries received, exhibitors everywhere are much interested.

The successful run of this production for a month at the Criterion theatre, New York, and Marcus Loew's instant booking of "The Manxman" for sixty-two days in his various theatres, Goldwyn says, has whetted the exhibitor appetite everywhere. It is by no means a regular thing for a production to make money during the so-called "successful runs" in New York. When the exceptional picture comes that closes its New York run with a profit the trade throughout the country promptly discover the fact from authentic sources of their own.

Every Goldwyn office in the United States and Canada will now be able to answer the many inquiries they have received by showings of the production itself.

Mary Pickford's "Little Princess" Ready in November

PRESIDENT WALTER E. GREENE, of Artcraft, last week announced that the next Mary Pickford feature, "A Little Princess," will be released in November, and that the picture is rapidly nearing completion at the Lasky studio in Hollywood, Cal., under the direction of Marshall Neilan. The latter also staged Miss Pickford's latest feature, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." The original book of "A Little Princess" is from the pen of Frances Hodgson Burnett, who dramatized the story in 1903 for production at that time in New York on the speaking stage.

In "A Little Princess," Mary Pickford plays another role from child life, depicting the story of Sara Crewe, a girl of just about the same age of Rebecca, in which roles she excels.

Paramount, in announcing "A Little Princess" as a feature for Miss Pickford, is emphasizing the popularity of Frances Burnett as a writer. For almost half a century she has been writing novels, one of which "Little Lord Fauntleroy," is particularly well known.

The adventures of Mary Pickford as Sara Crewe in the role of a scullery maid, her lonely position and craving for companionship of girls of her own age, are said to be remindful of the adventures of Oliver Twist in the Dickens story of that name.

Mme. Cavalieri's Initial Paramount Soon to Be Ready

"THE Eternal Temptress," Mme. Fred de Gressac's photodrama written for Lina Cavalieri, to be a Paramount Picture, is under way in real earnest. Interiors are engrossing the most of their attention, and while these are being taken Venice and Rome are being constructed just outside.

There is a genuinely exotic atmosphere about the studio, partially the result of the palpably foreign nature of the sets and the structures that are being built. There are several exceedingly rich interiors with heavy carved and gilded furniture, quaint tapestries, old world hangings.

When the Church of San Marco is reproduced on the studio lot, the Grand Canal and the Bridge of Sighs, together with the haunts of the thieves and riff-raff of Rome, it will certainly look like a corner taken bodily out of Italy and transplanted in quiet old Fort Lee.

Mme. Cavalieri and her director converse almost exclusively in French, though the famous diva and internationally famed beauty is acquiring English rapidly and speaks it with the most delicious accent imaginable.

Studio employees have good-naturedly dubbed Mme. Cavalieri's section "The Latin Quarter."

"The Eternal Temptress" will be ready well in advance of its release date, though every care is being taken to make it as perfect as human skill and technique, together with artistry of the first degree, can make it.

"Married in Name Only," Released by Ivan Films

"Married In Name Only" has been announced for release through Ivan Film Productions. Among other things which are said to make the production an exceptional one is a large cast of prominent stars.

The production expected is to show vividly the nobility as well as frailty of human nature. The situations are intensified by the fact that throughout the play eugenic principles are said to be masterfully interwoven. In a word, this novel feature necessitates powerful, yet also most delicate, direction, and the artistic demand on the cast is an exacting one.

Milton Sills was accorded the stellar role by his characterization of the part of Joseph Stanton in "The Honor System." Marie Shotwell and Gretchen Hartman are co-starred with Mr. Sills. Miss Shotwell's record both on the spoken and silent drama is such that Mr. Lawrence chose her as the vehicle to convey the part he ascribed to her. Among other players, Stanley Walpole as the youthful lover, Tom Burroughs as the doctor and Elean Hume, his daughter, have parts which should stand out eminently.

Strong Theme in "The Love Doctor," Vitagraph Play

"The Love Doctor," Vitagraph play in which Earle Williams takes leading part, contains an unusual theme, dealing with the efforts of a skilled surgeon to interchange the brain cells of two girls—one to whose intense love he remains impassive and the other who is unresponsive to his affection—purporting to restore nature's balance.

How the doctor comes to grief through his meddling with destiny is graphically told in this new Blue Ribbon feature.

Benj. Chapin Influenced by Lincoln Adage

Benjamin Chapin, producer and star of The Lincoln Cycle, may not have thought before he entered pictures that great lengths of time must be given to production of them. But now, if there is one man who believes in taking time to get perfect picture results it is Chapin. He is influenced greatly by Lincoln's statement that "Nothing is lost by taking time to perfect a good thing."

Mr. Chapin, in commenting upon his productions, said: "No one can accuse me of rushing through a single picture of the Lincoln Cycle Productions. I might have pushed them through in less time, but preferred to spend the extra time and cash to get better results.

"There was no such thing as film producing in Lincoln's day, but his adage sounds as though especially meant for picture producers. It's rush—rush—rush as a rule in the picture studio. Producers are continually confronted with the evidence that thoroughness is essential to perfection, but they think themselves exceptions who can speed and still be thorough. That studio bugaboo, 'Overhead,' forces speed.

"You can't force an apple blossom into a ripe apple in four weeks when nature requires four months. Both nature and art require time for logical development. In picture producing, perhaps more than in any other artistic line, one must devote the time logically necessary."

Kate Price and Billy Ruge Featured Jointly

In the fourth of the series of Sparkle comedies just finished by the Jaxon Film Corporation for release through General, new principals will be featured Billy Ruge and Kate Price, well known to screen fans, will appear jointly on the screen in Sparkle comedies during the coming weeks. Miss Price won much popularity while playing in comedies with John Bunny. Sparkle releases in this new series are "Week End Shopping," "Pals," "Ambition," "In High Speed," "Monkey-Maid-Man" and "A Bargain—$37.50." As usual the Sparkle releases are offered in groups of six, one being available each week. The first subject is announced for October 1.

Ruth Allen Signs Contract with Fairbanks

Douglas Fairbanks announced last week, through the publicity department of Artcraft, that Ruth Allen, connected with the scenario staff for several months past, has been promoted to editor of this department, which includes as writers Anita Loos and Keene Thompson. Miss Allen has had literary training in Europe and a practical education in this country. The contract just signed by Mr. Fairbanks and Miss Allen covers a period of two years.

"In Miss Allen," said Douglas, "we have an editor who is capable in every respect to encourage new writers who show possibilities for unusual development. She is prepared to give immediate consideration to scenarios that could serve as the basis of Fairbanks photoplays."

Dare-devil George Larkin is to be Seen in New Kalem Releases of "Grant, Police Reporter"

Kalem to Release One Reel Features Weekly

Series Embraces Four New Episodes of "Grant, Police Reporter," Featuring George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby—Start October 18

THE Kalem Company describes four new episodes of "Grant, Police Reporter," to be released weekly, beginning October 18, as one reel features. They will have George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby in the principal roles.

The pictures are entitled "The Mystery of Room 422," "A Deal in Bonds," "The Sign of the Scarf" and "The Man with the Limp."

"Exhibitors will be interested to learn," said William Wright of the Kalem Company, "that these four pictures were specially selected from the series because of their extraordinary merit and held for release as separate one-reel features. It will behoove exhibitors to visit their nearest General Film office and see the four pictures for themselves. If they are unable to do so they can take my word that these special episodes are all that we claim for them—namely, genuine features in one reel. Of the thirty odd plots which Robert Welles Ritchie wrote for "Grant, Police Reporter," he regarded these four his best work.

"The press in commenting on our 'Stingaree' series," continued Mr. Wright, "frequently remarked that many of the two-reel episodes are superior to many so-called 'super features' in quality of story and production. Now we have combined in one reel all the elements that went to make the 'Stingaree' pictures genuine features.

"In view of the popularity of the 'Grant' series, exhibitors booking these four new episodes will do well to advertise them as features. The wise know that length does not make quality. They will not have a disappointed patron the day they show the new 'Grants.'"

Emmy Lynn Makes Debut in "The Torture of Silence"

"THE TORTURE OF SILENCE," a strong play released as a Pathe "Gold Rooster," introduces a new star, Emmy Lynn. Those who have attended a pre-view say she has beauty and emotional talent equal to that shown by some of the recognized leaders on the screen.

The story is that of the young wife of a celebrated surgeon who is wrapped up in his profession and gives to it such application that of necessity his home life suffers. The young wife is, in consequence, unhappy. Her only relief from a life which is fast becoming intolerable seems to lie in a handsome young man, the friend of her husband.

He resists her pleadings to take her away with him and writes her a letter to that effect telling her that his friendship with the husband will not permit him to betray the confidence reposed in him. In a struggle at his house the young man is accidentally shot and dies.

Some time later there is born to the doctor and his wife a child whom they idolize. Bound together by the child they are again happy together. A dealer in books has purchased the library of the dead man. Between the leaves of one of the books is found the letter of the wife urging the young man to elope with her. This letter is made the means of blackmail upon the woman and wonderful results follow.

First Mae Murray Dance Film Meets Official Approval

THE first of the Mae Murray dance films, to be used as "trailer" on regular Bluebirds, arrived at headquarters last week and met the approval of Bluebird executives. Miss Murray was a dancer in vaudeville, as well as in New York's dancing cafés, before she became a member of Ziegfeld's "Follies."

Bluebird intends to introduce her to the program, on November 5, as star of "Princess Virtue," but will, meanwhile, create interest in her arrival by the presentation of her dance films, as an adjunct to the regular releases that proceed "Princess Virtue" on the program. In working out the idea her director, Robert Z. Leonard, has applied a little story to each dance, thus creating a short subject comprising interesting pantomime.

Miss Murray will have one of these introductory films for each of her features, previous to presenting her different photodramas in the Bluebird series. She will have the short film carry a dance and story that fits into the character she is to play, whether it be a society belle, a ragamuffin or a hoyden. The idea was tried in conjunction with "Princess Virtue."

Viola Dana to Have Two Directors at Coast Studios

VIOLA DANA, youngest star among Metro players who rank in the star class, is making plans to depart in the near future for California, where she will continue in Metro wonderplays, under the double director system.

John H. Collins and William C. Dowlan are the two directors who will endeavor to keep this little star busy. Mr. Collins will complete one picture with Miss Dana as star, then retiring to cut and assemble his picture, while Mr. Dowlan begins and completes the direction of the star in her next Metro multiple-reel feature.

The first feature on which Miss Dana will be engaged on her arrival at the Pacific coast studios will be "The Winding Trail," under the direction of Mr. Dowlan, who is now completing a six-act wonderplay, "The Outsider," with Emmy Wehlen as star. "The Winding Trail" is an original story, the work of Katherine Kavanaugh and June Mathis in collaboration. Its scenes are laid in a Western mining camp. Miss Dana will play the part of a high-class vaudeville entertainer who, for reasons of her own, goes to the mining camp and pretends to be an ordinary dance hall girl.

When "The Winding Trail" is completed, Miss Dana will at once begin work on a screen version of Myrtle Reed's story, "A Weaver of Dreams," under the direction of John H. Collins, who is now completing the direction of the little star in a screen version of Joseph Arthur's old-time stage success, "Blue Jeans."

Edgar Lewis Picture, "The Sign Invisible," Ready Soon

"The Sign Invisible," a feature on which Edgar Lewis has been working, will be ready soon for the market. The story was prepared by Anthony P. Kelly, who wrote Mr. Lewis's previous picture, "The Bar Sinister."

Mitchell Lewis, who was in "The Bar Sinister" and Rex Beach's "The Barrier," has a role of even greater power in this latest production, it is said. It is one of the principal parts in the story.

"The Sign Invisible" was made at Fort Ticonderoga, on Lake Champlain. Practically all its scenes are exteriors.

Bluebird will Feature Published Narratives

The management of Bluebird photoplays has come to the conclusion that printed stories, either in book form or as magazine features, make the best photoplays. With that determination arrived at, arrangements have been made to show screen versions of popular novels and fiction narratives in a majority of future releases. Several of the more important contracts have been announced.

"Anthony the Absolute," by F. Hopkinson Smith, along with "The Old-Fashioned Gentleman," by Richard Harding Davis, will become Rupert Julian productions with Ruth Clifford starred and Monroe Salisbury featured. Another story by the late Mr. Davis will be prepared by Joseph De Grasse, with Franklyn Farnum the star of "The Scarlet Car."

Mae Murray will have Louise Winter's novel, "Princess Virtue," as her first Bluebird subject. "One Clear Call," from the pen of Samuel Merwin, will be presented by Carmel Myers as her second Bluebird. "Heart's Blood," a story from the pen of Elaine Sterne, will have Dorothy Phillips as its star when it reaches the screen shortly after the new year begins.

"The Desire of the Moth," created by Rupert Julian, with Ruth Clifford the star will be presented Oct. 22, and "The Girl by the Roadside," from Varick Vanardy's pen, will become a Violet Mersereau Bluebird during December.

"Follies" Girls Help Ann Pennington Out

Ann Pennington mixed business and pleasure in her new Paramount picture, "The Antics of Ann," by taking her "gang" from the "Follies" with her over to the Famous Players Studio recently to break them in as screen players. As a result the studio has been more like a girl's seminary than a motion picture plant.

"I was surprised," smiled Miss Pennington, "to discover that a lot of the 'Follies' girls didn't want to work in pictures —whether they were bashful or what, I don't know. Anyhow, where at first I was very particular and bent on selecting each and every one with an eye to their exceptional prettiness or grace, I had to be less exacting before I finished. So I went around pointing my finger at every girl in the chorus, saying: 'Do you want to work in my picture? And you? And you?' Still, I think I got a pretty nice looking crowd—what do you think?"

Work is progressing splendidly on the "Antics of Ann," which will be an October release.

New Fox Production Under Way Last Week

A new William Fox production was begun last week in the West Coast Studios, with Richard Stanton supervising. The cast includes Enid Markey, Frankie Lee and Fanny Midgley. Miss Markey was leading woman opposite George Walsh in "The Yankee Way," and Frankie Lee has been seen to advantage is several Fox features. This picture will mark the debut of Miss Midgley as a William Fox player.

Hutchinson Favors Further American Expansion

Right at the time when the majority of the producers are looking for experts to show them how to cut down expenses, Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., has come forward with the announcement that he is in favor of a plan that will include largely increased expenditures for his company. The announcement was made at the home offices of American, in Chicago, after Mr. Hutchinson had returned from an extensive survey of the studios in Santa Barbara.

In regard to the plan Mr. Hutchinson said: "We expect to put all our productions on a still higher basis in point of quality, and to keep our pictures at the standard of excellence for which we plan will mean the expenditure of even larger sums of money than we have been using in the past. Our aim is always for the very best that can be produced in pictures, and while we do not intend to throw away any money, we expect our expenses to keep pace with the standard we have always set in the picture world.

"I have recently added Margarita Fischer to our stars and this gives us an organization of the highest class of screen artists, comprising Miss Fischer, Mary Miles Minter, Juliette Day, William Russell and Gail Kane."

Exposition Indian Village Used for "John Burt"

William Wolbert, director of Alfred Whitman and Mary Anderson in Blue Ribbon features at the Western studio of Vitagraph, is producing a five-reel romance adapted from Frederick Upham Adams's novel, "John Burt." Mr. Whitman plays the title-role while Mary Anderson has the feminine lead. Philo McCullough is the heavy.

W. S. Smith, manager of the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood, made arrangements for taking scenes in the Indian village which is still standing on the grounds of the San Diego Exposition.

Commodore Blackton Engages Paul Doucet

In completing the cast for "Judgment House," by Sir Gilbert Parker, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton has engaged Paul Doucet, under special contract, to take the role of Adrian Fellowes. The novel from which the picture is to be built is well known, and is expected to prove equally as popular in film form as it was in book form. The part of Adrian Fellowes is generally credited with being difficult to handle, inasmuch as it embodies the psychology of the modern super-selfish man of good address. Mr. Doucet was the last one in the large cast to be engaged by Commodore Blackton. Others in the cast are Violet Heming, Wilfred Lucas, Conway Tearle, Florence Deshon, Lucille Hamill and others well known for good work on the screen. The production in its entirety is under the personal supervision of Commodore Blackton, and it will be his first release on the Paramount program.

Theda Bara Takes Rest Following "Red Rose"

Theda Bara is resting for a few days, having completed her work in "The Red Rose." It is announced that Miss Bara will make another feature in the West, and possibly more after that.

Kerrigan an Oil Operator in Latest Picture

J. Warren Kerrigan has recovered from the broken leg he suffered several weeks ago at Santa Barbara and is back at the Paralta Studios, at Hollywood, at work on a feature to be incorporated into his second Paralta play, "Turn of a Card," which was substantially finished at the time he was injured.

Mr. Kerrigan plays an interprising young operator in the Oklahoma oil fields. He conceived the idea of introducing a big sensational reality—the "shooting" of a well, a rioting mob and the firing of the well, which proves a "gusher."

R. Holmes Paul, technical director of the Paralta staff, seeking a location, secured permisssion to erect his sets in the famous La Brea oil district, which is not far from the Paralta Studios in Hollywood.

MacQuarrie Assigned to Bison Productions

Henry McRae, production manager at Universal City, has assigned Murdock MacQuarrie to the company of which Neal Hart is the star. He will begin work in a few days on a two-reel Western Bison called "The Keeper of Hellgate." In this picture the leading female part opposite Hart will be handled by Eileen Sedgwick, who has done much daring work in wild animal pictures.

MacQuarrie, while affiliated with the Universal Company several years ago, produced a large number of dramas which were released under the Gold Seal and Big U brands. McRae is placing every facility at MacQuarrie's command in order to help the new director make Bison photoplays of high quality.

Albert E. Smith Keeps Notebook of Titles

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, in a recent discussion of the various factors that enter into the work of "putting over" a picture, expressed the conviction that half the battle is won with an effective title. Mr. Smith says:

"Personally, I keep a notebook containing hundreds of titles, and very often one of these titles itself has suggested the possibility of a story. And that is the first essential of a title, that it should contain a suggestion and that it should immediately suggest a wealth of possibilities to the reader and suggest them immediately."

Wallace Reid Plans to Visit Maine Woods

According to an announcement made last week by Jesse L. Lasky, vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Wallace Reid will come East in the near future. He is to film "Nan of Music Mountain," by Frank Spearman, while on the West coast and then will hurry eastward to do "The Source." The chief reason for the change in location is because much of the picture has its locale in the Maine woods. Supporting him in the picture will be Ann Little, who will also appear with him in other features.

Arbuckle Arranges to Return to the West

Further announcements as to what the comedian will undertake when he reaches the West have not been made.

Wm. S. Davis Joins Metro Directing Staff

William S. Davis, motion picture director, has been added to Metro's directing staff. His first work for Metro will be the direction of a multiple-reel Super-Feature starring Emily Stevens, a screen version of Blair Hall's story, "Alias Mrs. Jessop."

Mr. Davis has written almost every feature he has ever produced. He knows both stage and screen from every angle, having been identified with the theatre since his boyhood. His latest affiliation was with the Fox Company. Among the features produced were "Slander," "Destruction," "Dr. Rameau," "The Fool's Revenge," "The Straight Way," "The Family Stain," "The Victim" and "Jealousy," among the stars represented being Mme. Kalich, Theda Bara, Frederick Perry, Virginia Pearson and Valeska Suratt.

"I know of few other swimmers in the country who would attempt this feat," said Gittens.

Peggy Adams Permanent with Victor Moore

Victor Moore's leading lady continues to be Peggy Adams, and it appears that she is now firmly entrenched as a feature with the Klever Komedy organization. Miss Adams, a brunette, was engaged by Director Chester De Vonde to play the lead in one Victor Moore comedy, but her one week has extended into several, with countless more in sight.

General Film Makes a Splash with "Camille"

Helen Hesperia, International Screen Star, Plays Lead in This Six-Reel Drama—Exceptional Film Promised

WHAT is promised as the most classic characterization of Camille ever presented in motion pictures is that done by Helen Hesperia, the Italian screen star, in the six-reel production of "Camille" made for release through the General Film Company, and which is scheduled for release this week. As an attraction which should appeal to the exhibitor in search of a profit-making feature, this subject is especially recommended by General as being in a class by itself.

Some of the best photographic work yet done in pictures is claimed for this production of "Camille." The costuming is rated as lavish, and great care was exercised in setting the masterpiece in the atmosphere which Dumas himself employed in working out the story.

Aside from the promised magnificent way in which "Camille" has been staged and filmed, the outstanding feature of the picture is said to be the acting of Miss Hesperia, who found excellent opportunity for surpassing emotional work. Miss Hesperia has been in the limelight of popular favor since she began work, four years ago, under the direction of the Milano Film Company in a series of twelve feature productions.

In "Camille" Miss Hesperia is supported by a cast said to be fully capable of keeping the pace she has set in the staging.

Allan Dwan Joins Fairbanks Directing Staff

Resigns from Triangle to Alternate with John Emerson in Staging Artcraft Productions for the "Smiling Comedian"

MORE motion picture history, in the directing end of the industry, was made last week, when the announcement was made that Douglas Fairbanks has engaged Allan Dwan to alternate with John Emerson in the making of Artcraft features in which the "smiling comedian" is starred.

Director Dwan is one of the best known men in his line in the motion picture industry. His Famous Players pictures, followed by some of the most successful screen productions in which Fairbanks appeared, placed Dwan among the leaders, which was no doubt the reason Triangle put him in charge of its Eastern productions. Dwan has tendered his resignation to take immediate effect, and is due to land in California the middle of October to begin work on a new Fairbanks picture.

Both Dwan and Emerson now have sole charge of the Fairbanks-Artcraft productions, although each will work independently on their respective releases.

This new arrangement will give each director four weeks to work on his scenario, and three weeks to produce the pictures. While Emerson is staging a release, Dwan has those four weeks to develop his scenario, order sets, select his cast, then Douglas takes a week's vacation, and is ready for the new director.

The new arrangement should work out well, for both Fairbanks and the exhibitor. The latter will naturally get better pictures, because the proper time has been given to the development of the scenario.

Emily Stevens Begins New Metro Production

Will Be Multiple Reel Screen Version of the Story, "Alias Mrs. Jessop"—Star Appears in Two Character Roles

EMILY STEVENS has begun work at the Metro Studio in West Sixty-first street, New York, on a multiple-reel screen version of Blair Hall's story, "Alias Mrs. Jessop," which is expected by Metro to rival the forthcoming special production de luxe, "A Sleeping Memory."

In "Alias Mrs. Jessop" the star will be called upon to act the parts of both Janet Ford and Lillian Ford, cousins, their physical similarity being their only resemblance to each other. It is described as a sort of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde story, with two sets of mannerisms necessary on the part of the star. The opportunities for dramatic development are naturally many in a production of this kind. The story was adopted for the screen by Albert Shelby Le Vino.

The production will be directed by William S. Davis, and will serve to introduce Mr. Davis as a member of Metro's directing staff de luxe. He has established a reputation as a writer and director of feature photodramas with the Fox, Life Photo, Republic, Edison, Yankee and Biograph companies. Harry Franklin, long associated with Edwin Carewe as assistant director in Metro productions, will aid Mr. Davis. The screen version of "Alias Mrs. Jessop" will be produced under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Metro Studio.

Howard Hall will play the part of Sir Anthony Jessop, opposite the star. Mr. Hall appeared in "The Barrier," "The Human Orchid" and "According to Law." Before coming to the screen he was a stage star in his own right, touring the country in his own companies. Eldine Steuart will play the appealing role of the boy. Arthur Martinelli, one of Metro's "boss" cameramen, has charge of the photographing of the new feature.

Some of the scenes of the Blair Hall story are laid in America, and some in England. Homes of luxury are contrasted with poor surroundings.

Alice Brady Has an Ambitious Future. She Will Appear In Eight Select Picture Productions Per Year

Night Camp Scenes in Paralta's "Madam Who"

Bessie Barriscale's second Paralta Plays, "Madam Who," founded on Harold McGrath's sensational military secret service story of the same title, adapted to the screen by Monte M. Katterjohn, was recently completed at the Paralta Studios, in Hollywood, and the first print forwarded to New York.

A private projection of the new photoplay was made last Monday evening for Carl Anderson, president of Paralta, and other officers and attaches of this organization. It made a most profound impression on all who saw it.

While the story is told in an atmosphere of camp, trench and battle, the war interest is entirely secondary to the powerful dramatic portrayal of a determined young woman who becomes a military secret service agent to avenge the death of her father and brothers, who have lost their lives in action.

The night camp scenes, the view of a burning city as it is being evacuated by a defeated army, and the rioting and pillage of the lawless, freed from all restraint, are sensational incidents which have been staged with wonderful realism.

Clyde De Vinna, who did the photographic work, has greatly added to his reputation in "Madam Who," which will be Miss Barriscale's first Paralta release. Grace Miller White's "Rose o' Paradise" will follow this production, which, in turn, will be followed by her third Paralta play, "Within the Cup," by Monte M. Katterjohn.

Marie Dressler Begins Work in Her Hollywood Studio

MARIE DRESSLER has established herself comfortably in her own studio at Hollywood, Cal., and has begun selecting players for her second comedy, to be distributed through Goldwyn. The name of the piece has not been announced, and little is known of it outside of the fact that the scenario was prepared by Miss Dressler herself.

Goldwyn, in an announcement, assures that the comedy will be of the popular Tillie type in which the comedienne is so well known. The opinion prevails among those who have seen the first comedy Miss Dressler made for Goldwyn, called "The Scrublady," that her comedies will become popular throughout the country. The release date set for "The Scrublady" is Oct. 28.

Several innovations in studio procedure will make Miss Dressler's Los Angeles workrooms out of the ordinary. Following out her own ideas, the comedienne proposes to engage a small but select company for each of her productions and to keep the members together day after day until the picture is completed. Every one who has a part will be required to familiarize himself or herself with the script, so that there can be no excuse for the "blind" playing so often observable when actors are asked to take part in detached scenes and incidents in a story they know nothing about.

News of Triangle's Script Department

Jack Cunningham, Triangle script editor, took his first vacation in three years last week when he went to San Luis Obispo for a Friday to Monday rest.

In between the daylight and darkness on both sides of the day Cunningham has managed to squeeze two original stories out of his system in the past month as a little recreation from his task of editing scenarios for the Culver City production plant.

Alvin H. Nietz, Western writer for Triangle, has just finished his second script for Director Cliff Smith and Roy Stewart and has been added to the permanent staff of the Culver City writers.

Forestry Bureau Work in Universal Magazine

Universal's Arrangements with U. S. Dept. of Agriculture and Museum of Natural History Will Provide Interesting Subjects

UNIVERSAL has announced that, under the terms of the contract recently entered into with the Government, the first official pictures from the U. S. Department of Agriculture will be released shortly in the Screen Magazine. They will include some studies of the work of the forestry bureau in preventing and fighting fires in the big forest reserves under government control. Other timely subjects will show the new methods of preserving vegetables by drying and by utilizing the cold pack.

In addition to the materilal that will appear in the Screen Magazine, special reels are now being edited and titled for release within an early date.

Universal has also made an arrangement with the American Museum of Natural History which will make it possible to secure pictures of many unique subjects that the museum has in its possession. The first of these will be shown in an issue of the Screen Magazine released about the middle of October. D. C. Crawford and Mlle. Semene, his associate, have helped the editor of the magazine secure some fine studies of the designs and color schemes of the ancient fabrics recently secured from the tombs of the aborigines of Peru, who lived a thousand years before the Incas. Artists are shown at work copying these unique designs, which are to furnish the sartorial effects of the smartest dresses to be made during the coming year. New ideas in opera coats are also shown in process of evolution from the magnificent fur garments of the primitive races of Siberia. Many other equally interesting and up-to-the-minute ideas will find expression in the Screen Magazine as a result of the progressive policy that is being put into effect.

"Better Yet" Is to Be New Mutual Policy

Samuel S. Hutchinson, After Trip to Santa Barbara, Announces Intention to Add Largely to Expenditures

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Company, Inc., who has just returned to the home offices at 6227 Broadway, Chicago, from an extensive survey of the studios in Santa Barbara, has declared himself for a general plan that will include largely increased expenditures for the company. He says:

"We expect to put all our productions on a still higher basis in point of quality. To keep our pictures at the standard of excellence for which we plan, will mean the expenditure of even larger sums of money than we have been using in the past. Our aim is always for the very best that can be produced in pictures, and while we do not intend to throw away any money, we expect our expenses to keep pace with the standard we have always set in the picture world.

"I have recently added Margarita Fischer to our stars and this gives us an organization of the highest class of screen artists, comprising Miss Fischer, Mary Miles Minter, Juliette Day, William Russell and Gail Kane. In order to reach their best development each department connected with our picture production must maintain a corresponding degree of quality of direction as well as production.

"Efficiency is bound to be high priced; but we intend to have only the most artistic talent, trained writers, capable directors, expert cameramen, and altogether a highly efficient technical and construction staff in all our companies."

Merit Film Corporation to Widen Operations

Manager Chadwick, of Ivan Productions, Will Supervise Management, and Ivan Releases Will Be Exploited by Merit

DURING the coming year the scope of the operations of the Merit Film Corporation will be much enlarged, it was announced last week. By special arrangement the management of the exchange will be supervised by I. E. Chadwick, general manager of the Ivan Film Productions, and the exchange proper will be conducted by Mr. Willis, who for some time has been manager of the Boston branch of the Merit Company, where he made a record for himself.

All Ivan releases, both regular and special, will be exploited by the Merit Film Corporation. Moreover, there are some special deals pending for productions of other companies which will be concluded in time for the fall season. The fact that I. E. Chadwick is stepping in closer relations with the exchange is considered in itself a guarantee that the exhibitors in the territory controlled by the Merit Film Corporation will get a progressive and square deal.

Mutual Gets Quick Response from Its Better Pictures

SERVICE and a high standard of production have won appreciation from exhibitors in all sections of the country, judging from the letters arriving at the executive offices of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Mutual's "two a week" releasing policy, bringing to the screen the Charles Frohman plays, has been accompanied by determination to render every possible service to exhibitors.

Careful watch has been kept on the physical condition of the film. It is a well established fact in the industry that no Mutual exchange ever sends out a film of any length in anything but the most perfect physical condition. Some of the letters say:

J. C. Flack, Conneaut O.: Just a word in regard to your service. I have been a Mutual exhibitor ever since there was a Mutual Film Corporation.

Thomas B. Thom, Albert Lea, Minn.: The announcement that we are to show a Jackie Saunders picture is sufficient to pack the house. I wish we could have more Saunders pictures.

M. H. Whitham, Buffalo, N. Y.: I am offering this little note as a token of appreciation to the Mutual Film Corporation for its efforts in putting the film situation on a higher plane.

C. J. Woodmansee, New Ulm, Minn.: Many of our patrons pronounced "Souls in Pawn" one of the best features they had ever seen.

Paul A. Fenyvessy, Rochester, N. Y.: I played "The Masked Heart," starring William Russell, last Saturday, and it certainly was a clean-up for me.

Stage Drama Chosen as Pauline Frederick Feature

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation this week announced the new feature in which Pauline Frederick will be presented immediately following her appearance in the Paramount production of "The Hungry Heart." The new production will be called "Mrs. Dane's Defense," and is from the drama of that name by Henry Arthur Jones, English dramatist. The play was one of the most successful of its kind and was said by some to be among the most striking of the "realistic" problem plays, imparting many thrills to its audiences. The title-role on the speaking stage was created by Margaret Anglin.

The Paramount adaptation of "Mrs. Dane's Defense" was directed by Hugh Ford, who is said to have taken especial care to make it as nearly perfect as possible. The scenic background is expected to be one of the features of the picture. Much care has also been exercised in selecting the cast and in costuming the characters. Revelations in gowns are promised in this picture.

As announced by Paramount, "The Hungry Heart" will be released prior to "Mrs. Dane's Defense" in November. The feature was directed by Robert G. Vignola.

"Best Authors" Policy Rules "Vita" Program

Alfred Henry Lewis, Frederick Upham Andrews, Robert W. Chambers and O. Henry Are Names on Current Releases

ADHERING to the "best authors" policy outlined by Albert E. Smith, president, Vitagraph in twenty-eight days will release the following:

October 15.—"Dear Shot Baker," the first of the Wolfville series, which is being made from the stories of Alfred Henry Lewis.

October 22.—"The Botton of the Well," a mystery play, from the book of the same title, by Frederick Upham Adams.

November 5.—"The Fettered Woman," an adaptation for "Anne's Bridge," one of the best known of the Robert W. Chambers romances.

November 12.—"I Will Repay," an adaptation of the celebrated O. Henry story, "A Municipal Report."

"Dead Shot Baker," in which William Duncan and Carol Holloway are featured, is declared to be one of the finest Western pictures ever filmed, remarkable for its daredevil riding scenes and its wonderful lighting effects. It was made at the Vitagraph Western Studio in Hollywood, Mr. Duncan directing the production in addition to playing the leading role.

"The Bottom of the Well," a powerful melodrama in which a millionaire mill owner is tried for his own murder, brings to the Vitagraph program an extraordinary production. It was directed by John Robertson, and presents an all-star cast headed by Evart Overton. Others in the company are Ned Finley, Agnes Ayres, Alice Terry, Adele De Garde, Herbert Pryor, Robert Gaillard and Bigelow Cooke.

"The Fettered Woman" presents Alice Joyce, supported by Webster Campbell and Templar Saxe, in a splendid adaptation of the Robert W. Chambers novel, "Anne's Bridge." The play was directed by Tom Terriss, and is notable for the scenic effects obtained.

"I Will Repay" is another mystery drama, set in the romantic atmosphere of the eastern shore of Maryland. Corinne Griffith plays the role of the heroine. "Mother" Mary Maurice and William Dunn are her chief support. Arthur Donaldson plays the role of the faithful slave.

Harold Lloyd Sells "Hot Dogs" —In Picture

Pathe has announced for the week of Oct. 7 a Lonesome Luke comedy called "Birds of a Feather," which is said to be a two-reel skit made up of many original pranks in which Harry Lloyd and Bebe Daniels, assisted by "Snub" Pollard, live up to the reputation which they have acquired. The comedy shows Lloyd as joint partner in a hot dog emporium at a seaside resort.

Harold Lloyd and the Rolin crew of funmakers are also on the Pathe program of October 14 in a one-reel farce entitled "Bliss." In this comedy Lloyd plays the part of a very much impoverished individual who is exceedingly anxious to get invited to dinner at the house of the girl whom he most admires.

Victor Moore Takes Mother Goose Title

Victor Moore has made use of the phrase, "The cow jumped over the moon," as the title of his latest Klever Komedy, which is scheduled for release by Paramount on Oct. 14, and which deals with the high cost of living in general and the high cost of beef in particular. This will likely be one of the most timely comedies that the comedian has appeared in. The cow, figuratively speaking, has jumped over the moon, and this is discovered by the householder, played by Moore, when a bill for a very large sum arrives from the butcher. From this point forward the comedy is fast and furious, with Vic getting the worst end of the deal, as usual. Besides, it hits the prevailing high meat prices a hard blow in a satirical manner and enables Moore and his supporting company to get in some distinctive touches that are not only apropos of the times but bound to wring laughter.

New Subjects in "Grant, Police Reporter," Series

One of the important announcements of the week is a new series of "Grant, Police Reporter," releases from Kalem for distribution by General Film. Four subjects, each in one reel, have been issued in this new series of tabloid detective stories, in which George Larkin is featured.

The new subjects are each complete in themselves and can be used with the series, or independently, with equal facility. The four subjects announced for early release are: "The Mystery of Room 422," "A Deal in Bonds," "The Sign of the Scarf," and "The Man with the Limp."

General Film also anticipates another installment of a popular series from Kalem for November distribution.

Violet McMillan in "The Girl Who Won Out"—Butterfly

Violet MacMillan is the stary of the Butterfly feature scheduled for release October 8th, "The Girl Who Won Out." It is a sociological drama, written by Judge Willis Brown, juvenile court judge of Salt Lake City.

Some excellent character types are contributed by Mrs. A. E. Witting, Charles Hill Mailes, L. M. Wells and Sherman Bainbridge. Eugene Moore is credited with the direction.

Japanese Legends Embodied in "The Call of the East"

"The Call of the East," will be Sessue Hayakawa's starring vehicle. It will be released by Paramount on the 15th of October. In the cast will be found dainty Tsuru Aoki and Margaret Loomis, whose real name is Lehua Waipahu. The following also appear: Jack Holt, James Cruze, Ernest Joy, Guy Oliver and Jane Wolff.

Those who have read Lafcadio Hearn's books will recognize, no doubt, some of the strange legends in "The Call of the East." Beulah Marie Dix, author of the story, has embodied some of these Oriental touches. The photographic work is said to be fine in this picture and the settings chosen will be notable for their exquisite natural beauty.

Small Towns Vie for Paramount-Artcraft Service

Paramount Pictures Corporation is beginning to find out just how many really small hamlets there are in these United States, and all through a recent announcement made by the company that the Star Series of Paramount and Artcraft productions had been booked at the Liberty theatre, Canaseraga, N. Y., a town of 754 people.

P. C. Wreath, sales manager of the Kansas City Feature Film Co., called attention to the fact that contracts for exhibiting all the Paramount and Artcraft stars had been signed with C. H. Cookingham, manager of the Opera House at Ayrshire, Iowa—which has only 337 population. Also it was announced that Skiatook, Oklahoma, was using a large part of the service in the Palace theatre. Skiatook has 606 souls.

Vivian Martin Again a Waif in "The Trouble Buster"

Once more, in "The Trouble Buster," released October 8th, winsome Vivian Martin will appear as a waif of the streets. The title is derived from the name of a strange little clay figure similar to the kewpie or billiken supposed to have been designed by "Mike"—Miss Martin. The experiences of a Rumanian girl left alone in America when her father dies, make up the story.

Among the players are James Neill, Paul Willis, Charles West, Louise Harris, Mary Mersch and Vera Lewis.

"The Fibbers," Bryant Washburn Comedy, for Oct. 15

Bryant Washburn's new comedy-drama, "The Fibbers," will be released by Essanay October 15 on the Perfection Picture program. Trade showings of the five-part picture are now in progress at George Kleine's branch offices.

Bluebird to Present Rawlinson in New Crook Play

Bluebird has arranged to present Herbert Rawlinson in a drama similar to his recent "Come Through," as a regular release on the program for October 29. This feature will precede the appearance of Carmel Myers as a Bluebird star in "The Lash of Power," November 5, and the arrival of Mae Murray, long heralded, as star of "Princess Virtue," November 12.

The Rawlinson Bluebird will be "The Man Trap," a melodrama, ending with a "surprise" twist that promises to befuddle the "plot detectives," and make the feature exceptional among "crook" conspiracies of the screen. In "The Man Trap" there will also be introduced a leading lady, new to photoplay, in the person of Sally Starr, who will support Mr. Rawlinson in future productions.

Elmer Clifton, who has created several Franklyn Farnum Bluebirds, directed Mr. Rawlinson in "The Man Trap," working from a story and scenario by Waldemar Young. The supporting company, beside Sally Starr, will have Ruby La Fayette, Jack Nelson, Mark Fenton, Hal Wilson and Frank McQuarrie.

Essanay Releases "Fools for Luck," Taylor Holmes

Taylor Holmes, Charlie Chaplin and George Ade supply Essanay's share of film entertainment to be released the coming week.

Mr. Holmes will be seen in a comedy-drama, "Fools for Luck." It is a screen version of Kennett Harris's story, "Talismans." It will be released on the Perfection Picture program October 8.

The second of the Essanay-Chaplins, which will be released through the General Film Company, October 13, is "A Jitney Elopement."

The next George Ade Fable to be released through General Film is entitled "The Fable of All That Triangle Stuff as Sized Up by the Meal Ticket." It will appear October 13.

Four O. Henry Features Scheduled for October

General Film has announced for distribution in October four O. Henry stories from that series, and which are produced by Broadway Star Features. The October releases are claimed to be the best of the entire lot and include two and four-reel subjects, as follows: "The Lonesome Road," two reels; "The Indian Summer of Dry Valley Johnson," four reels; "The Enchanted Kiss," two reels, and "A Night in New Arabia," four reels. Three of these subjects deal more or less with the West and is laid in New York, or, as the author calls it, "Bagdad-on-the-Subway." This is "A Night in New Arabia." Martin Justice is said to have given to "Dry Valley Johnson" some of his most able work as a director of O. Henry stories. For the two-reelers in the West, Director Dave Smith has taken pains to provide typical O. Henry locations and atmosphere. Thomas Mills's work as director in "A Night in New Arabia" is of like class.

Perhaps the most unique of the October O. Henry releases is "The Lonesome Road," a colorful picture illustrating how matrimony can tame even the wildest of rip-roaring cowboys. Chet Ryan's work as Perry Roundtree is supported by S. R. Jennings, Tex Allen and White Cloud.

"The Indian Summer of Dry Valley Johnson" is an Eastern production with an ex-cowboy hero, with Carlton King as "Dry Valley" Jean Paige.

Gladys Hulette Starred in "A Crooked Romance"

Pathe announces as an event of real note the release, on September 30, of "A Crooked Romance," in which Gladys Hulette is starred. In her supporting cast are such well-known players as J. H. Gilmour, Wm. Parke, Jr., and Paul Clerget, the French pantomimist.

In announcing the release Pathe has made Paul Clerget the center of attraction. In "A Crooked Romance" he is expected to carry a very good role, as he has starred in his own right in more than one production. His last engagement on the speaking stage was in the Winthrop Ames production of "Pierrot the Prodigal."

Paramount Sets Release Date for "Number One" Serial

PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORPORATION has set Monday, October 29, as the release date for its first serial, which is to be presented under the unusual title of "Who Is Number One?" The star of the serial, which was written by Anna Katherine Green, is Kathleen Clifford, recently in vaudeville, and who is making her screen debut in this production. Coincidental with the release of the feature, the story will be novelized in newspapers in fifty cities, and this publicity is expected to prove a valuable aid to the exhibitors showing the serial, which promises to rival any former picture of a like nature.

Paramount is looking forward expectantly, but optimistically, to Miss Clifford's maiden debut across the stage of the silent drama, as all indications point toward a genuine success for the young lady when she makes her bow before picture audiences. Her ability for staging neck-risking stunts is said to be wonderfully developed, and these will be brought out in "Who Is Number One?"

As further insurance that the public will be fully aware of the presentation of the serial, Paramount will launch a smashing billboard campaign in 150 cities, with promises of making this one of the best advertised serials released in some time.

"Who Is Number One" tells the story of the machinations of a mysterious and revengeful woman. A man of masterful mind, a clever inventor, is the object of this woman's hate.

Into this turmoil comes Kathleen Clifford. She falls in love with the son of the financier. There are plots and counterplots, and throughout is a beautiful love story. In every episode are thrills, ranging from an axe-fight between divers under the sea to a tremendous dive from the yard-arm of a ship, and a leap across a court from a roof to a fire-escape that resulted in a broken arm for Miss Clifford.

General Film Schedules Three More Falcons

"The Climber," with Henry King, "The Best Man," with George Cain, and "The Understudy," with Ethel Ritchie, on Program

FOLLOWING the current Falcon Features, released by General Film, one a week, a varied list of attractive stars and stories is ready. Henry King comes back as the lead in "The Climber," a story by George Foxhall, supervised by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

The present releases are "A Man of His Word," from the great play of "Jelf's," by Horace Annesley Vachell, a George Loane Tucker production featuring Henry Ainley and Mary Dibley, and "The Secret of Black Mountain," featuring Vola Vale and Philo McCullough.

As in "The Mainspring," the Joseph Louis Vance story in which he played hero, Mr. King in "The Climber" has a part giving every scope for youthful fire and dashing prowess. In "The Climber" he is an aristocrat down in life who becomes a prizefighter and wins his way back into society again by force of character. There is a mystery and love atmosphere throughout this drama.

A star whom every one will discover in a most agreeable role is Ethel Ritchie in "The Understudy," by Leigh Gordon Giltner, the next Falcon Feature. The male star in this production, supervised by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer, is Neil Hardin. It is a drama of social contrasts and of a deserving girl attaining success after strange trials and most novel experiences.

The return of Margaret Landis, remembered in "The Martinache Marriage," is promised in a story called "The Best Man," by George Cain, from People's Magazine. The suspense in this story arises out of her courtship by two vastly different men, both weak and both strong. In the end the one proves to be unregenerate in his instincts while the other turns out to have gentility plus the truer fiber. Intensely dramatic situations mark this production, also supervised by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

The same producers are responsible for the next Falcon Feature in the list, Vola Vale again being the star, Jack Vosburgh being bracketed with her. "The Library in the Library," by Frederick Orin Bartlett is the story, one of conflicts and thrills and yet with a powerful human note all the way through.

Later there will be productions featuring Kathleen Kirkham, Vola Vale, R. Henry Grey, Daniel Gilfether, Monroe Salisbury and Mollie McConnell.

Charles Ray's First Paramount October 22

Charles Ray, the Thomas H. Ince star, will make his debut as a Paramount screen star on Oct. 22, it is announced, when he will be presented in "The Son of His Father." His s cond feature, "His Mother's Boy," will be released later in the year.

The apearance of Ray under the Paramount banner is being awaited as quite an event by a majority of exhibitors, as well as screen fans. His beginnings in roles wherein he depicted weak types of youth led finally up to a display of versatility that has been accepted with favor throughout the country. In "The Son of His Father," whatever traits of weakness in the character are apparent in the beginning are soon forgotten in the development of the role. The young man, placed on his mettle, proves himself a real red-blooded American. The picture was directed by Victor Schertzinger, from the novel by Ridgwell Cullum. Vola Vale plays the feminine lead in the picture and others in the cast are David Slosson, George Nicholls, J. P. Lockney, Charles K. French and George Hoffman.

CHICAGO IS STRONG FOR The Trump Serial "The RED ACE"

CHICAGO HERALD.

Seen on the Screen

"THE RED ACE"

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS.

WHAT with standing on the fender of a moving automobile, doing a Doraldina on the edge of a yawning precipice and having live gorillas waiting in ambush—"The Red Ace" might be termed a very live serial. All of this occurs in the first three episodes, and leaves one rather breathless and stirred up with curiosity to know what comes next.

Of course, this is exactly as it should be in a serial. This expectancy emotion is what induces ma to stack her supper dishes and hurry to the neighborhood theater. An exhibitor who has watched the flurry and waning of his box office receipts will tell you if it were not for the promise held forth in a serial, business would frequently be at a standstill.

That is why I say "The Red Ace" has all the symptoms of a popular serial. A lovely lady in distress, a band of uncouth villians, and enough stimulating excitement to be very unhealthy for one afflicted with heart disease.

Having only seen three episodes of this strenuous moving picture, I might be accused of being premature in my judgment, but I have seen so many of these continued picture stories I think I am justified in basing my criticism of "The Red Ace" on the manner in which it gains in interest.

Marie Walcamp, intrepid and daring, has the fat role. As the sister of Richard Dixon, murdered for his mine, "The Red Ace," she has a big opportunity to give some startling exhibitions of her skill as a diver.

Miss Walcamp has the support of the best talent Universal City affords and has been surrounded with a group of well-balanced players.

Biggest Program for Pathe on October 14

Probably Biggest Program Release Ever Made Includes Nineteen Reels Made Up of First of New Pathe Plays

PATHE claims for its program for the week of October 14 the distinction of being the largest ever released by this company, and probably by any other. It contains nineteen reels, made up of the first of the new Pathe Plays, a five-reel Gold Rooster play, two serial episodes, a one-reel Harold Lloyd comedy and the usual short reels, including the Pathe News.

The stars appearing on this program are Mrs. Vernon Castle, Emmy Lynn, Mollie King, Pearl White and Harold Lloyd. The first named appears in "Stranded in Arcady," a five-reel Pathe Play special, produced by Astra, written by Francis Lynde, scenario by Philip Bartholamae, and directed by Frank Crane. This is the first of the Castle features, and also marks the first release under Pathe's new feature policy.

"The Torture of Silence" is also a drama in five reels. Emmy Lynn plays the central character in this picture.

Mollie King is presented in the fifth episode of the "Seven Pearls," with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary, produced in two reels by Astra.

Pearl White appears in the fifteenth episode of "The Fatal Ring," produced in two reels by Astra, under the direction of George B. Seitz, story by Fred Jackson, and scenario by Bertram Millhauser.

"Biaritz, the Fashionable," and "Warblers of France" make up a Pathe colored, split reel scenic and educational.

Harold Lloyd appears in "Bliss," one-reel comedy, produced by Rolin. This is a very fast moving comedy, with Harold Lloyd, Harry Pollard and Bebe Daniels. It is all about a count that turns out to be a counterfeit, and is said to pack à laugh a foot.

An International cartoon and scenic, split reel and Hearst-Pathe News, No. 84 and 85, complete this very big program.

Janitor and Gangmen in "Big V" Comedy Mix-Up

Vitagraph's "Big V" gloom chaser for the week of October 8 is "Rooftops and Ruffians," written by Lawrence Semon and Graham Baker. Semon leads and is assisted by the riot squad which includes Joe Simberg, Joe Basil, Earl Montgomery, Pietro Aramondo and Ed Dunn. Florence Curtis, dancer, plays the leading feminine role.

The story concerns Larry, who is the janitor in a building the cellar of which is a rendezvous of yeggmen.

Next Pickford-Huff Play "The Ghost House"

"The Ghost House," a Paramount picture scheduled for release Oct. 1, has Jack Pickford and Louise Huff as co-stars.

William C. De Mille directed the picture and it has been accorded careful handling. The supporting cast includes Olga Grey, James Neill, Eugene Pallette, Mrs. Lewis McCord, Horace B. Carpenter, Edythe Chapman, and Lillian Leighton.

In the plot the old Atwell house is said to be haunted. Jeromy, the gardener, is at the head of a band of crooks and does his best to keep alive the superstition.

Even the old lady in the picture frame is taking an interest in the fat wad of green-backs. Edith Roberts, registering disgust, is leading lady in Universal's "O'Conner's Mag"

Eltinge, Conqueror, Begins Second Screen Feature

JULIAN ELTINGE, best known female empersonator of stagedom, has turned his attentions to the second screen feature of his career, and which is being produced, as was his first picture, by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for release through Paramount. Thoroughly alive to the possibilities which the silent drama hold forth, Mr. Eltinge, fresh from his success achieved in his initial attempt on the screen, is expecting to make even a bigger thing of his second feature. The title chosen is "The Clever Mrs. Carfax," in which story Eltinge is given the dual role of Mrs. Carfax and Temple Trask. The picture has been directed by Donald Crisp, and will be a November Paramount release. The scenario was prepared by Gardner Hunting. A strong supporting cast was supplied, and from all accounts "The Clever Mrs. Carfax" will more than duplicate "The Countess Charming."

In the first of his Paramount pictures, "The Countess Charming," released September 24, Eltinge established himself solidly as a screen star, and promises some new surprises to the female contingent of his audiences in his next picture.

Star in "Silent" Drama Tries Her Songs on 'Em

Myrtle Stedman, film star, who has been making a tour of the United States and Canada, appearing at the various theatres in person, will arrive in New York soon to wind up her successful trip.

Instead of the regular talks that have been the common custom among the stars who have appeared before their admirers, Miss Stedman gives a song recital, after which she says a few words of appreciation.

In Oregon she was compelled to alter her schedule and remain there a full week and a half longer than she expected. Such was the case in several cities where patrons of the theatres could not get inside to hear their favorite sing and talk.

Miss Stedman intends to return to the screen, after she has taken a two weeks' vacation in the Catskills.

Helen Hesperia As Camille In General Film's New Production

Universal Pictures General Petain, "Hero of Verdun"

SUBJECTS of real news interest are shown in the ninetieth issue of Universal's Animated Weekly, just released.

General Petain, "The Hero of Verdun," and King Albert and Queen Elizabeth of Belgium are three of those given prominence in the release.

By special permission of the French War Office, the Universal cameraman recently accompanied General Petain to the fighting front, and there secured some views of the most democratic of European military leaders during the course of an interesting day's work.

Of even greater note are the scenes in which the exiled King and Queen of Flanders figure as they are shown donning aero garb and setting off on a flight from a French aero station to view adjacent portions of their ravaged kingdom. An armored scout plane accompanies them. This is in many respects the most unusual set of news pictures the Animated Weekly has carried in weeks.

American scenes are also well represented with pictures of the departure of the 12th New York National Guard for France, via Spartanburg, S. C.; the carnival recently held to mark the official closing of Coney Island for the season, in which soldiers, sailors, marines, civilians and pretty girls all vied for attention with one of the gayest parades of floats that has ever passed down the famous midway by the sea; and scenes taken at Niagara Falls, showing how the great International Bridge between the United States and Canada is being guarded night and day by details of "Tommies" and "Sammies," who hobnob in the most neighborly fashion as they go about their co-operative duties, all earnestly interested in protecting the rights of their respective countries, now so closely allied in this world's conflict.

Universal Offers Variety for October 9

Five Rattling Comedies and Two Dramas on Release Schedule—"The Ninth Day," Military Drama, Heads the List

UNIVERSAL has announced what is expected to be an unusually interesting and worthy program in its releases for the week of October 9, when five comedies and two dramas will come to the attention of the exhibitors.

The Gold Seal drama, "The Ninth Day," heads the list, with Neal Hart, one of the most likable of western players, as star, The picture has a military trend, and is from the story by Col. Jasper Ewing Brady. The picturization was made by Karl Coolidge, and the direction was done by George Marshall. A very pretty love story is woven about the love affair of a cavalryman at the military post and the storekeeper's daughter. Rivals for the hand of the girl make things even more interesting, and supply occasion for complications which are carried out admirably to make a winning picture. In this feature Neal Hart is supported by Janet Eastman and other capable players.

"Hot Applications" is the title of the Nestor comedy in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran will be featured Tuesday, October 9. Written by the two principal funmakers, scenarioized by Fred Palmer, and produced by Roy Clements, this is said to be one of the most hilarious farces in which Universal's comedy team have been seen in many moons. Edith Roberts and Fred Gamble also have prominent parts in the fun-making.

Wednesday, October 10, is L-Ko Comedy Day, and is signalized on this occasion by the release of an unusual commentary upon the medical profession, entitled, "The Nurse of An Aching Heart." Eddie Barry, Bob MacKenzie, Eva Novak, and Chester Ryckman furnish most of the merriment. Archie Mayo and J. G. Blystone are credited with the direction. The 93d issue of the Animated Weekly will also make its appearance on the same date.

Lena Baskette, the ten-year-old dancing prodigy, will be the star of "A Prince For a Day," the tabloid feature released October 11. In the story, written by J. B. Shillingford and prepared for the screen by Nan Blair, Lena takes a dual role, and puts over two distinct characterizations. Fred Montague, Allan MacQuarrie and Nigel Debruiller are prominent in the cast." The Wart on the Wire," a burlesque of Universal's serial. "The Voice on the Wire," will be released at the same time, featuring Gale Henry and William Franey. Ruth Stonehouse and Harry Mann are the featured players of the Victor comedy scheduled for release October 12, and which is called "A Walloping Time." The 40th issue of the Universal Screen Magazine bears the same release date.

Helen Gibson is the star of the Bison drama which will be presented October 13. "Saving the Fast Mail" is the title of the feature in which Miss Gibson will make her latest appearance, and which was written and produced by James D. Davis. "Rainstorms and Brainstorms," a joker comedy, featuring Max Asher and Gladys Tennyson, will also be released on that date.

The 22nd issue of Current Events featuring up-to-date-minute happenings, concludes the week's regular list of releases. In addition, the concluding episode of "The Gray Ghost," Arthur Somers Roche's mystery serial, will be released for exhibition outside greater New York.

West and South Contribute to New Triangle Dramas

THE West and the South are represented on the same program in Triangle's schedule of releases for the week of Oct. 7. The power of maternal love to conquer man's duplicity and the pressure of public opinion in a small town furnish the themes for the two dramas announced. Belle Bennett and Ruth Stonehouse are cast in the leading roles.

The first drama is called "Ashes of Hope," with the scene laid in a Western mining camp dominated by the charm of Gonda, a dance hall girl. Gordon, a stranger, happens into town and becomes the subject of a wager between the girl and a gambler. Naturally, the girl wins, and the story develops. Gonda's growing love for the man is stifled when she learns he is married, and the supreme sacrifice she made gives name to the story. Supporting Miss Bennett are Jack Livingston, Jack Richardson and Josie Sedgwick.

The second play, "A Phantom Husband," has a unique matrimonial twist, as its title implies. A little country girl whose pride impels her to spread news of an imaginary fiancé, in a Kentucky town, wanders through a maze of her white lies trying to produce a ready-made husband for her wedding date. The story is from the pen of H. O. Davis, Triangle's vice-president and general manager. Charles Gunn plays the leading male role opposite Miss Stonehouse.

The Keystone comedy for the week, "His Crooked Career," features Fritz Schade and Claire Anderson in a tangle between a chief of police and burglars' union. "Half and Half" and "All at Sea," one-reel Triangle Komedies, will also be released on Oct. 7.

Universal Animated Has Chevrolet Views

Universal's Animated Weekly No. 91 has excellent pictures of Louis Chevrolet winning the $10,000 Harkness trophy at Sheepshead Bay by driving an auto one hundred miles in fifty-four minutes.

Other views include the eighty-foot tester board erected at Norfolk, Va., Catolanian revolutionist overawed at Barcelona; Colonel Hart, President's aide, assigned to service in France; President Wilson receiving the Humanitarian Cult medal; Uncle Sam's "nephews" at Governor's Island; Quebec bridge completed, and the 25,000 "Rainbows" at Camp Mills, Mineola.

Anita King's First Horkheimer Feature Ready

"The Girl Angle" Scheduled as Mutual Release for October 8—Gail Kane Presented in New American Production

A SPECIAL event in Mutual releases for the week of October 8 will be the introduction of Anita King to the Mutual-Horkheimer productions. In addition to the feature in which Miss King will star, Mutual has announced for release the same week a drama in which Gail Kane has the leading role, two comedies, a chapter of "The Lost Express," and the topical reel.

"The Girl Angle," the initial production in which Miss King appeared for E. D. Horkheimer at Long Beach, Cal., is slated to head the list of releases for the week. Miss King in the feature has the role of a two-fisted fighting woman who despises and distrusts the male of the species to an intense degree. It is said she has done her part very well, and the feature is awaited expectantly.

Gail Kane has a distinctly different role in her new picture, "Southern Pride," than she had in "Souls in Pawn" and "The Bride's Silence," her last two releases. She is assigned to the part of the proud daughter of an old but impoverished Creole family, loved by two men and loving one—the everlasting triangle. The settings are typically Southern. The production was directed by Henry King, who has been in charge of Miss Kane's most recent Mutual-American pictures.

There are two comedies on the schedule for the week: "Firing Father," the second of the new series of Mutual Strand one-reel pictures, starring Billie Rhodes, and "Jerry and the Bully," a one-reel Cub featuring George Ovey. Exhibitors in all parts of the country showed interest in the announcement that Mutual would release a series of forty-four Strand comedies starring Miss Rhodes, and heavy bookings have followed the news. Miss Rhodes is supported by Jay Belasco. "Firing Father" is scheduled for release October 9 and "Jerry and the Bully" reaches the screen October 11.

The serial release of the week is "The Oil Well Conspiracy," chapter four of "The Lost Express," the Mutual-Signal fifteen-chapter photonovel starring Helen Holmes. Chapter four takes the production up to the point where the motive for the theft of old General Thurston's secret formula for granulating gasoline is revealed.

Reel Life, the Mutual Film magazine, scheduled for October 11, covers the following subjects: "A Dam Across the Mississippi," "The Development of the Watch," "Acrobatic Cyclists," and shows the raising of cantaloupes in the Imperial Valley. The animated drawing from Life is entitled "Coming Home from the Club in 1950." Mutual Weekly, carrying current events, is released October 10.

Gaumont Announces Program for October 15

Mutual Weekly No. 146 Is First to Be Released That Week, Followed by Reel Life—Dishwashing Is a Feature

THE first release of the Gaumont Company for the week of October 15 is Gaumont-Mutual Weekly No. 146, which will reach the screen on Wednesday, October 17. The current topics which will appear in this issue will be those headlined in the newspapers of about that date.

Like a literary magazine, the Gaumont screen Magazine, Reel Life, is carefully prepared in advance of publication. It is therefore possible to state the contents of No. 77, which will be released on Thursday, October 18. Two cameramen were sent to Panama and points on the Gulf of Mexico to photograph the feature subject in this number, "The Banana Industry." This industry is shown in its entirety, from the planting of the banana tuber, or "eye," among decaying jungle vegetation to the unloading of perfect bunches by machinery in the United States.

Hardly less interesting (and probably housewives will deem it of greater importance) is "When Dishwashing is a Pleasure," which illustrates a recent invention which allows the sanitary washing of each dish in clean, separate water in a way which will not injure the prettiest or most delicate hands. The Gaumont Company promises to show other inventions to lighten housework in succeeding issues.

The other subjects in this number are: "A Colonial Church in South Carolina," which was saved from destruction during the Revolution by the coat-of-arms of George III; the making of a crude bracelet by "A Primitive Jeweler"; and "An Optical Illusion," an animated drawing from the humorous weekly, Life, which proves that the chorus girl did not kick off the minister's "lid."

Lois Weber "Found" This Charming Young Woman. Mildred Harris Plays the Leading Part in "The Price of a Good Time"

Supreme Court Scene Shown in Walthall Feature

Among the massive settings required for the filming of "His Robe of Honor," in which Henry B. Walthall will make his debut as an independent star-manager under the executive direction of Paralta Plays, Inc., will be an exact reproduction of one of the chambers of the New York Supreme Court. To get this setting correct in detail, it was necessary to secure the services of an artist, who made a sketch of the original room, and which was sent to the studio in California where the reproduction will be built. So massive is the setting that, when completed, it will occupy the entire floor space of one of the largest stages in the studio. Art Director R. Holmes Paul, who prepared the blue prints for the set, is in charge of the construction work, which will require several weeks.

Frederick Warde and Large Cast in New Pathe

In "The Heart of Ezra Greer," Pathe Gold Rooster Play in five parts, announced for release on October 7, Frederick Warde is supported by an exceptionally large cast. Among the players are Lelia Frost as his pretty daughter, George Froth as Jack Denbeigh, the young Broadway leading man; Carey Hastings as Denbeigh's housekeeper, Thomas A. Curran as his guardian, Lillian Bueller as Amy de Vere, the "Baby Vamp"; Helen Badgley as the poor little girl, and Gerald Badgley as the millionaire's baby.

"The Heart of Ezra Greer" is described as a twentieth century story, full of suspense and heart interest. It was written by Lloyd Lonergan, author of the serial, "The Million Dollar Mystery," and was directed by Emile Chautard.

Dozen Cities Give Scenes to New Mutual Weekly

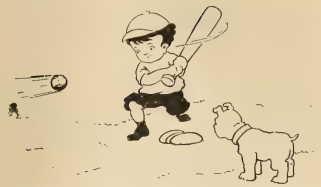
Mutual Weekly No. 144, scheduled for release on October 3, will present current scenes in twelve cities in this country and abroad, and will embrace a wide range of subjects, all the way from fashion hints to action on the firing line.

Cities represented in this Weekly are New York, Boston, Los Angeles, Washington, Seattle, Lexington, Mass.; Ventura, Cal.; Camp Mills, N. Y.; Quebec, Can.; Paris, France. What is expected to be one of the main points of interest in this news reel is the scenes at Camp Mills, where 27,000 troopers marched past Secretary of War Baker in review. This division is gathered from all parts of the country and will be the first to go to France of the troops still here.

"Firing Father" Is Strand-Mutual for October 9

"Firing Father," a one-reel comedy, is the second of the new series of Strand-Mutual comedies starring Billie Rhodes. It is scheduled for release October 9.

The new Mutual-Strand series opened October 2 with "Some Nurse," the first of a series of forty-four one-reel comedies. Billie Rhodes is the star in the series, supported in most of the series by Jay Belasco.



Bobby Bumps Caught in the Act. He is a Creature Created by the Animated Pen of Earl Hurd of the Bray Studios

Hunting Subject Special Feature of Pictograph

The eighty-eighth release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the magazine on the screen, is said to demand special interest through the hunting subject, "A Southland Deer Hunt," which is incorporated in it. The picture of the hunt was made, it is said, in the forest-covered hills of Carolina, and is probably the only one that shows the actual shooting of a wild deer.

In order to get the pictures the cameraman was forced to climb a tree, where, screened by the leaves and with his camera lashed securely to the branches, he sat patiently for hours awaiting the chance of a deer passing close enough for the hunter's shot. Other subjects that go to round out this release are a practical demonstration of a simple method of making soap in the home as evolved in the Department of Home Economics of Cornell University, "A Wood Chopping Contest in New Zealand," and an animated cartoon by Earl Hurd called "Bobby Bumps' World 'Serious.'"

Gaumont Shows Quebec Bridge Completed

The Gaumont Company is able to show in No. 144 of the Mutual Weekly, released October 3, the third and successful attempt to complete this monster bridge.

With a cantilever length of 2,830 feet, and a clearance which will allow the passage of the tallest masted ships, the Quebec bridge is the greatest in the world, surpassing the famous bridge across the Firth of Forth, near Edinburgh. Even a 16-story building would not extend above the main posts, and more than 65,000 tons of steel were used in its construction.

Burton Holmes Closes Most Successful Tour

With the richest harvest of motion pictures and still photographs secured in the twenty-three years of his career as a globe-traveler, Burton Holmes has completed his present campaign with the camera. He declares that patrons of the screen may look forward to a wonderful series of Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel pictures, while for the travelogues, Mr. Holmes' personal series, innumerable extraordinary pictures have been obtained as well.

From New Zealand, Australia, Samoa, Hawaii, China, Manchuria, Korea, Japan and Alaska have been brought back a wide variety of interesting scenes in the daily life of the people, in the characteristic setting of each country.

Featurette Shows How Pictures Are Made

Educational Films Corporation Discloses Studio Mysteries in Single Reel, with Rothacker Plant in Chicago as Basis for Scenes

IN the single-reel featurette, called "From Studio to Screen," released September 24 by the Educational Films Corporation, the mysteries of the motion picture industry, as far as the making of pictures is concerned, are disclosed to the general public. The subject is one that has always been of great interest to the lay mind, and it is expected that the film will draw largely for this reason, in addition to its other qualities.

The idea of showing the public how moving pictures are made originated with E. W. Hammons, vice-president of the Educational Films Corporation. Mr. Hammons, after a tour of observation covering laboratory-studios from coast to coast, selected the Rothacker Studios at Chicago as the place to show up-to-the-minute moving picture production and manufacture on an extensive and scientific scale and worked out his ideas accordingly.

"From Studio to Screen" opens with a brief general view of a modern laboratory. Then is shown the arrival of the raw stock, unperforated negative and positive film. Then the perforating room is shown, where the negative film is made ready for the camera and the positive film made ready for printing. Then the cinematographer loads the camera, placing the negative in light-tight magazines and fixes them ready to "shoot."

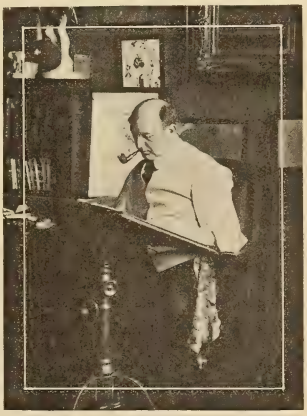
Then is shown the dressing-room where the art of studio make-up is illustrated. From here the film goes to the carpenter shop, and on to the completion of a picture.

The film closes with the final inspection, and turning over the finished film to the express companies who send it on its way to the exchanges, who, in turn, distribute it to the theatre.

"From Studio to Screen" will be presented for one week at the Strand theatre, New York, during early October.

"Travelaughs" New Hy Mayer Screen Stunt

Photographed Backgrounds Showing Streets, Docks, Wharves, Bridges and the Like Cleverly Fade Out into Cartoons



Hy Mayer, Busily Engaged On His Cartoon For Universal's Animated Weekly

IN addition to his duties as the featured cartoonist of the Animated Weekly, Hy Mayer has just made an arrangement with Universal whereby he will do a unique series of "Travelaughs," to be issued monthly during the coming year.

The first of these humorous commentaries on life as it is lived in the highways and byways of the metropolis was recently shown at the Broadway theatre, where it aroused much favorable comment. It is entitled, "New York as Seen by Hy Mayer," and will be released throughout the country without delay.

As a combination of photographic art and drawing, the reel has a refreshing element of novelty that is said to lift it out of the class of the stereotyped travel trip in screenland. The camera supplies many unusual scenes of the skyline, rivers, docks, bridge, streets and foreign quarters of the big city, which in turn fade out into Mayer's witty and incisive sketches, telling in the most graphic manner the thoughts that these scenes have aroused in his mind. Not the least interesting part of the reel are the captions, done in the arist's most characteristic vein, and they are descriptive indeed.

Hy Mayer is the dean of cartoonists now connected with the motion picture industry. He is finishing his fifth year under contract with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and during that time his name, his hand and his famous striped shirt cuff have become familiar in every corner of the globe where motion pictures are shown.

Unusual Fun Promised in New Cartoon Comedy

Goodrich Dirt and his pup, the characters created by Wallace Carlson, will be presented in their search for a square meal in the 87th release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the "magazine on the screen."

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeLissa Berg

A SPANISH SURPRISE PARTY

Spain gets tired of being so out of the general rumpus, and every now and then starts a little uproar of her own. Or tries to. Some gentlemen who believed they had a grievance against the existing order of things assembled at Barcelona (Universal Animated Weekly, No. 91). While waiting for their train they enjoyed a native dance. Then, with spirits renewed, they— But it was just at this point that the surprise occurred.

That business of completing the great bridge at Quebec has been a heart-breaking affair. More than once the central span has been raised nearly to position, only to give way, the last time at the cost of several lives. Now at length the effort has been brought to a successful conclusion. The cameraman, sticking to his post for hours, for the span was raised 640 feet at the rate of only six feet an hour, shows us various stages of the operation, and finally the completed bridge with traffic passing over it.

Every one likes to see-saw. Witness the crowds on the swings at Coney. But only a minute fraction of our 100,000,000 can go to the beloved island. It's a long way from Norfolk, Va., for example. So a clever man there built his own Coney Island in the shape of a teeter board eighty feet long, worked, of course, by machinery. With those on board was the cameraman, and striking are the pictures he caught as the end of the giant teeter rose and sank.

GLIMPSES OF WONDERLAND

From one amazing scene to another we are taken "Through the Canadian Rockies from Vancouver to Banff" (Educational Films Corporation). A two-hundred-foot cascade plunges down a rocky bed as narrow as a sluice; majestic Mount Baker in Washington is seen from a distance of fifty miles. Panoramas of calm lakes are followed by swift glimpses of noble peaks—Mount Cavell, Mount King, Mount Stephen Field. If one might venture a criticism on a beautiful picture, it is that too much is included, and too little of each, a common fault of pictures taken from a moving train.

GAME FOR ALL TASTES

If you have the real sporting instinct, there's no end to the variety of game you can bag. The Bray studios in their very lively Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 86 offer a choice of three—mallards, mediums and submarines. The succulent duck has for many years been a favorite victim, and we see the pains taken by those who hunt them on the Carolina coast. Wooden decoys, reed blinds, and a guide who can imitate their whistle must all be resorted to before the canny bird will come within rifle distance.

Hereward Carrington doesn't give away the successful method he used to detect frauds among professional mediums, but he certainly gives away the mediums in thoroughgoing fashion. A bit of false hair and a few yards of gauze will accomplish amazing results if a favorable "atmosphere" is created and not too much time given for investigation and reflection.

But the present "sport royal," or better, sport democratic, is trolling for submarines. We might tell you how it is done, but that would anticipate the interest and fun of Mr. Leventhal's clever drawings of Thomas Edison Lake's clever invention.

BEAUTY AND FUN FROM FRANCE

After all, is anything as good as the best of the Pathe educationals? After seeing the latest offerings of the Pathe Exchange, "Biarritz, the Fashionable" and "The Warblers of France," done in color, we felt, with all due admiration for the many fine scenics it is our pleasure to review, that the veteran still leads them all. There is in the Pathe foreign pictures evidence always of thought and care in the choice and handling of the subject. The scenes at Biarritz are not only strikingly beautiful; they are, we feel sure, the best possible scenes taken from the best possible viewpoint. Maxfield Parrish might well have got his inspiration from these distant glimpses of arching rocks and turretted islands.

A hungry nestling is a common phenomenon, but a nestling too proud to eat is a new actor on the screen. However, young Oswald Pewit, after suffering the pangs for dignity's sake, finally permits himself to be forcibly fed. These intimate views of the little French warblers are more than mere snapshots. They are painstaking studies, made by one with not only a knowledge of camera technique but with an eye and a feeling for the tender and amusing in the lives of our "little brothers of the air."

UGLY, TO BE SURE, BUT FASCINATING

I don't like kangaroos. They're monstrosities, with their great hind legs and tail and silly dangling fore feet, evolutionary by-products, children of the devil. But when Mr. Ditmars presents "Kangaroos" in a five-hundred-foot film (Educational Films Corporation), I confess I look at them with intense interest. The creatures are shown hopping and leaping; the female, with the young in her pouch, is pointed out. Various types of kangaroo are indicated; one, a tree-climbing variety, has lost the tail power possessed by his bounding brothers, but is endowed by way of compensation or evolution with front feet almost as well developed as hands.

Best of all is the giant wallaroo, who, in his anger, leaps again and again at his enemy with a force of impact that might well prove deadly did not a wire netting intervene between the powerful animal and his intended victim.

CALIFORNIA'S BUSY WEEK

Busy place, California. For one thing, it had to celebrate its sixty-seventh birthday as a real state (Mutual Weekly, No. 143) with a parade of marines and floats at Sacramento. Then it has its war duties —catching slackers, for instance. Only the California brand of slacker takes ship for Mexico and has to be overhauled on the high sea. Those who don't "slack" are putting their shoulders to the wheel in many strenuous ways. The motor cyclists of Los Angeles show what they can do over shell-torn areas in Europe by driving their machines down banks, over hurdles and through sand heavy enough, it would seem, to stall any engine.

Coming east, we find a spirited horse-race at Reno, Nev.; Newport entertaining the Japanese envoys, who pay a visit of respect to the tomb of Admiral Perry, and New York City dispatching troops and meditating fashions. Roomy, soft coats and luxurious brocaded evening wraps are promised, with quantities of fur on both.

AND STILL MATTY

Of course, baseball must give way to the one big interest of the day. So no patriot could object when, on the day scheduled for a big double-header, the ball grounds at Chicago were given over to manœuvres by soldiers and marines. But the baseball men were among those present just the same, and the cameraman (Universal Current Events, No. 20) caught several of the notables. "We forget the rest," but Matty was there!

There are heroes in humble life, and heroines. Mrs. Buttercup Jersey has recently presented her country with triplets. Mother and babies are seen in a lovely clover meadow, which is just the place where tiny calves should grow up.

Mlle. Gambarelli and her two associates symbolize through dance and tableau the joy of the weary Allies on welcoming their new sister Columbia as helpmate.

EVERYONE WORKS, INCLUDING THE LADYBUG

Even nursery rhymes must change in the spirit of the times. When you encounter a ladybug, don't pack her off home with the old admonition. Her place is out in the world, devouring the destructive aphides. Reel Life (Mutual), No. 74, shows colonies of these useful insects being distributed in a threatened field.

A creature whose purpose in nature seems limited to his own gratification is the lamprey. In a series of splendid and extremely interesting pictures we get an insight into the habits of the sucker eel, a close-up showing the circular mouth set with the sharp teeth which drive into the side of the victim.

Uncle Sam needs an official timekeeper and has appointed the United States Naval Observatory to the post. From its standard clock the time is taken by the transmitter clock, which by wireless indicates the second of noon to all the clocks of the Western Union.

Eyeglasses are the product of a fine skill. It is interesting to watch the deft hands of the man who grinds, tests and assembles these indispensable little instruments.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Short Features Exchange Gets Suffrage Films

Official pictures which are to be used in connection with the suffrage campaign conducted in the coming election by the New York Suffrage League have been acquired by the Short Features Exchange, whose offices are now located in the Godfrey Building. The pictures are one thousand feet long, and tell a unique story of what woman does to aid her country in time of war, as well as in time of peace. In the scenes presented women are seen at work in the fields, factories, home, Red Cross and, in fact, nearly every branch of endeavor known. For a finish the films show several scenes of a patriotic nature, proving that the gentler sex is as patriotic as the sterner sex. As a treatise on woman suffrage, the pictures are said to cover that subject in a complete manner. Through this medium the Suffrage Party hopes to convince the public they are worthy of the vote in the Empire State.

The New York State League of Woman Suffrage had the picture made through Charles J. Davis, well known in the independent field as a producer. After the picture had been made, a committee was appointed to have the picture released through a good exchange. Henry Ginsberg, manager of the Short Features Exchange, reports that he has been able to get the picture in twenty-five houses of the Marcus Loew Circuit for an extended run. Other bookings indicate that the picture is going big.

Berg Picks Sheer to Supervise Film

Harry Berg, of the Overland Film Company, has just secured a two-year contract with Barbara Castleton, who will appear in forthcoming Berg Productions.

"My idea in forming this new company is to produce pictures up to a certain standard, that is, so that they answer the qualifications of a real states rights production. For this reason, I have selected a star of Miss Castleton's popularity. She has an excellent record in the motion picture field, and has played in many notable successes. We are all convinced that she will become very popular with the exhibitors. Mr. George Sheer will personally supervise every feature that we turn out. A company has been selected which will render Miss Castleton the support that her work deserves.

Burnstein's Daughter in Film

The next release of the King-Bee Films Corporation following "The Chief Cook," released October 1, will be Billy West in "The Candy Kid." In this picture President Burstein has his daughter Naomi playing an important part.

Otis Skinner Enters Pictures Under Brenon

HERBERT BRENON announces the signing of Otis Skinner for his appearance in a screen version of "Kismet," the romantic stage play, by Edward Knoblock, in which Skinner made a hit in the role of Hajj, the wily and unscrupulous Oriental beggar. Mr. Skinner will assume the original part in the Brenon production.

Unusual interest is attached to the announcement since "Kismet" will mark Mr. Skinner's first appearance on the screen. Mr. Skinner was practically the last of America's big stage stars to remain unmoved by screen offers. Up to this week Mr. Skinner had always declined invitations to invade the silent drama.

A number of things have caused the star to reconsider his decision. Mr. Skinner has observed the steady advance of the photodrama, and he has been particularly impressed with the work of Mr. Brenon. "I watched his several productions of the Annette Kellermann fantasies," says Mr. Skinner, in discussing his entrance into films, "and I became interested in the man who has helped to invest the screen with the element of imagination. I have always longed to do Hajj in 'Kismet' for the motion picture camera, provided I could find a director who could bring out the elusive and fragile atmosphere of the East so vital to Mr. Knoblock's story. Recently the opportunity came to co-operate with Mr. Brenon, and I readily agreed to do a celluloid Hajj under his direction."

Mr. Brenon is equally enthusiastic over the signing of Mr. Skinner for the silent drama. "Mr. Skinner is not only rated by the critical authorities as America's foremost romantic player, but he is tremendously popular from coast to coast," says Mr. Brenon. "Like no other actor Mr. Skinner has always, through his long career, played not only the bigger cities, but the smaller 'one-night stands.' He has always been determined that it would be possible for every one to see him. He is no mere Broadway favorite. He is an actor of the old school, which meant playing—and pleasing—the small town as well as the Great White Way. This will prove of tremendous value with his first screen offering. It will bring an unprecedented demand from exhibitors from every city, town and hamlet in the country. Mr. Skinner's brilliant career will be his own screen press agent."

It required lengthy negotiations to secure "Kismet" for the screen. "Kismet" was originally produced by Harrison Grey Fiske and Klaw and Erlanger at the Knickerbocker theatre on Christmas night, 1911, causing one of the great dramatic sensations of the American stage. Previously, it had been a sensational London hit.

"Kismet" went a long way toward placing Mr. Skinner at the forefront of his profession. He had long been considered a foremost romantic actor of his decade, but it remained for his adroit and expressive characterization of the beggar, Hajj, in "Kismet" to reveal the great depth of his skill. His playing in "The Harvester," "The Duel," "The Honor of the Family," and other dramas faded before his playing of the unscrupulous mendicant. Mr. Skinner's splendidly drawn Hajj became his most noteworthy characterization in his whole brilliant gallery of stage portraits.

Test pictures indicate that Mr. Skinner is singularly fitted for the screen. His buoyant and exuberant personality, his picturesque style and graceful methods admirably fit themselves to the silent drama.

Mr. Brenon promises a sumptuous setting for Mr. Skinner's Hajj. "Kismet" offers wide opportunities to spectacular direction. As far as possible Mr. Brenon will surround the star with the members of the original stage cast. A young actress of striking charm and beauty has been selected for the leading feminine role of the beggar's daughter.

Three weeks ago Herbert Brenon purchased from Lewis J. Selznick, Mr. Selznick's entire interest in the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation, half of which was controlled by Mr. Brenon, the other half by Mr. Selznick. Mr. Brenon has taken over the entire stock, and has commenced making pictures in his studios at Hudson Heights, N. J.

Mr. Brenon has also secured the screen rights to "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," by Hall Caine.

Open Market Picture Buyers Exacting

With no market assured by contracts or advance deposits, the special open market picture depends for success strictly upon its merits, according to the view of Jules Burnstein, general representative for John W. Noble, who has just finished cutting and titling his first big feature, "Shame," produced under his own management for distribution on the open market.

"From the beginning the man who decides to produce for this market must remember that the standards by which his work will be measured are not only high but different from the program field," says Jules Burnstein. "The attitude of the men who gather to look at a first showing of a state rights offering gives an excellent cue to what is expected of the producer. They meet by invitation to look at a production which, from the fact of its mere existence, lays claim to their special consideration.

"They expect something out of the ordinary, and woe to the producer who does not give it to them. The director about to stage a special picture knows this and naturally makes a tremendous effort to meet the requirements. In most cases he does the best work of his career. In many instances his best work is not good enough and his production is a dismal financial failure. But if he be a recognized master of his art—a director who has many successful productions to his credit, the extra effort he is forced to put into his work while striving to meet the different requirements of his new field, is more than likely to be productive of good results."

Somborn on Trip for Howell Films

H. K. Somborn, geenral manager of the Longacre Distributing Company, distributors of Alice Howell's Century Comedies, recently left New York for a two months' tour of the Longacre exchanges. He plans to put in an appearance at the studio at Hollywood, California, toward the end of October, and then work back.

King-Bee Begins Publicity Drive

The King-Bee Films Corporation has started its national advertising campaign. On all the elevated and subway stations a very attractive one sheet of Billy West, its star comedian, will be found. This advertising is being handled by the Bee-Hive exchange, who have taken over the New York and Jersey state rights for all the Billy West comedies.

The company has grown so rapidly in the past two months that another suite of offices has been added.

New York Dailies Praise Brenon Picture

"THE FALL OF THE ROMANOFFS," Herbert Brenon's history-drama, had a successful premier at the Broadway, New York, on Sunday, September 23. Capacity audiences have greeted the production at each showing since the opening performance.

The newspaper comments were warm in their approval. A brief summary of the critical comments follows:

Tribune: "The Brenon picture was a mighty undertaking, which the director has carried through to a successful completion."

World: "Pictorially it has seldom been surpassed."

Morning Telegraph: "One of the most remarkable and noteworthy pictures of the year. Emphatically a stride forward in motion pictures."

Times: "The general effect is one of great realism and the film as a whole is grippingly interesting."

Sun: "Truth is not often so dramatic as fiction, but in this story of the most remarkable by-product of the war, all the essential historic and histrionic elements were present, awaiting only the skilled hand of a producer like Mr. Brenon to fuse them into the most impressive pictorial form."

Herald: "The picture drama, lavishly embellished with Russian atmosphere, has an almost startling effect of reality."

American: "It abounds in thrills, in spectacular scenes, in gripping situations. More than that, it is a very human story that could be understood by the humblest Russian peasant."

Evening Sun: "Is likely to have an extended success."

Evening World: "Engrossing—a motion picture that deserves popularity."

Evening Telegram: "It is destined to be one of the screen hits of the season. It is a gripping story, well photographed, well acted by those playing the leading roles, and directed by Mr. Brenon at his best."

Evening Mail: "Tremendously effective."

Globe: "It is gripping throughout in dramatic force and incident; it has a pretty love story developed in intimate relation to the leading motive; in physical portraiture, so far as public recognition is possible, it is remarkably successful; and pictorially it is a triumph of screen effect."

Alice Howell Back from Vacation

Alice Howell has returned from a short vacation in the California foothills to take up work on her next picture, the fifth of the two-reel Century Comedies in which she is starring. It will be a rural comedy.

Jack Blystone, her director, has been resting up from the last comedy too. In fact he is doing his directing in pantomime just at present as "Her Bareback Career" wore out his tonsils, necessitating their immediate condemnation and removal. Take it or not from the press agent, Director Blystone insisted that they interfered with the free play of his voice.

Art Dramas to Expand

Art Dramas, Inc., has decided to expand for the purpose of producing pictures on a greater scale, with stars of note in well-known plays and novels. The expansion is the result of the suggestion from the exchanges handling the subjects released by the company.

A. F. Beck, general manager, following the trade showing of "Behind the Mask," said:

"We are proud of the fact that our organization has consistently and steadily progressed through some of the most astounding changes of the motion picture industry. This subject we are showing is the thirty-fifth on our list of consecutive weekly releases. It marks the forty-second week of Art Drama activities. We have delivered cleanly, consistently and regularly exactly what we contracted to do in our very first announcement to the trade and exhibitors.

"We point with pride to the personnel of our affiliated exchangemen. From coast to coast we have efficient distributing organizations. We have cause to boast of our producers and executive officers who have guided and made it possible to successfully carry out our organization and plans. In one of our manufacturing plants, that of the U. S. Amusement Company at Fort Lee, N. J., at one time this summer we had working not only our own company for the regular Art Drama release but the Astra Company, making a Mrs. Vernon Castle feature and the Goldwyn Company on 'Polly of the Circus.'"

Russian Pictures Ready

The new pictures of the "Russian Revolution and Behind the Russian Battle Lines," recently purchased from the representative of the Skobeleff Committee, who brought these official reel-records from Russia, by the New Russia Film Company, and distributed by the Overland Film Company, are now ready to be shown to the public.

"After their presentation at the Rialto, New York, Samuel Krellberg, president of the Overland Film Company, felt that the pictures could be even better arranged and that nothing should be left undone to place a subject of this magnitude before American audiences in the clearest possible light," says an officer of the company. "Accordingly he engaged one of the most experienced film editors and title-men in the business, and placed the pictures entirely in his hands, with the result that the events are chronologically laid out according to the best authorities and the story of the titanic struggle carefully made clear. From twenty-four thousand feet of film, the editor has selected the choicest material and put it into eight reels of one thousand feet each."

Buys World Rights to Marine Production

Charles Rankin Buys All Rights to "Lorelei of the Sea"—Expects to Have Others for Coming Season

CHARLES RANKIN, 729 Seventh avenue, last week closed negotiations with M. Philip Hansen, of the Marine Film Company, for the United States and World's rights to "Lorelei of the Sea," which was shown to the trade several weeks ago and pronounced one of the best current independent productions. Mr. Rankin, although not so well known to the industry in the East, has been an active progressive in the West for some time. To him is given the credit for some of the biggest and most successful undertakings in the way of building up the motion picture industry on the Coast. Mr. Rankin has been in the East for several months and with the purchase of this production launches forth with his first big adventure since leaving the Coast.

In commenting upon the transaction, Mr. Rankin said:

"I believe I have obtained the rights to, if not the best, one of the cleanest and most entertaining production ever offered on the independent market. It is not an ordinary picture, but one that can boast of being a little different from all others. Its main points of interest are three in number—first, there are two stars shown in action, Tyrone Power and Frances Burnham, together with one of the best of juvenile stars, Ray Belasco; second, there is an unusual heart-interest story told, and lastly, the exterior scenes are some of the best I have ever seen on the screen. I sincerely believe that I have made no mistake in purchasing this production and am firmly convinced that the general public will be of the same opinion. This is the first of many big independent features which I will offer to the trade this season. The production will be extensively advertised before territory is disposed of and every effort will be made to cooperate with the exhibitor in bringing this picture before the public."

Rapf Offers "Struggle Everlasting"

Florence Reed, the legitimate star, who has delved into the realms of screenland with gratifying results, is seen off the camera line reading her part in the new stage spectacle, "Chu Chin Chow," in which she will star at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, in October. Miss Reed is now dividing her time between "Chu Chin Chow" rehearsals and acting in Harry Rapf's new screen production of Edwin Milton Royle's allegorical play, "The Struggle Everlasting," which has been adapted to the screen with Bennett Musson as collaborater, aided by James Kirkwood as director.

The cameraman has caught Miss Reed in the costume in which she portrays the role of Body, in "The Struggle Everlasting." Miss Reed is practically living at the Biograph Studio, in the Bronx, where her new photoplay is undergoing completion for release on the open market plan on November 1. Around Miss Reed are such players as Milton Sills, Irving Cummings, E. J. Radcliff, Edwin Hoyt, Albert Hall and Wellington Platter. Miss Reed's role of Body, which as the part suggests, is allegorical, is strongly emotional in nature, and Miss Reed is drawing all her resources into her work.

General Enterprises, Inc., Moves

Owing to the volume of business developed in the disposition of territorial privileges for "The Warrior," the seven-part film sensation starring Maciste, "strong man of the screen," Messrs. A. H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin announce the removal of their headquarters to the Longacre Building, at 1476 Broadway, New York.

An extensive suite of offices occupying a large part of the eleventh floor has been especially fitted up for the accommodation of General Enterprises, Inc., and several innovations in the way of modern business appliances have been installed under the direction of an efficiency engineer.

The taking over of the new offices has also been necessitated by the establishment of new departments under the direction of Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin. Chief among these is a foreign film department, under the supervision of M. R. Fink, and it is the intention of General Enterprises, Inc., to devote serious attention to this branch of the motion picture industry. A complete exploitation and advertising bureau in charge of Bert Ennis will take care of the publicity for the various interests handled by the firm. Harry G. Kosch, attorney for General Enterprises, Inc., will also have his offices in the new suite in the Longacre Building, which is in line with Mr. Sawyer's idea of having all of the executive departments closely co-ordinated.

Two Road Companies for "Warrior"

Globe Films, Ltd., of Toronto, Canada, which controls the Canadian rights to "The Warrior," starring Maciste, announced last week that two road shows for the purpose of presenting the film spectacle in all of the prominent theatres of the Dominion have been organized.

Under the direction of Bert Lubin, brother of Herbert Lubin of General Enterprises, Inc., a traveling "Warrior" company will tour the western part of Canada, while another organization presenting the seven-part feature will cover the eastern territory. Extensive preparations for advance billing and country-wide exploitation prior to the initial presentation are now under way under the supervision of Phil Kauffman, vice-president of Globe Films, Ltd.

The Ex-Czar Is Getting Plenty of Publicity These Days. These Scenes Are From "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs," and Export and Import Film Production

All Baseball Players in This Film

THE latest entrant into the open market field is Marty McHale, former well-known big league baseball pitcher, who is sponsor for the five-part novelty feature, "The Baseball Revue of 1917," released by the Athletic Film Company. In conjunction with Tris Speaker, mainstay of the Cleveland Baseball Club, McHale is offering for the inspection of independent buyers a film oddity woven around the personalities and professional life of the player celebrities of both major leagues.

The picture is unique in the fact that every star appearing on the baseball diamond today is intimately photographed. Prominent figures in the baseball world who play leading roles in "The Baseball Revue of 1917" are Tris Speaker, Ty Cobb, "Home Run" Baker, Benny Kauff, John J. McGraw, "Miracle Man" Stallings, Walter Johnson, Heinie Zimmerman, and a host of diamond luminosities whose names are household words in the home of the average American.

"The film has an appeal not only to the innumerable ball fans of this country, but has been so produced and titled as to divert and entertain screen audiences of a mixed nature," said an officer of the company. "The production was directed by Tom MacEvoy, who has been affiliated with the largest companies in the business, both as an actor and director. Arthur 'Bugs' Baer, famous sporting writer and columnist, whose stories appear daily in the New York Evening World, has a prepared a special set of titles for the feature, written in a semi-humorous vein and which are veritable 'Fables in baseball' in themselves."

"The Baseball Revue of 1917" contains among other things, some excellent views of President Wilson in attendance at the World Series Games. The picture should prove most popular with exhibitors, inasmuch as the present World Series Games will be contested early next month, and McHale's offering presents all of the players who will appear so prominently before the public and in the press at that time.

Booklet for "Warrior"

As an adjunct to the extensive exploitation material which has been prepared to assist the showman in the proper presentation of "The Warrior," Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., are now issuing a novel advertising booklet done in two colors with a four-page insert setting forth the merits of the screen spectacle of the Italian battle front.

The booklet also contains a resume of the newspaper and trade paper criticisms and deals comprehensively with the line of paper which has been made for "The Warrior" by the Erie Lithograph Company. It has considerable "advertising punch" in its make-up and is one of the most attractive folders seen in some time. General Enterprises, Inc., also have in course of preparation an elaborate eight-page press book, edited by Bert Ennis. This will contain program and newspaper material; a lay-out of the available cuts, exploitation hints and complete musical setting prepared by M. Winkler.

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" Sold to S. Cummings

Samuel Cummings, the motion picture representative of 1476 Broadway, New York, has secured from the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation the production, "Enlighten Thy Daughter" for Washington, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia. Mr. Cummings expects to open up permanent headquarters in the territory shortly and will personally supervise the arrangement in putting on the production there.

Raver Issues Brochure for "Public Defender"

A brochure descriptive of Harry Raver's screen production, "The Public Defender," is announced ready for distribution. The book consists of eight pages of artistically laid out type matter, is printed in three colors and contains numerous illustrations. These illustrations run all the way from cartoons on the "Public Defender" movement, which have appeared in the hundreds of big newspapers supporting the plan the picture advocates, to reproductions of the more important scenes from the play.

Sketches of the careers of the three stars seen in the leading roles of "The Public Defender"—Frank Keenan, Alma Hanlon and Robert Edeson, interesting sidelights on the production, from the producer's angle, and other pertinent details relative to the film as an entertainment, are presented in an attractive and interesting manner.

"The Public Defender," as presented by Harry Raver, is based on the book of the same name by Mayer Goldman, a prominent New York attorney and the man responsible for the inauguration of the movement, to give the poor an equal chance with the rich and powerful in our courts of justice. The screen presentation represents the combined work of Mayer C. Goldman and Frank W. Harris Frederick Rath made the adaptation, his final effort, by the way, before joining the army, Mr. Rath now learning the rudiments of the soldier's trade in one of Uncle Sam's encampments "somewhere in America."

The method by which "The Public Defender" will be marketed, contrary to all rumors regarding its distribution, has not as yet been decided on.

Blumenthal in Suit Over "Romanoffs"

"The Tryanny of the Romanoffs," with Iliodor, a picture which Ben Blumenthal is offering, is passing through a litigation stage, which Mr. Blumenthal thinks will be brief.

A competing concern having a picture concerning the Romanoffs, who state they have a contract with Iliodir for his exclusive services, is trying to prevent the release of this picture, but as Mr. Blumenthal states that he was not a party to this contract and had no knowledge of the "exclusive services" provided therein, the courts will not interfere.

Mr. Blumenthal claims that the Iliodor contract was so unreasonable and appressive that the courts will not enforce it.

Klotz on Western Tour

Joseph S. Klotz, of Klotz and Streimer, left New York last week to stop at Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, Kansas City and Cleveland, to close for the respective territories and at the same time make arrangements for the handling of future releases.

Mr. Klotz has closed contracts with John Kunsky Enterprises for the state of Michigan, and with the Jake Wells Enterprises for North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee. Both Kunsky and Wells hold charters in the first National Exhibitors' Association.

Deposits Are Necessary, Says Max Wintroub

"Contract Without Deposit and No Booking Date Is Not Worth Paper It Is Written On," He Says

OPPONENTS of the deposit system must sooner or later come face to face with such problems as are causing Max Wintroub, head of the Fontenelle Feature Film Company, states rights dealers of Omaha, Neb., to lose a lot of sleep. Mr. Wintroub, who recently invested a lot of money in film business and who has not been in it long enough to get the inborn prejudice exchange managers have against opponents of the deposit system, makes these startling deductions from experience:

A contract with a deposit is worth 90 per cent. of its face value.

A contract without a deposit but with a date of booking is worth 10 per cent. of its face value.

A contract without a deposit and without a date of booking is not worth the paper it is written on.

"For instance," he exclaimed, "to-day I got a cancellation before my road man had sent me the contract. The answer? Some other road man had called on the exhibitor and convinced him his proposition was better than mine." Here Mr. Wintroub launched into an exciting recital of numerous instances where exhibitors had treated contracts as "mere scraps of paper." He named towns, theatres and exhibitors in person, and these covered many large as well as small towns.

"But all exhibitors are not like that, understand, and their reasons for cancelling are not always unfair. Some are just.

"But when my road man, costing me $10 for every stop, brings in $137 worth of business, and only $57 worth of that proves up to contract, then I'm ready to say there is something radically wrong with the business.

"Loss of the deposit system means this: The small exchange man like me will be driven out of the business, the big men will get it all, and the exhibitors will have to pay."

Mr. Wintroub says his road men have instructions to get deposits where they can, but not to forfeit a contract, even if they have to do without a deposit.

"Democracy" from Blumenthal

"Democracy" has been a much used theme in the Fall motion picture productions. The present world war naturally has offered tremendous inspiration for this type of picture, and producers are carrying the idea to the limit in all varieties of releases.

One of the most recent of this kind put upon the market is "The Birth of Democracy," released by the Export and Import Film Company, Inc. Ben Blumenthal, president of that organization, has held several private showings for the benefit of various critics.

The story deals with that period of the French Revolution, which has come to be known as the "Reign of Terror," and shows the final winning of liberty through the sacrifice of the French people. All the famous characters and incidents of the time are portrayed to the life—the tumbrels on the way to the guillotine, the tribunal where accusation means death, and lastly the portentious scenes in the Convention, depicting the fall of the tyrant Robespierre and the end of the reign of terror which had plunged all France into a bloody nightmare. Throughout all this is entwined a love story of fascinating detail.

A feature of the picture is the titling. The producers have tried to show the historical significance throughout, and also to show how this great struggle for liberty is paralleled in our own time.

Slapstick in Demand, Says Binney

A visitor in New York last week was Mr. Harold J. Binney, the president and director general of the Masterpictures Company, producers of the new Lion Comedies. Mr. Binney arrived in the metropolis last Friday after a four days' trip from Houston, accompanied by Judge Charles Taylor of the same city. Mr. Taylor is secretary of the Masterpictures Company, and incidentally its legal representative.

Mr. Binney came to New York to conclude business arrangements with the A. Kay Company, who are the universal distributors of the Lion Comedies; and also to find out how his product was taking to the market. The former was transacted without any apparent delay, and the latter, Mr. Binney was glad to learn, were bringing in the desired results.

Mr. Binney brought with him the latest Lion Comedy, entitled "The Account of a No-Account Count." This comedy was screened for the executive staff of the A. Kay Company, and met with approval.

Mr. Binney says: "I came to New York for the purpose of closing a new contract with the A. Kay people. I also came to find out how the Lion Comedies were making out. In connection with the latter, I am glad to say that the reports are most favorable, and this indicates that Lion Comedies are filling a long felt want in the independent field. My pictures are all of a slapstick nature, and I have found in personal contact with over three thousand exhibitors that good slapstick is in great demand."

B. H. Mills Organizes Open Market Company

B. H. Mills, formerly affiliated with numerous theatres and motion picture concerns throughout the country, and at one time a producer of comedies for release on the Mutual Program, has incorporated under the laws of New York state the Elk Photo Plays, Inc., to handle subjects sold in the open market. The address of the new company is 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

Conservation of Film Costs Necessary, Says Key

THE conservation of film costs, so that rentals are possible on the basis of sane prices, is being advocated by P. V. R. Key, of the Hoffman-Foursquare Company, New York City. He says that unless this is observed the business is sure to suffer a shrinkage of output. Mr. Key says:

"Fair prices must always be had, prices commensurate with the value of motion picture product. But once the safety-point in prices is passed the danger period arrives. That period is now present, and it behooves the constructive element in the industry to heed the signal.

"Big volume in film sold and rented has turned the heads of many concerns in the trade. This volume, increasing bit by bit, has created a situation incorrectly diagnosed by those who fail to look far enough ahead for the turns that are ever arising in this most sensitive of all industries.

"To-day the industry is face to face with conditions that require the most delicate treatment to prevent losses to producers and distributors on the one side, the exhibitors on the other.

"As for the small motion picture theatres, the raising of admission prices made compulsory by the rise in rentals has sent their patrons to more desirable theatres. And as this has occurred the motion picture theatres of the next grade above have lost patronage to those of the next grade above.

"The remedy lies in the elimination of waste in production; of curtailment of large salaries to so-called executives which are unearned; of a united stand against paying prohibitive salaries to stars, salaries which cannot be earned, and of inexperienced capital pausing before plunging into senseless extravagance."

"Automaniacs" Is Popular

"Automaniacs," the second of the new Century Comedies, in which Alice Howell seems to be achieving a reputation as a comedienne of no small promise, has been released by the Longacre Distributing Company, sole distributors for this series of two-reel farces.

As in the case of any farce-comedy in motion pictures, particularly those with a touch of the burlesque, a synopsis of the action reads like so much Chinese, and conveys just about as much idea of what the piece itself really is like. "Automaniacs," for instance, places Alice Howell, with all her fondness for 'slavey" make-ups, as a helper in her stepfather's garage; and being in love with a machinist, who, in turn, is lured away by a vampire, Alice naturally tries suicide by gas.

The scene in which she inflates and floats away through the roof is said to be funny. Alice has a pretty poor time of it all the way through, although she finally does attain a measure of revenge.

"Tarzan of the Apes" Company Back from Jungle

William Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation, now producing a picturization of Edgar Rice Burroughs' novel, "Tarzan of the Apes," returned to Los Angeles last week from New York, where he spent a week on business connected with the company.

Three days after his arrival, the entire producing organization, which has been engaged for the past two months in filming jungle scenes in Louisiana under the direction of Scott Sidney, also returned to the Hollywood studio, having completed a period of hardship which has probably never been equalled by any other American company in the production of moving pictures.

The scenes taken in Louisiana, near Morgan City, were made in an almost impenetrable jungle, so thickly grown that progress was only possible after a path had been cut through the forest by negroes.

President Parsons has leased the Los Angeles studio of the E. and R. Jungle Film Company, where animal scenes will be put on under Director Martin of the Selig forces. At the National Studio, in Hollywood, sets are being erected under the supervision of Director Sidney for the "civilized" portion of the production, the principal set being a big interior of an English tap room. Players are now being engaged for this portion of the story and production will be taken up within ten days.

Card Buys Franchise

L. S. Card, formerly with the Civilization Film Corporation of Newark, N. J., and now President and General Manager of the L. S. Card Booking Corporation, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City, has purchased the New Jersey franchise for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

The company has the Chaplin specials for the coming year and the Petrova productions which are now ready for booking.

Help the Exhibitor, Hoffman Slogan

Service to the exhibitor by selling him at a reasonable price pictures with a box office angle, and continued aid in suggested publicity methods likely to promote patronage, are the aims of M. H. Hoffman, president and general manager of the Hoffman-Foursquare exchanges.

"Ready-made advertising material may be counted on to assist the majority of exhibitors," explained P. V. R. Key, sales manager, "but there are always instances where special copy must be prepared to secure all the patronage possible from a given territory.

"Striving to aid as completely as we can, the home office of Hoffman-Foursquare will assist every exhibitor in every way possible, not alone in New York, but in the various exchanges located in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis, Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati, and Pittsburg."

Beatriz Michelena's Next Is Titled "Just Squaw"

Beatriz Michelena, at Boulder Creek, Cal., says she has completed all photographic work on "The Dead Line," the first of the Western features to be produced by her company. Work has begun upon her second picture, entitled "Just Squaw."

The new photodrama gets its name from one of the inserts which marks a distinct turn in the plot. It reads, "She is just squaw an' fair game." The manuscript has been prepared especially for the star by Earle Snell, author also of "The Dead Line," and is being directed by George E. Middleton.

Andrews Manager in Montana

The Film Library and Exchange, 731 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn., has opened an office in the Babcock Theatre Building, Billings, Montana, and appointed L. F. Andrews manager. Mr. Andrews is very well known in that part of the country, having represented "The Birth of a Nation," "Spoilers," "Civilization," and other productions of the same nature.

He is thoroughly acquainted with not only the Montana territory but the Dakotas, Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Business Conditions Satisfactory, Says Ryan

PHIL L. RYAN, sales manager of the Standard Film Corporation, Kansas City, Mo., who is now making a trip over the territory served by the Standard, with the Billy West Comedies, Art Dramas and the Christie Comedies, declares that business conditions coming under his observation are, everything considered, satisfactory.

"Now that we are really getting into the war," said Mr. Ryan, "there is almost certain to be a temporary slacking up in the business done by both the exhibitor and the exchange. But this will only exist for a short time, until the people have adjusted themselves to the fact that friends and relatives whom they have been accustomed to seeing are helping the cause of liberty in stricken Europe.

"It is a fact that at the outset of the war this temporary slacking up of business was experienced by the English and French motion picture houses, but, even before the publication of the first casualty list, the theatres reported increasing volumes of business which the more observing attributed to the desire of the people to forget their fears and war-time worries—and in this connection many noted the extreme popularity of film plays of the strongly dramatic type, in which the theme of pathos was heavily played upon. Comedies were more popular than ever.

"In a way, the war has brought about a keener critical sense for the photoplay in England and France. The cheap, tawdry production grated upon the nerves of the atregoers, and in many cases audiences became so iritated that they called upon the theatre manager in a body and informed him of their frank opinion of his taste in the matter of photoplays—and often in other things as well. Before the war such cheap productions were accepted quietly by the movie fans, arousing, of course, a certain amount of indignation, but indignation of a tolerant mildly amused variety.

"Above all things, however, I am convinced that the public wants bigger, better productions—productions in the making of which money is not only spent freely, but which possess something which has been sadly overlooked in motion pictures—real stories, genuinely consistent plots of the not overworked variety. There has been too much of the hash-and-serve methods employed in the making of motion pictures. Such productions are insults to American intelligence, and popular opinion is going to force them from the screen. A glance back over the features of the past year hardly brings to mind more than forty productions worthy of being called plays. And there have been a number of really superb actors, notably Henry B. Walthall, who have almost achieved obscurity on account of the lack of suitable parts and suitable plays. I most certainly look to the next twelve months to make photoplay history, when with much more good material to work from, these actors too will recover themselves.

Five States Sold for Educational

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, announces that he has closed the following territories on his scenic, educationals and the Ditmars animal pictures "The Living Book of Nature." Isaac Rosenthal of Seattle, Wash., has obtained the states of Oregon, Washington, Montana, while the states of Minnesota and Wisconsin have been secured by the Walter A. Baier Film Company, of Milwaukee, Wis.

Maciste, the Roman Giant, Who Displayed Such Remarkable Cleverness In His Last Film, "The Warrior," Was Recently Killed In Action During a Charge. "The Warrior" Is Released By General Enterprises, Inc.

McClure Buys "Mother"

McClure Pictures will release "Mother," founded on Eden Philpott's novel, "A Mother of Dartmoor." The picture stars Elizabeth Risdon and was directed by George Loane Tucker. It was produced in England, in the country in which the scenes of "Lorna Doone" and "Westward Ho" are laid.

Elizabeth Risdon, who makes her appearance this week on the American stage as leading lady in William Faversham's production of Shaw's play, "Misalliance," and who starred in Mr. Tucker s production of "The Manx-Man," plays the title part in "Mother."

Ives, in a series of scenes in a moonlit forest, is discovered poaching. He flies to his home and succeeds in hiding his stolen game, but his mother, for her boy's salvation, makes a supreme sacrifice of her pride and feelings, and reveals him as the culprit. Ives goes off to prison with curses on his lips and leaves the mother brooding over the words he hurls back at her, "You are not fit to bear the name of 'mother.'" Ives swears he will not return home after he is free and the scene in which his mother waits for his footsteps on the night he leaves the prison is one of the most touching that has ever been screened. The mother's love triumphs at last and the hard spirit of the son bends to the gentle influence of the heart that never lost faith.

Wolfberg Buys "Today," "Mad Lover" and "Peggy"

The Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, Pittsburgh, has bought "To-Day," "The Mad Lover" and "Persuasive Peggy" for Ohio, W. Virginia and western Pennsylvania.

"To-day," with Florence Reed in the stellar role, is reported by Pathe, to have brought a record price. It is an adaptation from the much discussed drama by George Broadhurst and Abraham Schomer, which scored a long run in New York.

"The Mad Lover," with Robert Warwick, "fathered" by Harry Rapf, is a picture that has received much praise. He is supported by Elaine Hammerstein.

"Among those who told me these pictures ranked with the best pictures," said Rapf, when interviewed shortly after the production of the pictures, "were R. A. Rowland, president of Metro; Louis Mayer, of Boston; Samuel Goldfish, B. M. Moss, Marcus Loew, John D. Williams, Margaret Mayo, Edgar Selwyn, Harold Edel and Wid Gunning."

"Persuasive Peggy," the third acquisition of the Wolfberg Exchange is the first of the Peggy Hyland series to be produced by the Mayfair Company.

M. A. Schlesinger, president of the company, in selling the picture to Harris P. Wolfberg, made the statement that there would be issued shortly an interesting announcement concerning Wolfberg's connection with the distribution of Mayfair productions.

"The Italian Battle Front" Goes on Tour

Picture Will Be Given Metropolitan Presentation in Legitimate Theatres in Leading Cities from Coast to Coast

WILLIAM MOORE PATCH, of the Fort Pitt Theatre Company, announces plans for presentation of "The Italian Battle Front" in principal cities of the country. The production will be routed in the same manner as was "The Birth of the Nation" when first presented, and will be invested with the same musical and atmospheric effects that contributed so largely to its successful showing at the Forty-fourth Street theatre, New York.

The picture has already played in New York for four weeks, in Chicago for three, Boston and Pittsburgh for two weeks each, and one week in both Buffalo and Newark. Among the other cities scheduled for similar showing are Norfolk, Richmond, Atlanta, Birmingham, Savannah, Little Rock, New Orleans, Dallas, Houston, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Sacramento, Seattle, Spokane, Portland, Salt Lake City, Denver, Des Moines, Indianapolis, Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Kansas City and Minneapolis.

The picture will be played in each of these cities at the same prices as obtained in New York, from 25 cents to $2. The production will carry its own scenic effects, orchestra leaders, managers, advance men and the necessary stage crews.

Showings in these cities will be the legitimate theatres, and not until this tour is completed will the film be available for bookings in motion picture houses. Names of the distributors are to be announced as each one of these cities mentioned is played.

Nothing to Criticize

The Consolidated Film and Supply Company, Atlanta, Ga., says:

"We have no criticism to make of your state rights department. It strikes us that it is being well conducted."

"Three C" Production Under Way

The work of producing the Three C Comedies for release through the General Film Company is now well under way by the Commonwealth Comedy Company, Inc. The first four releases have already been announced. The staging and acting in these subjects are said to set a high standard which will be followed in all of the forthcoming productions of this company. The work of Lou Marks, Pearl Shepard and Oom Paul is evidence that these comedians will continue to be popular favorites with the public, according to the belief of the company.

The first releases and the principals featured are: "His Watery Waterloo," Lou Marks; "Fat and Foolish," Hughey Mack; "A Harem Romance," Lou Marks, Pearl Shepard and Oom Paul; "His Winning Ways," Lou Marks, Pearl Shepard and Oom Paul.

President Joseph S. Klein promises another set of these one-reel comedies soon.

Contrary to first blush, this is not a "good-bye—good luck—and God bless you!" handshake. It merely shows Reginald Barker signing a contract with Robert T. Kane, whereby he will guide Bessie Barriscale over the dramatic hurdles in forthcoming Paralta Plays

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

THE Christie Film Company which has been conducted for more than a year as a partnership consisting between Albert Christie and Charles E. Christie, was taken over Monday, September 24th, by a newly organized California Corporation, capitalized at $100,000 and known as The Christie Film Company. Al. Christie is president, Chas. H. Christie, treasurer and general manager, and F. L. Porter, vice-president and secretary. Others of the five directors are M. Christie and L. J. Hubine. A majority of the shares of stock of the new corporation are held by Al. E. and Charles H. Christie. It is stated the forming of a corporation will in no way change the business of the institution, other than to make it more convenient for the handling of the affairs of the organization.

Fifteen Months Record

The Christie Film Company was organized in January of 1916, and immediately began the filming of comedies for Universal Program. Following three months of this, the Christie Company accepted a franchise on the Mutual, and made a number of releases. About fifteen months ago, Messrs. Al. and Charles Christie, both came to believe that the open market offered an excellent opportunity for their film which since have been sold on the independent market, and today the Christie Company has the distinction of being the only film producing organization that has made and released one single reel picture every week for the past fifteen months. At the present time the Christie Comedies are shown in practically every film territory of the country, where they are bought and handled by independent exchanges.

Charles H. Christie, business manager of the Christie Film Company, is spending a week in San Francisco in company with E. H. Emmick, president of Peerless Film Exchange with branches in San Francisco, and another in Los Angeles. The Peerless handles the Christie Comedies in California, Nevada and Arizona territory.

To Add New Company

Miss Betty Compson has returned from a month's vacation and was immediately put to work by Director Al. Christie in a beach comedy titled "Their Seaside Tangle," in which she had Lois Leslie, Jay Belasco and "Smiling" Billy Mason as members of her supporting company. This comedy being completed, Director Christie has begun the filming of "Nearly a Papa," written by Robert McGowan. The story concerns a husband who from a telegram thinks he has become a father. Upon his arrival home he thinks there are two, but eventually finds there are none. The principals are Jay Balesco, Ethyl Lynne, Lucille Pietz and Lois Leslie.

At the Christie studio it is hinted that an additional producing unit will shortly be added. The cause for the remarks is the activity in preparing a large stage which has not been in use for several weeks. Together with this it is learned that a former Christie star has recently returned to Los Angeles and is to appear in an early release.

Marin Sais and Tom Mix Team

The producing forces at the William Fox studio will not be diminished even though R. A. Walsh, director, and his brother, George, accompanied by Cameraman Dal Clawson, have gone East to work at the Fox plant, as negotiations were closed this week whereby Tom Mix will produce five reel subjects of a Western character. Mix will play the leads himself, and opposite him will be Marin Sais, who appeared in the two series of "Stingaree" pictures made by Kalem, and a number of other Western subjects. Mix has been in comedy for the past several months, and finished his most recent Sunshine for the Fox program this week under the supervision of Lahrman. Story is now being prepared for the new producing unit.

No information is given out at the studio concerning the intentions of R. A. Walsh during his stay in the East. The party consisted of Studio Manager A. Carlos, R. A. and George Walsh, Scenario Writer Ralph Spence, and Dal Clawson, cameraman, who has photographed a number of the recent Walsh productions. The company may remain in the East for more than one picture.

Theda Bara Resting

Production on "The Mikado" was discontinued this week owing to the death of the father of S. A. and C. M. Franklin, which occurred Tuesday morning.

The Theda Bara Company is not working at present as Director J. Gordon Edwards is now engaged in editing "The Red Rose," the photoplay of Russian royal life.

"Responsibility," the Fox play which will introduce Miss Enid Markey as star on this program, will be completed within a few days by Director Richard Stanton. This is the story of a woman pressed hard by environment who believes she is the victim of tragedy but retains her purity of mind and soul.

Bertram Bracken will during the coming week begin the making of a new subject starring Gladys Brockwell, "Conscience" having been completed and shipped to the Eastern laboratories. In "Conscience," Miss Brockwell is said to have portrayed five different types of women.

"Wedding Bells and Roaring Lions," is the title given the Lehrman-made Sunshine Comedy which is now completed. Mildred Lee is one of the featured players of this.

Varied Ince Activities

Thomas H. Ince feels certain he has made a find in securing Doris Lee, who makes her leading lady debut playing opposite Charley Ray in "His Mother's Boy." She has played bits at many of the Los Angeles studios, but it remained for Ince to see possibilities in Miss Lee, and from her success in this Ray picture there is every reason, Mr. Ince believes, that she will become extremely popular. Others in the big cast of this oil well district story laid in the town of Centiped, Texas, are Billy Elmer, James Swickard, Jerome Storm, Gertrude Claire and Lydia Knott.

Thomas H. Ince has renamed the Mabel Normand studio recently leased "William S. Hart Studio," and it is here that the Western bad man and his cowboys will make interiors for future photoplays. The desert story now being made by Hart has not been named, but this Thomas H. Ince production for Artcraft will have a desert atmosphere and is said to be filled with thrilling Western situations of a new type for Hart subjects. Vola Vale is playing the feminine lead.

Charles Ray as Small Town Boy

"The Price Mark," Ince production for Paramount, starring Dorothy Dalton, has been completed. This is a two-period picture combining Oriental or Egyptian life with a New York atmosphere. Director Roy Neill is said to have secured some very exceptional desert "stuff."

A new play has been written for Miss Dalton by Shannon Fife, noted writer and dramatist, and will be a modern costume play.

A new Charles Ray photoplay is ready for production. It gives him the role of a New England boy, and is from the pen of Julien Josephson, a free-lance writer recently engaged by Thomas H. Ince.

Begin Next Fairbanks Picture

The Douglas Fairbanks company arrived home early this week from New York, and are now at work on the next release, temporarily at least, titled "Reaching for the Moon." The story is an original one by Mr. Fairbanks, adapted for the screen by Anita Loos and John Emerson. Eileen Percy is playing the lead opposite Fairbanks in this subject, and other members of the cast will be made known shortly.

Artcraft principals supporting Geraldine Farrar in her second Artcraft production, now completed by Cecil B. deMille, are Wallace Reid, Tully Marshall, Hobart Bosworth, James Neill, H. B. Carpenter, Lillian Leighton, Mabel Van Buren, Ernest Joy, Guy Oliver and others. The subject is now being edited and its completion will mark the begininng of a vacation for Director General Cecil B. deMille. Hobart Bosworth has gone East, and it is probable he will shortly appear on the Orpheum circuit in a one-act sketch taken from scenes of the Jack London story, "The Sea Wolf." It will be remembered that "The Sea Wolf" was the first Bosworth, Inc., production. Mr. Bosworth has written the sketch himself.

Half Year More in West for Mary

For the past several days there has been a persistent rumor that Miss Pickford, accompanied by her director, Marshall Neilan, and scenario writer, Frances Marion, would go East for the making of future productions upon the completion of "The Little Princess," the last scene of which will be shot the first of the week, but this is denied by those familiar with the facts of the case. At the producing studio it is said Miss Pickford will remain on the West Coast for at least seven months more, which means she will remain here for the making of all pictures for the remainder of the time of her present contract. Miss Marion now has two scenarios prepared for production, but it is undecided which will be made first.

During the past week Miss Pickford became the godmother of 600 California soldiers who left their training camps, and presented each with a gold locket containing her picture. Formal adoption ceremonies were held when companies D, E, and F, of San Diego, Oakland and Los Angeles, respectively, of the Second Battalion of the First Regiment of the California Field Artillery assembled in Los Angeles and spent several days at Camp Arcadia. Miss Pickford gave the soldiers a promise that she would see that they did not want for tobacco or candy during their army career.

Neilan in National Army

Marshall Neilan, one of the members of the Los Angeles film colony to be selected by the draft, has passed the physical examination and will leave Los Angeles the latter part of the month for training camp. Without a doubt, the last picture to be made by Mr. Neilan with Miss Pickford is "The Little Princess," the concluding scenes of which are now being made. Mr. Neilan has been in pictures for the past four or five years, his first work being with the Biograph under D. W. Griffith. From there he became comedy director and was selected to play the lead by the Jesse L. Lasky Company, and later became the leading man for Mary Pickford. Following this, Mr. Neilan directed several pictures in the East for the Famous Players and others at Chicago for the Selig Company. From the latter organization he went to the Lasky studio as director, and early this year was selected to direct Miss Pickford, following several months of very successful work in the direction of Lasky stars. At the Hollywood studios, where Pickford subjects are being made, Mr. Neilan is considered a most capable director with a very bright future.

What Tantalizes Us Is, Why Was Texas Guinan Named Texas? She Shines Forth From Triangle Screens

Allen Dwan is reported on his way to the Coast as one of the directors for Douglas Fairbanks. He will be accompanied by Arthur Rosen, who will serve as his. ??? John Emercon is to continue directing Fairbanks alternately with Dwan. By this means one director can be editing a film or preparing a script while scenes for another subject are being made.

Horsley Star Recuperating

Mary MacLaren, who several weeks ago was injured seriously in an automobile accident, was this week able to leave the hospital and her physician says she will be able to resume work about October 1. Hearing of Miss MacLaren's suit against the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the right to use the name Mary MacLaren is set for October 5, and it is very probable the actress will not resume work for David Horsley until after the hearing of this suit.

The David Horsley Cub Comedy Company is at work on the 111th Jerry subject, which has been titled "Jerry and the Vampire." This was written by James Dalton and, like previous Cub releases, has George Ovey as the feature comedian.

David Horsley has arranged for two animal acts in vaudeville during the present season. Vera Robison, one of the original Bostock trainers, is now tutoring six large lions for an act which will play thirty-two weeks over Pantages circuit on the West Coast and in Canada, and Cort Teitz is preparing to leave with an elephant act for another circuit. The animals in these two acts are not included in the sale of the Bostock animals to the United States Circus Corporation which was recently completed by Mr. Horsley.

To Make Dressler Comedies in West

Future releases of Marie Dressler Company on the Goldwyn Program will be made in Los Angeles according to plans made known this week when Miss Dressler, accompanied by her director, J. H. Dalton, arrived in Los Angeles and leased space for producing purposes at the David Horsley Studios on Main street. The first of the Marie Dressler pictures for Goldwyn was completed in the East, and now it is the plan to make all of the other seven subjects for the present here in Los Angeles. Miss Dressler was accompanied by the entire producing staff, and she has taken a beautiful residence in Hollywood where she will reside during the period she spends in California.

William Russell, Director Edward Sloman; Francelia Billington, leading woman, and the entire William Russell Company of the American studios at Santa Barbara are spending a week in Los Angeles to make exterior scenes of a comedy-drama by Charles H. Dasey, titled "A Night in New York."

Fourth Vita Company Coming

Studio Manager W. S. Smith, of the Vitagraph Hollywood plant, is daily expecting advise from New York telling of another

Vitagraph Company being started for the coast. At the present but one company will come West to work at the Hollywood Studio in addition to the present forces, but it is expected that additional producing units will come to Los Angeles shortly.

Three companies are now at work at the Vitagraph plant. William Duncan is on the fourth episode of the new serial, "Vengeance and the Woman," in which Carl Halloway shares honors. The William Wolbert Company, including Mary Anderson and Alfred Whitman, continue on "John Burt," and David Smith is directing the filming of additional O. Henry stories.

Lois Weber Production Unnamed

Members of the Lois Weber Productions producing organization left Wednesday of this week on a special train for Arizona, where mining scenes will be written for the next production, which will have Mildred Harris, Clara Whipple, William Stowell, Frame Williams and Carl Von Schiller in the principal parts. Miss Weber and Phillips Smalley will codirect in the making of this next subject, which up to this time is unnamed.

Day and Night Shifts of "T" Players

Expensive building activities at the Triangle Studio, combined with production activities of nine companies, makes this one of the busiest plants of the West coast colony. To keep production at the maximum and still continue with the expensive improvement, H. O. Davis, general manager, has shifts working day and night. One reason for the expensive work along production lines at this time is that Mr. Davis desires to get at least three months ahead of release date with the productions, and he will shortly realize this ambition. Auditor H. R. Hough points out the expense of the improvements by citing various increases in the wages drawn by employes. One scene painter who is on a salary of thirty dollars, recently drew seventy-two dollars for his week's work. In another instance an eighteen-dollar man received a check of fifty-four dollars.

Every stage at the Culver City and Hartville Studios are busy, and another company is working at San Pedro, where water stuff is being filmed.

A Vamp Story that Is "Different"

A new kind of a vampire story titled "The Fuel of Life" is in production under the direction of Walter Edwards. The vamp of this photoplay, taken by Belle Bennett, is said to be of the business vampire type. The story deals with a wife who wins back her husband, won by the vampire, by the use of the vampire's own weapon.

A number of scenes that will introduce new features are being made by Director Lynn Reynolds, who has as his sole player, George Hernandez. The remainder of the company have finished scenes in the next Reynolds production titled "Up or Down." Reynolds with his cameraman, Clyde Cook, have figured out a number of new effects which will be shown on the screen first in this production. Combined with the photographic effects will be a number of very wonderful scenic ones secured at considerable cost to the producing company.

General Doings of Triangle Players

Of particular interest are the settings being used for "Blue Blood," now being directed by E. Mason Hopper with Alma Rueben in the featured role. Many of the scenes for this story are laid in a New York mansion, and it is said the value of the first scenes alone will run into the thousands. It is the tale of a proud old aristocrat who sees his family name dragged into oblivion because of the actions of a grandson.

Olive Thomas is next to be seen in a photoplay in which she as a society girl goes on an adventure by interpreting or masquerading as a cabaret dancer. In the underworld she meets another woman who contests with her to win the promise of marriage from a mysterious man. Jack Dillon is directing this comedy, which is titled "Indiscreet Corrine."

Charles Gunn will make his debut as a Triangle star in "External Circumstances" appearing in the role of a newspaper man who falls down on getting a story. Following this the reporter is suddenly sought to pose as a millionaire with every luxury of wealth, and from here he is stripped of his borrowed family by the girl who had jilted him. Ferris Hartman is filming this photoplay.

Director Added to Force

Roy Stewart is elected sheriff of a Western frontier town in "The Guardian of El Dorado," now being made by Cliff Smith at Hartville. A rich mine and a girl are the stakes in the game of life in this frontier Western subject.

The latest addition to the Triangle directorial forces is William Gittens who is at work on a seafaring picture as yet unnamed. Many of the exteriors are being made in the vicinity of Los Angeles harbor at San Pedro.

During the past few days the following subjects have been completed by Triangle companies: "One Shot Ross," featuring Roy Stewart, directed by Cliff Smith; "Lupin Gal," directed by William V. Mong, and featuring Margery Wilson; "The Firefly of Tough Luck," an E. Mason Hopper subject which has Alma Reuben as star; and the Irene Hunt Subject, "The Stainless Barrier," made by director Thomas N. Heffron.

For the first time since the opening of the Triangle eystone studios in Hollywood, all seven of the producing organizations were at work at the studio one day this week. The several units are directed by Reggis Morris, Harry Williams, Charles Avery, H. Raymaker, Robert Kerr, William Deaudine and Henry Kerman.

Four More on Scenario Dept. Payroll

The scenario staff, under the management of Production Manager Albert Glassmire, has been increased by the addition of four others. The new members are Roy Del Ruth, Walter Newman, Rudolph Bylek and Jay Dwiggins. The latter has been writing and acting for Triangle Keystone for several weeks but will now devote his time exclusively to the authorial end.

The Keystone organization will lose two comedians by the selective draft. George Hall left this week for American Lake, Washington, and Ray Griffin will go shortly. Griffin is now being featured in a subject to be directed by Reggie Morris, and the company is working night and day in order to get all scenes taken before Griffin is called to the colors.

A new member of the Keystone organization is Arthur Moon who has been selected to play leading comedy roles, and will appear under the direction of Henry Kerman. Others in this company are Caroline Rankin, Charles Hill, and others.

Director William Beaudine has commenced on his first Triangle Keystone with a cast including Paddy McQuire, Fritz Schade, Peggy Pearce, Joseph "Baldy" Belmont and Claire Anderson.

If Any of Our Fellow Exhibitors Have Any Criticisms to Make of Alma Reuben's Back, They Will be Automatically Expelled from the League! She Appears Thus in a Fetching New Triangle Play, "Firefly of Tough Luck"

Old Faces Back at U City

Almost every week there are reunions at Universal City. Former directors and players who left the company to go with others are constantly being recalled and placed in stock or in charge of a producing unit. Last week was reported the return of Douglas Gerrard, and a short time before it was chronicled in this department that Francis Ford returned to Universal. This week Murdock MacQuarrie, who formerly played character parts and following that directed a number of dramatic subjects for Universal, was placed at the head of a producing unit in which Neal Hart is the featured player. Mr. MacQuarrie will first direct the making of a two reel western Bison subject titled "The Keeper of Hell Gate," with Eileen Sedgwick playing opposite Hart. Mr. MacQuarrie has had a wide experience in both the speaking and screen stage, and Manager of Production McRae is placing every facility at his disposal for the making of Bison subjects.

Another addition to the Universal directorial forces is George Siegman, who has just returned to the coast. Seigman was with D. W. Griffith from the old Biograph days down to the time the maker of "Intolerance" left the Triangle. During that time he served as actor, writer and director. In the making of "Intolerance" and "The Birth of a Nation," Mr. Seigman was one of Griffith's principal assistants. For the past several months he has been in the east where he directed the filming of "Mother Love and the Law" for Crystal Photoplays Corporation of Chicago. Mr. Seigman has not been assigned to any particular star as yet, but it is understood he will direct five reel subjects.

Holubar Directs Dorothy Phillips

For the first time since Allen Holubar and Dorothy Phillips have been at the Universal and Bluebird studios on the West Coast, Holubar is to direct Miss Phillips, who in private life is Mrs. Holubar. The subject to be made is titled "Barter," and is an adaptation from a story by Evelyn Campbell, the scenario for which was written by Elliot J. Clawson. Albert Roscoe, William Burress, Harry Dunkinson, Kathrine Kirkwood, Joseph Girard and other well known players are to appear in support of Miss Phillips in this subject.

Mr. Clawson is also author of a scenario which is an adaptation from the book of Samuel Merwin titled "Anthony, the Absolute," which was put in production this week. Rupert Julian will direct the making of this and Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury are the featured players, supported by George McDaniels, W. H. Bainbridge, Maude Emory, E. A. Warren and others.

Carey Begins New Western

A new Western drama was begun by the Harry Carey Company, titled "The Range War." The story is from the pen of Henry McRae, production manager of Universal City, and Jack Ford is entrusted with the direction. Molly Malone is to play opposite Mr. Carey in this subject, and a number of the Universal cowboys will take important parts.

Carmel Meyers and Kenneth Harlan are the featured players in the adaptation from the Larry Evans drama, "One Clear Call," which is being directed by Harry Salter. The featured players have a supporting company which includes Howard Crampton, Leslie Casey, Fred Schilling, Sydney Deane and others.

The company under the direction of Elmer Clifton which has Herbert Rawlinson as star is still working on the five-reel drama, "The Flash of Fate," which has Mary MacDonald playing the feminine lead. This is an adaptation from the story by James W. Atchison, prepared for the screen by Waldemar Young.

Stories in Course of Production

"The Straw Collar" is the title of a five-reel photoplay put in production under the direction of E. J. LeSaint, with Louise Lovely as the featured player. The story and scenario are by Charles Kenyon, and Alfred Allen, Louis J. Cody, Hector Dion, Mrs. A. E. Witting, Beatrice Van, Betty Schade, and Fred Church support Miss Lovely in this subject. This subject will serve for the debut of Cody under the Bluebird trade-mark. His most recent engagement was with the American at Santa Barbara, where he supported Gail Kane.

The Mae Murray Bluebird Company which is directed by Robert Leonard this week began the making of "Face Value," which is a story by Leonard and Miss Murray, prepared for the screen by Fred Myton. Wheeler Oakman has been engaged to play opposite Miss Murray as leading man, and other members of the supporting cast include Casson Ferguson, Clarrisa Selwyn, Kathrine Griffith and others. Many of the scenes for this subject are laid in New York City, and the interiors of Los Angeles' finest department stores during fashion week were used at night as settings for a number of the scenes.

Serials and Comedies in the Making

Four comedy companies are now working at Universal City. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are continuing on two-reel comedies under the direction of Harry Edwards. Allen Curtis is now filming a one-reel subject, entitled "The Shame of the Bulkon," with Gale Henry and William Franey. Al Santell is directing the one-reel comedy, "Vamping the Vamp," with Harry Mann and Kathleen O'Connor as leads. The fourth company, that directed by Edwin Frazee, with Neal Burns and Teddy Sampson as leads, are making "Doing His Bit."

But two serial companies are now at work at Universal City. One is under the direction of Francis Ford, who is filming "The Phantom Ship," with Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, supported by Kingsley Benedict, Duke Worne and Elsie Van Name. The other is "The Red Ace" company directed by Jacques Jaccard.

DOING THEIR BIT

In writing this head we did not aim to be a bit punny, but just using the slang of war times. Briefly and concisely we wish to tell the waiting world that our stars and producers of filmdom who are not accustomed to doing bits are now at it.

Thomas H. Ince started all producers to eliminating the use of foods in the making of scenes in screen plays or on the stage.

Gene Crosby is organizing the Liberty Girls.

Mary Pickford has adopted 600 soldiers.

Well, everybody's doing bits, but this is all we can remember.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

VICTOR SMITH has joined the army. The former studio manager of the Brooklyn plant of Greater Vitagraph, and who is also a brother of Albert E. Smith, has been granted a captain's commission in the Quartermaster's Reserve Corps, and is doing his bit at the Yaphank training camp. Mr. Smith was one of the first men to enter training at Plattsburg last spring and was advanced in rank after taking the army examinations, being first a corporal, then a sergeant and finally a captain.

Mr. Smith has only been to New York once since he went to Plattsburg and that was six weeks ago, when he paid a visit to the studio in Brooklyn. At that time he was given a reception by his former associates, being met by a brass band and escorted to the studio by a mounted guard of honor.

BEFORE swinging into the motion picture industry Benjamin Chapin was appearing on the dramatic stage, on the Lyceum circuit and in vaudeville. It is told that when he commenced the first picture of the Lincoln Cycle, he expected to be free for his old lines of effort in a year and so notified the various managers. The result was that they checked him in their books as "available" that time the following year.

"But I had miscalculated time as applied to picture producing," says Mr. Chapin; "I soon saw that, to do a good job, a year is nothing. I altered my plans, of course, and decided to give one—two—three or five years to this work—as many as might be necessary.

"The managers didn't alter their plans, however. A year passed and then I was reminded of my original announcement in no uncertain manner. First the vaudeville agent, then the lyceum bureau and eventually my theatrical managers. And, of course, I wasn't ready. I had said a year, the year was up and they couldn't understand."

CREIGHTON HALE, film star, who is being featured in the new Pathe serial, "The Seven Pearls," is very much perturbed about the publication of a story in many newspapers to the effect that his mother had been arrested in Hartford, Conn., for making a vicious attack upon President Wilson, his war policies, and the United States in general, last Monday night.

The woman, who gave the name of Mrs. Annie R. Hale, of New York City, was interrupted in the midst of her tirade at a meeting in Socialist hall, Hartford. At the police station, she said she was the mother of Creighton Hale. Mr. Hale says his mother, as a matter of fact, is in England, where she is a practising physician and surgeon. Ever since the beginning of the war, she has devoted all of her time to Red Cross work and is now with the British Army.

OLIVE TELL, starred in Empire All-Star productions, claims the distinction of being one of the few, yes, very few, in the profession who have not had to begin at the beginning. In all her plays, except one, she has had the leading role, and after making two motion pictures she is now being starred.

Miss Tell is making a series of pictures for the Empire All-Star Corporation, and in two, at least, she will be supported by David Powell.

Olive Tell's Witchery is Given Full Play in "The Unforeseen," Her Next Play With Empire-Mutual

MABEL JULIENNE SCOTT, who made the part of Necia in "The Barrier" and played the lead in the new Edgar Lewis screen drama, "The Sign Invisible" has been spending her spare hours in directing the Woman's League in the knitting of sweaters for the boys in camp.

She has gone to the cantonment at Ayer, Mass., to distribute two hundred sweaters among the enlisted men, and, in addition, will present each with a folding aluminum drinking cup in a leather case.

When Miss Scott returns she will appear at the Sun's tobacco fund entertainment in a vaudeville sketch in which she was popular before she became a screen actress.

SINCE coming to America, Mme. Nazimova has played in both Russian and English. Ever since she came to the English speaking stage her career has been an unbroken record of successes. In Ibsen's "A Doll's House," "Hedda Gabler," and "Little Eyold," she won the highest laurels. She then turned to comedy and in "The Countess Coquette," made an equally strong impression.

She made her screen debut in a motion picture version of this play by Marion Craig Wentworth, under the direction of Herbert Brenon, for Selznick-Pictures.

"The Great Nazimova" came to Metro to begin a series of superb photodramas under the Metro banner, her first production being an adaptation of "The Rose Bush of a Thousand Years," by Mabel Wagnalls, directed by George D. Baker.

THERE was deep concern at the Vitagraph studio in Flatbush last week, and for a time the situation was real tragic. Mother Mary Maurice, beloved by everyone at the plant, suffered an attack of eye burn while working under the lights in "I Will Repay," a Blue Ribbon feature. She was forced to quit work for a day, and for a time it was thought her eyes were permanently impaired, because she is now in her seventy-fourth year. However, after one day's rest she returned to the studio and resumed work. The greatest tragedy, from Mother Maurice's point of view, lay in the fact that this was the first time in her long career she ever had to lose a day on account of illness.

EMMY WEHLEN, star in Metro pictures, is thanking her stars above that she is alive today, after nearly losing her life under an express train while motoring from Long Beach, L. I., to New York. Miss Wehlen, driving her touring car, slowed down as she neared the crossing of the railroad and stopped behind another car. When the first car moved ahead Miss Wehlen pushed her car forward also, and was startled by the shriek of the train whistle. She found her car was directly on the track, and the train was coming fast. She started to back up—the gate was closed. Then she thought of jumping out—changed her mind. She put on top speed and tore through the gate in front of her and was safe. Miss Wehlen afterward said the scene would have been good enough to shoot for a melodrama.

MME. PETROVA has decided to capitalize the secrets of attaining renown in the motion picture field, the requisites of which include beauty, intelligence and a background of experience that creates public interest. It is no secret that Mme. Petrova possesses all these.

The Ladies' World, in a series of announcements in magazines, made known the fact that Petrova has agreed to edit a monthly department of information concerning matters of dramatic poise and expression. It is stated in addition that the story versions of the plays to be produced by Petrova Picture Company, which films are to be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, are to appear in The Ladies' World simultaneously with the appearance of Petrova pictures on the screen.

THE WORLD MARKET

Epstein Gets Russian Films for United States and Canada

M. S. Epstein, who, since his entry into the motion picture industry in the state rights department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation six months ago, has made many friends among exhibitors and state righters, has secured for the United States and Canada an authentic set of pictures of the Russian Revolution. The films are said to show Kerensky in action, and the presentations will be made under the title of "Kerensky in the Russian Revolution of 1917." The pictures were brought to this country a few weeks ago by a Petrograd film official. The subject is in four reels, and will be exploited immediately by Mr. Epstein as a state rights feature.

Kopfstein Sells to Three Foreign Countries

Jacques Kopfstein has successfully negotiated the sale of the Christie Comedies for Argentine, Uruguay and Chile to the Sociedad General Cinematografics, of which Leroy Garfinkle is the American representative. To the same company Kopfstein sold the Horsley feature productions for the same countries, and productions of the Van Dyke Film Company.

Bernstein Disposes of Features

It was announced through Shepard and Van Loan last week that Isidore Bernstein had disposed of the world rights to the pictures "Loyalty" and "Humility." The Export and Import Film Company has the foreign rights, while H. Grossman has Canada and the United States.

Foreign Rights Sold On "Lust of the Ages"

Contract Is Also Closed for Entire Series of Eight Remaining Ogden Pictures—Lillian Walker Stars in First Feature

THE entire foreign rights to "The Lust of the Ages," the first production of the Ogden Pictures Corporation, starring Lillian Walker, have been sold, through a contract closed last week by Carle E. Carlton, president of the Crest Corporation, and Jesse J. Goldburg, of the Ogden Company. Contracts for the sale of foreign rights to the remaining eight releases of the Ogden Corporation, to be made during the next twelve months, were also closed at the same time, after going through a negotiating period of four weeks.

Mr. Carlton announced that the final contract was signed only after he received assurances from the Government that shipments of prints would not be delayed because of the war.

Although the financial end of the deal has not been discussed, outside of the statement that $64,000 deposit was made to cover the output, it is said that Mr. Carlton agreed to pay among the highest prices ever named on a single contract. His exploitations in the future, through this deal, will be not alone confined to Scandinavian countries, but will spread throughout the world, excepting the United States and Canada. Agents have been investigating motion picture conditions for the Crest Corporation in various parts of the world for the past five months.

At his New York offices Mr. Carlton last week in an announcement said: "I sought to inaugurate my plan with the release of a star production that would be a surefire winner and after viewing upwards of twenty-two attractions, I finally determined to purchase 'The Lust of the Ages,' not alone because of the fact that it is an unusual production from every standpoint, but also because of the popularity of Miss Lillian Walker here and abroad. It is of interest to know that the sentiments and opinion of the photoplay public in the United States is reflected abroad, and what meets with popular approval here will, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, meet with approval abroad."

Seng Sells "Parentage" for Australasia

Frank J. Seng announced last week that a deal was closed during the week whereby J. C. Williamson, Ltd., acquired the rights of "Parentage" for Australasia. The price involved is said to be one of the largest ever paid for a feature that has gone into this territory. The prints are already on their way to Australia, it was announced at Mr. Seng's office in the Times Building.

Almost simultaneously with the announcement that Australasia had been closed out, Mr. Seng's organization, through its foreign representative, Miss Edna Williams, also concluded negotiations with Louis Brock, of the Inter Ocean Film Corporation, to take "Parentage" for South Africa.

Several Ivan productions have also been placed this week for the Pacific Coast of South America and the Philippines. The coming production of Ivan Abramson, "Sins of Ambition," has already been conceded in several territories on the strength of the success of the previous Ivan productions. Ed. Warren's production, "Warfare of the Flesh" appears to be in great demand.

The serial, "Jimmie Dale," is being appreciated as a high-class serial and several good reports have been received for the producer, the Monmouth Film Corporation. You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

ROBERT EMMETT WELSH, managing editor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, took the marital plunge last week when on Thursday morning at 8.30 he made Miss Cecilia Hickey of Valatie, N. Y., Mrs. Robert Emmett Welsh. The ceremony was performed at Albany, and Miss Jane Cusack of Poughkeepsie was bridesmaid and Mr. Joseph L. Kelley of Broadway, New York, was best man. Also ex-Governor Martin H. Glynn was present, as the once Miss Hickey is his niece.

THE best man, Mr. Kelley, was commissioned by us to return to the office with a minute report of the wedding. Just what the bride wore, how the groom looked at various stages of the process, whether Mrs. Hickey burst into tears or not, and all the other little incidentals that must go in a wedding report. But on being questioned regarding the above, he fell far short of fulfilling his mission. "The bride wore some sort of pearl gray," he said, "and later changed to a blue traveling suit." Some sort of pearl gray is a grossly inadequate statement to make after a wedding. As for the groom and Mrs. Hickey, he didn't remember anything about them at all.

WHEN their honeymoon is over, Mr. and Mrs. Welsh are going to settle down in the wilds of Long Island. Until their return their whereabouts is a dark secret, as they refuse to be bothered by cameramen and reporters, who have been hot on their trail ever since it became known that the ceremony had taken place.

JUST why we print the above here is rather dubious. To Bob it is about as funny as the rest of the stuff on this page is funny to the rest of our mighty host of readers. The main thing is that it provides an opportunity to wish the bride and groom (to coin a phrase) all happiness on the sea of matrimony, which we are quite certain every one else in the trade will join us in doing.

HARRY H. POPPE, well known in all branches of the business, was drafted and left last Saturday for Camp Upton, Yaphank, L. I. He had only recently become press agent for the Yorke company and was sending out press copy on Harold Lockwood & Co., from the Metro offices. To coin a phrase, Harry leaves any number of friends in the film business who wish him good luck.

WHY EDITORS CHEW THEIR DESKS (REASON NO. 98).

"MATTIE," the King-Bee studio cat, got herself in the next release of Billy West comedies in the most unexpected manner.

The name of the comedy is "The Candy Kid," and during a scene in the candy shop Billy West is supposed to be calling for volunteers to help him rout a band of yeggs, who have come to steal a million dollars worth of fresh eggs. Billy was hollering, "I need men! I need an army!" Right on the cue "Mattie" walked into the scene and "deposited" four new kittens at Billy's feet.

WHY SOME FANS THINK CHARLIE CHAPLIN A DEAF MUTE

We conversed with a business man the other day, a practical fellow, an architect, or something, who expressed great interest when he learned we cavorted about in the great and beautiful motion picture business. The conversation ran something like this:

"Do you know many of the stars?"

"No, only a few."

"Do Mary Pickford and Charlie Chaplin really get all that money?"

"Quite so, quite so."

"Is Mary Pickford married?"

"Yes."

"About how old is she?"

"Oh, about twenty-two, three, four, somewhere around there."

"Oh, no!" this from him.

"Well, maybe a little younger."

"Oh, goodness no! Why she's forty-five at least."

"Oh, no," this from us with much laughter.

"Why," he went on, "my cousin says that a friend of hers roomed with Mary Pickford's daughter at college and that the daughter was at least twenty. Why, no, you're all wrong. The right name of the family is Pixton. She took Pickford because it was so different. I'm surprised you didn't know that. Should think you'd know all those things, being in the business. But, say, she does hold her age pretty well doesn't she? Never think she was that old. Looks only as old as you said."

"COLONEL" NED FINLEY has disbanded the famous "Royal Vitagraph Horse Marines," we learn from a confidential source. Many, including ourselves, would like to know just what the Royal Vitagraph Horse Marines were before they disbanded.

D. F. C. writes to ask whether any of us will live to remember when;

Some actress gets photographed sans auto and dog.

Pickford, Fairbanks and Chaplin go to the poor houses.

William Fox goes into small type.

Valeska, Theda and Virginia do the tri-starring act in "Sisterly Love."

To which we reply, emphatically and decisively, NO.

FRANKIE MANN, who has been seen in many Vitagraph productions and who was lately seen in the "baby" vampire part in the "Sex Lure," has quietly slipped away from under the calcium lights and returned to the "liegit." Miss Mann will have the "baby vamp" part in "Up Stairs and Down," which will tour the country.

EDITORIAL

Pat Dowling of the w. c. has sent us a number of squibs under the general title of "How They Did It In 'The Good Old Days,'" which, as we can't discover any more subjects to editorialize upon, will be printed very often in this space.

The first one, entitled "The Birth of a Film Company," follows:

"The Goldmine Film Company has just been formed in New York with a capitalization said to be in the neighborhood of $500.00. The officers of the company announce that work will start immediately in the old carpenter shop of Jack McCarthy, its cameraman, which has been leased for the purpose. The President, star and director of the company, Sam Stein, announces that a stupendous one-reel production will soon be under way."

HOW PICTURES ARE BOOKING

Evelyn Nesbit Breaks Ohio Box Office Record

Records available at Columbus, O., indicate that a new and formidable box office attraction has come to the front in the motion picture theatres of the Buckeye State. Exhibitors from a number of Ohio cities have reported that Evelyn Nesbit has passed all male and female competitors in pictures in point of drawing attendance into the theatres showing the silent drama. This is considered quite an achievement in Ohio, where "Little Mary" Pickford has worn the popularity crown for these many years.

Elaine Hammerstein, Who Appears in the Jewel Production, "The Corespondent," at the Broadway Theatre, New York, on October 7

Vita Gets Good Reports on "The Fighting Trail"

"The Fighting Trail," Greater Vitagraph's serial which was released on Sept. 10, is taking a good hold on the public, according to reports from the exhibitors. The exhibitors are unanimous in their praise of the serial as a production and a box-office attraction. Many of them credit the picture with giving them record-breaking receipts and also declare that the great advance advertising campaign conducted by Greater Vitagraph aided in stirring up interest in the feature.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Goldwyn Bookings Astonishing the Industry

"Baby Mine" Gets Praise from Press Everywhere—"The Manxman" in All Marcus Loew's Theatres—Whirlwind Sweep to Baltimore

GOLDWYN'S bookings have astonished the trade. "Baby Mine," showing in theatres all over the United States is gaining much laudation from the press everywhere. Baltimore has been entered with a whirlwind sweep, much as was done first in New York, Chicago, Boston and Philadelphia.

Marcus Loew has booked "The Manxman," the George Loane Tucker adaptation of Hall Caine's story, for his entire metropolitan chain of theatres, through the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

Mr. Loew's booking of this production is largely due to his own observation of "The Manxman's" drawing power when it played next door to Marcus Loew's New York theatre, Forty-fifth street and Broadway, for four weeks of capacity business at advanced prices.

Not only are larger exhibitors of the country coming into the Goldwyn fold, but the smaller ones are increasing beyond all of the initial expectations of the Goldwyn organization. The conference of the smaller exhibitors in the Goldwyn production has been one of the much-sought objectives of the company from the day of its inception more than a year ago. It is the belief of Samuel Goldfish and his allied owners of Goldwyn that no company has ever yet attained more than a small fractional part of the support that the smaller exhibitors of the country are ready to give any reputable company which gives real attention and service to these factors in the industry.

Judging by the critics' reviews in the New York newspapers, as well as those in other cities, Margaret Mayo's skill as an author of farce comedy for the stage gains new emphasis now that she has retired from the American theatre and transferred her efforts exclusively to Goldwyn Pictures. Here are quotations from some of the reviews of the picture:

New York Tribune—Just as everyone had about definitely settled in his mind whether he preferred Marguerite Clark or Mary Pickford along comes Madge Kennedy and upsets all the calculations.

New York Sun—In Margaret Mayo's "Baby Mine," the second Goldwyn Picture, Madge Kennedy, the star, acts with all of the innocent boldness that carried her so well through "Fair and Warmer."

New York Herald—In "Baby Mine," Madge Kennedy takes to the screen like a fly takes to fly-paper.

The Toledo Blade says—The motion picture public delights in the decision of Madge Kennedy to turn to the screen.

The Indianapolis News says—Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine" is a second great success for Goldwyn.

The Cleveland Leader says—Thank heaven, here is a star who does not gain her comedy effects by making grotesque faces, Madge Kennedy.

The Washington Post says—Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine," the second Goldwyn picture, is greater on the screen than she was on the stage.

Harold Edel, the alert managing director of the New York Strand theatre, makes this significant comment:

"After playing 'Baby Mine' at The Strand I would not exchange Madge Kennedy, present for future, for any great existing star of the films."

Fox's "Aladdin" Plays Second Week at Globe

Second of Kiddie Series Surpasses Even "Jack and the Beanstalk" in Popularity—Many Ingenious Effects Produced

THE second of the series of Kiddie pictures produced by William Fox, and which was picturized from the old but ever new Arabian Nights tale, "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," and presented under the same title, has jumped into immediate favor. The spectacular production began its second week at the Globe theatre, on Broadway, September 30. Since its opening at that theatre a week prior to that date, the filmed "Aladdin" has been presented twice daily to well filled houses.

The picture has many ingenious effects in its numerous scenes, both indoors and out. The sand storm, for example, is described as a stirring and realistic presentation of the fury of the elements, and the Bedouins riding across the desert on their steeds add more thrills and photographic effects of unusual worth.

The photography, though, does not monopolize the attention in this feature, as the Fox kiddies are there in their usual quantity and quality. Francis Carpenter is Aladdin; Virginia Lee Corbin, the Princess; Violet Radcliffe, the Magician, and Gertrude Messenger, Yasmini. They have been described as among the most refreshing film actors on Broadway.

Every one, or nearly every one, knows the story of Aladdin. Many, youngsters and grown-ups alike, know it by heart and have dreamed their own dreams about the holy city of Bagdad, the scene of the story; about Aladdin himself; about his father, Mustapha, the tailor; the Sultan and others.

CHICAGO NEWS AND COMMENT

By WILLIAM J. McGRATH

New Vita Manager Installs "Follow Up" Department

H. J. Bayley, who has succeeded Sydney Abel as the manager of Vitagraph local exchange, has the second floor of the College Building buzzing with activity. With the slogan of "service for the exhibitor" in mind, Mr. Bayley has greatly reorganized his exchange staff.

Chief among the moves made was the taking over of Bert W. Albert, for ten years chief booker for the General Film Company. Mr. Albert was installed last week as the chief booker of the Vitagraph office here. The shipping department has been strengthened by the addition of Jack Robinson as its head. Mr. Robinson has been four years with Paramount previous to his coming to Vita

Another bit of enterprise and energy shown by Mr. Bayley since taking hold of the local office has been the inauguration of a "Follow-up Department." This department is cared for by a salesman and several stenographers who keep the trails left by all buying exhibitors warm after they leave the Chicago office.

A progressive move in the poster department has been made. Hereafter every show shipped out of the local Vitagraph office will carry its quota of posters and pictures with it. This lot shipment method will be a great saving of trouble, time and money to the exhibitor.

Belated Premiere of "Eyes of World" Draws Crowds

W. H. Clune's "Eyes of the World" opened at the Auditorium on Thursday, September 27. After an intensive advertising and publicity campaign throughout the entire city of Chicago, the first night of the showing brought forth a turn away crowd. Long before the film was flashed on the screen the house was filled and others trying to get inside. The top price is $1. The general admission is 25 cents.

The original date for the premiere of the big Clune photodrama was September 20. Due to the lack of labor caused by the national army draft, the decorating and remodelling work that had been started on the Auditorium several weeks previous was unable to be finished at that time. The opening was then postponed until last Thursday and the advance sale continued big.

American Film Co. President Back from Coast Trip

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, has returned after a month spent at the studios at Santa Barbara. "The American Film Company," he said, "expects to launch a campaign of increased expenditures. We expect to produce nothing but five-reel features. With the addition of Margarita Fischer to our stars we now have a quintet of the most notable in the business.

LEAKS IN THE LOOP

The old familiar trade letters, KESE, have gone from the doors and windows of the Kleine Exchange in the College Building forever. In their place shines out the slogan, Perfection Pictures—George Kleine System.

Manager Bill Jenner, now of Perfection Pictures, is spending the early part of this week on a tour through Indiana, doing a little missionary work for the George Kleine System.

Manager Rozelle, of the World-Brady office, is distributing the snappy-looking publicity sheet on "The Burglar," besides containing all sorts of information concerning this about-to-be-released Brady picture. It also contains the pictures of every branch office manager of the World-Brady Company. Carlyle Blackwell and Madge Evans are, of course, pictorially featured on this sheet.

Ralph Proctor informs us that after this week his office will no longer handle Art-Dramas Productions. King Bee pictures will be given most of the attention of the Standard Film Company for the present.

Tom Norman, manager of the Rex theatre at Racine, and Phillip O. Gross, manager of the Strand at Milwaukee, were visitors at the World-Brady office at Chicago.

Felix Mendolsohn has been appointed branch manager of the World-Brady office at Indianapolis.

The Orpheum theatre will adopt a "two-changes-a-week" policy beginning October 1, abandoning the daily change scheme. Griffith's "Intolerance" will be the first of these three-day showings.

Aaron Jones has purchased the distributing rights of "The Whip" for Illinois. "The Whip" will follow "The Moth" at the Colonial this week. It will be the last motion picture film to be shown there before this theatre returns to the legitimate policy for the winter season.

H. R. Horkheimer, president of the Balboa Film Company, was a Chicago visitor last week. He is on his way to the Coast after a six-month stay in New York. Important announcements are to come from him during the next few weeks, he says.

The Advertising Film Producers' Association, which is the official department of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the world, met in executive session at the Rothacker Studio on Monday, September 17. At that time it was decided to change the name of the organization to the Motion Picture Advertising Association of the World. The next meeting will be held at the Statler Hotel, Detroit, on October 26.

The Seeburg suite in the Republic Bldg. is a rather pretentious looking spot these days. One of the new Seeburg-Smith Unit orchestras, manufactured by the Seeburg Piano Company, has been placed on display in their showroom. To do this, it was necessary to add several hundred extra square feet of floor space. All of the rest of the offices and showrooms have been freshly painted and calsomined and add a delightful contrast to the new musical instrument.

Bernard MacFadden, the well-known publisher and physical culturist of this city, is going to demonstrate his belief in child hygiene and physical culture through the medium of the Universal Screen Magazine.

Sylvan Ginesbury, just arrived in this country from Australia and seeking Australian rights on popular American films, visited the News office here last week. Mr. Ginesbury will work from coast to coast. Even with the stress of war time he says that Australian film fans are clamoring for American film productions.

Grim War Novelties Seen in Commonwealth Feature

Interesting from a war standpoint will be the six-reel feature film that is soon to be released by the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation of Chicago, with Charlotte, the famous ice skater, as the central figure. A wireless apparatus in full working order will be one striking feature, and another will be the sub-sea gun, the possession of which forms the crux of the film drama. Vane, an American inventor, has contrived a gun that he hopes and his government hopes will curb the menace of the U-boats. Spies, learning of the gun, attempt to steal it, and the stuggle for its possession gives the play its big punch. Charlotte, as a schoolgirl, contrives to thwart the spies and saves the day, but not without a vast deal of excitement and many thrilling adventures. There is a big Red Cross benefit shown in the picture also, which takes place on the ice, with 1,000 people in carnival costume.

Barney Abrams—Attention

Film friends of Barney Abrams, formerly of Des Moines, have asked me to locate him for them. They are desirous of knowing his whereabouts and having something of value to communicate to him.

Funkhouser's Ire Aroused and He Fights Back

Major Funkhouser, termed in Chicago film circles as the czar of the motion picture censor board, has broken the long silence which had characterized his attitude during the various controversies over films which he has barred, attempted to bar or censored, and has made a statement.

In the statement last week, which was the first Major Funkhouser has made since a general attack was launched against him months ago, he tried to answer the attacks made upon him. He denies charges of arbitrary action and cited city ordinance laws and Supreme Court decisions to uphold him. In addition he accused the motion picture producers and exchange managers of misrepresenting him.

This, however, seems not to have changed the attitude of the industry in the least, and instead the displeasure evidenced at Major Funkhouser's actions regarding films seems to be spreading rapidly not alone within the industry itself but among the general public, represented by the newspapers.

Following the announcement of the amendment brought before City Councils to restrict the powers of the censor, the Chicago Tribune commented editorially upon censorship in general and Chicago censorship in particular. Although not advising the abolishment of censorship in the Windy City all at once, the Tribune states that "it is hard to find justification for Chicago's censorship of films," and seems perfectly willing that a change for the better be made.

City Amendment Proposed to Curb Censor's Power

A sub-committee of the City Council judiciary in Chicago was appointed last week with Alderman Walter Steffen as the head of it. They are considering the amendment of the motion picture ordinance curbing the powers of Major Funkhouser and his censor board.

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, happened to be in town and he addressed the committee and protested against the Funkhouser brand of censorship. "The manufacturer sends his pictures here," said Mr. Brady, "and they are submitted to one man. Major Funkhouser is absolutely unfair and unjust in his rulings on motion picture films. We have no desire to present immoral pictures.

"The secretary of the treasury of the United States admitted that he owed more to motion pictures for the success of the last Liberty Loan campaign than to anything else. We will send a committee of twenty-five of the largest producers in the country to talk this matter over with you if you desire. All we ask is a square deal."

Bach Busy in Detroit Starting Free Service

W. A. Bach is inaugurating a free service department at the Detroit-Universal exchange. This will be for the purpose of assisting exhibitors in the way of general publicity and advertising.

Hamburger Interests to Be Absorbed by New Corporation

The formation of a new corporation to take over the Alfred Hamburger motion picture enterprises in Chicago has been announced. The idea is said to be prompted by the desire to broaden the scope of the business and improve the bookings, according to the Hamburger office here.

Mr. Hamburger is to remain in charge of the policy of the houses, but they will be operated under the auspices of what is to be known as the Continental Theatre Corporation. A charter has already been received. The attorney in charge of the reorganization plans said: "It is not only our plan to improve our properties in Chicago and secure the highest class blookings obtainable, but we have in mind the building of two additional theatres within the Loop section. We also plan to build or take over other theatre buildings throughout the Middle West."

The Hamburger enterprises in Chicago include the Ziegfeld, the Twentieth Century, the Willard, the Grand Oak, the Pine Grove, the Panorama and the Gayety in South Chicago.

We Thought He Deserved a Free Ticket to Motion Picture News. What Reading Matter Have You on Hand?

Gentlemen:

I happened to run across a copy of the NEWS here this morning and along with other things I read of the "cigarette campaign." Seeing the spirit of it, I thought you might be kind enough to help me get something that I have missed for the past five months: the NEWS and other journals of the trade.

I grew up with the pictures. My first experience in a theatre was when I was about eleven to twelve years old, "manipulating the phonograph." I have been working in a show most of the time since. Have held position from manager on down (or up).

I know there are a lot of fellows that have a surplus of the magazines and if you will help me to get in communication with them by publishing this I would greatly appreciate it. I will be glad to send the postage.

The New Orleans manager of "Universal" was kind enough to put me on his mailing list to receive the weekly published by them.

Thanking you in advance, I am,

Respectfully,
J. Dey Sanders,
1st Ark. Inf. Band,
Camp Pike, Ark.

J. L. Hunter, Who is Chief Auditor of the George Kleine System

Kleine Auditor Dons War Garb

J. L. Hunter, chief auditor of the George Kleine System of Exchanges, is one of the latest to doff the civilian garb of the workaday world and don in its stead the trim fitting uniform of the military world. On Friday, September 14, he closed his desk for the last time in the George Kleine offices, 63 East Adams street, Chicago, and left for Toronto, Canada, where he is already enrolled as a member of the Royal Flying Corps of the British army, and will undergo a thorough course of training at a big aviation field before "going across" to take his place in the air alongsides the men who are acting as the "eyes" of the British army.

Charlotte, of Ice Skating Fame, in Commonwealth Film

H. A. Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, here announces that they are about ready to begin work on their next picture, which will feature Charlotte, the famous ice queen, in a film adaptation of a well known story. Jack Meredith, well known on the legitimate stage, will work opposite Miss Charlotte in the leading male role.

Jack Rose has been engaged as cameraman and the makeup of all the rest of the cast and technical staff is nearly completed.

Maxine Elliott in "Fighting Odds" at Strand, Sept. 30

Maxine Elliott comes to the screen for her film debut at The Strand Theatre sooner than had been anticipated, as her first Goldwyn production "Fighting Odds" was released in New York, September 30.

Allan Dwan, who made many of the earlier Douglas Fairbanks successes, directed Miss Elliott for her screen debut. This picture again reveals many of the refinements and novelties that are already looked for and expected in the Goldwyn productions. In Miss Elliott's supporting cast are Henry Clive, Charles Dalton, Vernon Steele and other well-known players.

Greenburg Is Publicity Man in Detroit

Another publicity service man has been appointed to look after the interests of the exhibitors in the territory handled out of the Universal Offices in Detroit, Toledo and Grand Rapids.

W. A. Bach, who has just appointed B. B. Greenburg to the position, has been in Detroit for the past two weeks arranging plans for the branch.

Mr. Greenburg will assist all exhibitors in this territory in any way they may need him and particularly along advertising and publicity lines.

This appointment is in line with the Universal policy of "Exhibitor First" and Mr. Greenburg's appointment follows on the heels of the placing of a man in the Chicago office last week, as the consummation of the three weeks' work Mr. Bach spent in that territory.

Mr. Bach now leaves for St. Louis, where Mr. Geibler is already in charge of this work and the time in this office will be spent in increasing the efficiency of the work and introducing all new ideas possible.

Roomier Quarters for Pathe at Baltimore

Owing to the growing business of the Baltimore Pathe Exchange, Frank Spurrier, manager of the branch, has secured larger quarters at 210 North Calvert street.

Mr. Spurrier will take possession of his new quarters on October 1st. The Pathe Exchange has been occupying space on the second floor of the Wilson Theater Building for several years past.

W. R. Sheehan Touring Exchanges for Fox

Getting into Touch with Live-Wire Exhibitors in All Sections, He Learns Standard Pictures Are Taking Well

WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, is making flying trips to the various exchanges of the Fox concern, getting in personal touch with the live-wire exhibitors. Mr. Sheehan maintains that it is of the utmost importance to have an intimate knowledge of the needs of the general picture-going public, and the sure-fire way of gaining this knowledge is to talk direct with the exhibitor.

Mr. Sheehan reports conditions as being unusually healthy everywhere, with a continually growing demand for the new Fox Standard Features. The public's demands are tending toward the higher class pictures, and the exhibitors are coming to see that to better their business they must book features of more than ordinary merit.

"The Spy," the Fox expose of the operations in this country of the German Secret Service, is having unprecedented runs wherever it is shown. "The Honor System" is another big winner, the popularity of which continues unabated. The Theda Bara superpictures and the William Farnum series, beginning with "The Conqueror," promise to revolutionize box-office records. Judging from the comments of the exhibitors, Theda Bara in "Cleopatra" is awaited with enthusiastic interest.

The Fox Kiddies, Mr. Sheehan says, will sweep the country. Everywhere the first of the series, "Jack and the Beanstalk," is creating new marks in motion picture history. "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," which began its New York premiere last Monday, it is anticipated, will prove more sensational than the bell-ringer of the series.

Mr. Sheehan is a trained observer, the result of an "intensive training" in the newspaper field. He began his career in the "Fourth Estate" on the staff of the Buffalo Courier. In 1903 he was a staff writer on the New York World, and interrupted his newspaper work to take up an important New York municipal government position, where he remained until January 1, 1914. Then he became associated with William Fox in the Fox Film Corporation.

Mr. Sheehan is as well known among the exhibitors of the provinces and Continental Europe as he is in the United States. This acquaintance began when he established for the Fox concern the various branches in the different parts of the world where Fox pictures are shown.

Philadelphia Manager Promoted by General Film

During the last week several important advances in the personnel and scope of the sales organization were made by General Film Company. The most conspicuous shift of any was the transfer of P. A. Bloch from the Philadelphia managership to the New York exchange, to succeed H. H. Buxbaum, resigned.

To succeed Mr. Bloch at Philadelphia Frank E. Samuels has been appointed, taking charge at once.

A General Film branch office has now been opened at Portland, Ore., with W. E. Matthews in charge, transferred from the sales force of the San Francisco office.

Beginning October 15, General Film will have an office at New Haven, Conn.

Effective September 24, J. M. Cummings assumed management of the Cleveland office.

Joseph A. Gagnier for Vitagraph at Montreal

Joseph A. Gagnier, of Eastern Canada, has been appointed manager of the Montreal branch of the Vitagraph distributing organization, succeeding A. L. Gorman.

Mr. Gagnier has been with the Vitagraph forces for eight months and in that time has shown himself to be a capable salesman in the territory. His success is due, in no small measure, to the fact that he is a former exhibitor.

New Orleans Vita Branch Wins Irwin Loving Cup

The Greater Vitagraph branch office in New Orleans, La., considered the banner office in Vitagraph's chain, is the first to get possession of a loving cup offered by General Manager Walter W. Irwin as a competitive trophy to be contested for by the sales organization.

In a contest inaugurated about two months ago, each office was assigned a certain amount of business as a hundred per cent. quota, the office equalling or exceeding its quota for four consecutive weeks to be deemed the leader of the organization. Where more than one office maintained an average in excess of its quota for the specified period, the one having the highest average was to be deemed the leader. It so happened that the New Orleans office was the first of the sales organization branches to go over the mark, and it has maintained its lead for four weeks, although there are several others now in the "100 Point Club."

Burt King Appointed Branch Manager by Vita

Burt King, one of the best known salesmen in the Mississippi Valley, has been appointed manager of the New Orleans branch of the Greater Vitagraph distributing organization. He succeeds A. W. Plues, who has been called to the colors.

Mr. King has been a Vitagraph salesman for about a year.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"The Spotted Lily"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ELLA HALL is featured in "The Spotted Lily," a photoplay by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton. Its main plot thread concerns the manner in which a foreign born girl by practising both unselfishness and love saved the man she admired from a life without honor. This portion of the picture is exceedingly slim, and surrounding it there are any number of minor threads that bear little dramatic relation to it. The first reel has to do entirely with the girl's father and mother, and even when the interval of years has been passed over and the principals introduced the story hesitates for quite a time before finally getting started.

There is some interest and suspense to be derived from the experiences of the girl, the boy violinist and the priest during their stay in America, but in a general sense "The Spotted Lily" is so episodic that accumulative interest is at an unusually low ebb. In the matter of production it quite exceeds itself. The first scenes, transpiring in a mythical European country, set forth a number of pretty views, and the photographic effects including some remarkable triple exposure work deserve nothing but praise. The few battle flashes that are introduced create an effective illusion.

Ella Hall, as Yvonne, through the body of the picture, and as her mother in the first reel, and Victor Rottman and Charles Hill Mailes in the other two important parts do favorable work. Harry Solter, who will be remembered for his work on some of the first Universal pictures, was in charge of the direction. In conclusion the title, "The Spotted Lily" seems very vague indeed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

At the outbreak of the war Yvonne (Ella Hall), Father Anatole (Charles H. Mailes), an old priest who had loved her mother years before, and Duval (Victor Rottman), an ambitious violinist, journey to America. Good fortune is not theirs. Duval attempts to earn a living in an east side cabaret but is thrown out when he plays classic music. He finally is obliged to pawn his instrument for food. Afterwards he goes to Sonia Maroff (Gretchen Lederer), a rich Russian lady of loose morals, who offers to establish him in the world of music. Yvonne, by singing in the cabaret earns enough money to buy back the violin. Going to Sonia's home she discovers Duval in her arms. He, sobered to a sense of decency by her presence, returns to make a home for her.

"Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp"

(Fox Kiddie Feature—Eight Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"ALADDIN AND THE WONDERFUL LAMP" is an excellently done picture, largely enacted by the clever group of children whose immediately previous success was "Jack and the Beanstalk." On an evening last week at the Globe theatre a large audience, composed for the greater part of adults, were enthusiastic at every act of the child players. In their sincere and altogether effective efforts to emulate the expressions of matured performers while portraying mature emotions, the kiddies constantly command attention and alternately move the audience to laughter at their antics and amazement at their remarkable cleverness.

Particularly does Francis Carpenter shine as Aladdin. His knowledge of mimicry instilled in him, perhaps, by the directors, C. M. and S. A. Franklin, knows no bounds. His scene on the desert where he becomes prostrated because of lack of water is a piece of acting that stands out. In the closeups the little fellow reveals a pretty face crowned with a wealth of curly yellow hair. Virginia Corbin as the Princess performs with a sincerity that startles. Violet Radcliffe as the magician makes a fine young boy. Her exaggerated gesticulation in portraying this villain lends to the role a touch of light burlesque that registers with a laugh many, many times. Of the rest of the children Gertrude Messinger is the most prominent. As the lady in waiting to the Princess, she also is responsible for a great share of comedy. The rest of the children and the skilled adult players give valuable assistance in making the illusion complete.

The story of "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" is based on the familiar story that lies within the covers of the "Tales of the Arabian Nights." Bernard McConville provided a colorful scenario for the co-directors and they, in turn, have given it a dazzling production. The oriental settings are fit to rival those used in the most pretentious of special productions. Children will revel in the fantastical picture of the underground cave where Aladdin goes to fetch the magic lamp and the immense streets peopled with players in costumes of the Far East and the interiors of the palaces place the picture on a high plane as to production.

The Franklin brothers must have labored long on the many big scenes, but even more so on those in which the children hold the center of attention. High praise should go to them for they have accomplished much—have turned out a picture that will live for all time and be of amusement to children and grownups always. The story, measured by the standards of the day, is padded. There are unnnecessary closeups which seem to repeat certain parts of the action, but these closeups show the kiddies and when one goes to see "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" one naturally goes to see the kiddies and heartily enjoys their presence.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The villainous magician (Violet Radcliffe) finding that the Princess Badr al-Budur (Virginia Corbin), daughter of the Sultan (Alfred Paget) looks with disfavor on his attentions seeks out his Evil Spirit (Buddy Messinger) for advice. The Evil One tells him to procure a certain magic lamp hidden away in an underground cave. The magician being so villainous as to be unable to procure the lamp himself employs Aladdin (Francis Carpenter) to fetch it. Aladdin, on procuring the lamp, realizes the wickedness of the magician and keeps it himself. Taking advantage of its magic power he wishes himself rich and thereafter courts the Princess himself to the accompaniment of great wailing and grinding of teeth by his rival.

Subsequently there is plot and counterplot, the lamp changes hands many times and the rivalry between the magician and Aladdin becomes melodramatic, with the Princess always favoring the latter. Finally the magician has the Princess in his power, far off on the desert where a palace has been erected by the spirit of the lamp. He threatens to throw her to the lions unless she marry him and Aladdin and the soldiers only arrive in the nick of time to save her from death. The magician is killed, Aladdin regains the lamp and he and the Princess live happily ever after.

Fred Turner, Joe Singleton and Elmo Lincoln complete the adult portion of the cast, while other children are Lewis Sargeant, Marie Messinger, Carmen De Rue, Raymond Lee and Lloyd Perl.

"Stranded in Arcady"

(Pathe Plays—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

HERE is a picture that ought to prove a box office winner. Added to the great popularity of Mrs. Vernon Castle and the world-wide advertising that she has been given, "Stranded in Arcady" teems with action. Although the story itself is a highly improbable one, it maintains the tensest interest to the end and one does not know the solution of the highly puzzling series of events. There have never been made five reels that have more action in them, ranging all the way from the poison needle down to the 90-foot leap into the river from a cliff, and including desperate battles in the rapids. Francis Lynde, the novelist, has written the sort of a story that, when printed in book form, causes one to sit up until the last page is reached, and the direction of Frank Crane is flawless. The production was made by Astra. It is the first of the Castle series to be shown.

Practically the whole of the production consists of exteriors and there are some unusually beautiful scenes.

Mrs. Castle has never done better work. If she continues these thrilling stories she is likely to challenge some of the other stars for the title of "daredevil of the movies." However, just enough of the interior scenes are given in the opening of the story to permit her to appear in several gowns that will interest women. In another portion of the story she discards her skirt and leaps into the water, and in the latter part appears in male attire. Elliott Dexter plays opposite her and is convincing. These two players occupy practically the whole time on the screen, the other parts all being decidedly minor.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Donald Prime (Elliott Dexter) has just written a novel and at the club is told by his friend Girdner that he doesn't know anything about women and ought to be marooned with one a couple of weeks. Another person overhears the suggestion. In the meantime Lucy Millington (Mrs. Castle), a society dancing instructress, is seen giving lessons when a Mrs. Wells calls and begs Lucy to come to Quebec and perform at an entertainment she is giving. At the same time that Lucy leaves Prime is preparing to go on an automobile tour to Quebec with Girdner when he gets a message saying that Girdner will meet him in Quebec. On the way in the auto

Prime is drugged and Mrs. Wells administers the poisoned needle to Lucy, whom she meets at the same station. When they both recover consciousness they are in a wild and desolate spot. Before discovering the presence of Prime, Lucy sees a knife duel between two guides in which both are killed. Finally she and Prime are thrown together and Prime tells her that he is sure that Girdner is responsible. Lucy blames Prime, especially when she recalls that he said in his novel that ninety per cent of the women are brainless. Then follows a series of hardships in which Lucy proves herself far the most resourceful of the two. They find a canoe and are trying to escape from the island and are caught in the rapids. Lucy saves the author's life. They manage to reach land and there find themselves captives of three ruffians. Lucy's clothes are almost torn from her and she is given a suit of male clothing to wear. That night they see a chance to escape and find they must jump from a cliff. They are recaptured. Finally the third man who was present at the club appears on the scene in a motorboat and the pair hear him tell how he saw Prime kill the two men who were found dead on the island and the gang start in to make Lucy and Prime pay for the alleged crime. Just at the proper moment Girdner appears and a fight follows in which the tables are turned. In the meantime Lucy and Prime have pledged their troth, and Prime starts in to take vengeance on Girdner, who explains. He had nothing to do with their imprisonment, but the telegram received by Prime was a fake, and as soon as he learned of it he started to investigate. He found that a rich man in Quebec had died leaving a fortune to Lucy and to Prime, children of two of the dead man's best friends. But the will provided that if they did not appear within a specified time the money should go to the dead man's secretary, who turns out to be the man who overheard the plot at the club and his confederate, Mrs. Wells. Then follows a motor boat race to the lawyer's office, Prime and Lucy arriving just in time to claim the estate and send the conspirators to jail.

"Fools for Luck"

(Essanay—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IF they liked "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," they're going to like "Fools for Luck," for it contains the same fine brand of comedy and some human interest action that penetrates under the skin because it is so real. Taylor Holmes is its star, and the story is again borrowed from the pages of the Saturday Evening Post, only this time it bears the name of Kennett Harris as author. In passing, it might be remarked that an author who sells to the Post has something containing an appeal that is pretty near universal. So pictures made from Post material carry the same weight. Style is another thing which the editors of the paper demand; and in Essanay's pictures, at least, the style is retained in the subtitles by a very wise adaptor. The comedy in the lines and the comedy in the ideas share honors.

"Fools for Luck" concerns the superstitious Philander, who treasures horseshoes, a rabbit's foot, lucky coins, and refuses to walk under a ladder and take the third light from a match. In the opening reels a fine load of comedy is extracted from Philander's various superstitions. You simply have to laugh at it unless you close your eyes. About at the meridian the picture takes a turn for the serious, and Philander discovers that, with horseshoes and all, his job, his girl and his money take to themselves wings because of constant poker and drinking sessions. This latter part contains so much sound reasoning behind its human appeal that it will certainly be appreciated.

The story has been given a production that is adequate without being pretentious, while the supporting cast contributes sterling work. Taylor Holmes, it might be remarked, is bound for stardom at top speed. Those who already know him like him, and more pictures like "Fools for Luck" and its fine forerunner, and every one will know him.

THE STORY AND THE PLAYERS

Philander (Taylor Holmes) is a clerk. He believes that his small success is due to keeping on the right side of superstition. On his vacation he meets the girl, Brunhilda (Helen Ferguson). They become engaged. But a few months later Philander loses his job because of his gambling and drinking—and the girl too. He goes down and down and gradually casts aside his superstitions. Then he gets another job, but refuses to get another drink and so he comes up in the world again. Looking through an old book he discovers a four-leaf clover given him by the girl for luck and this sends him running back into her open arms. And as the author asks "What do you think about superstition anyway?"

Robert Bolder, Frankie Raymond, John Cossar, James C. Carroll and Ed. Cooke furnish the support.

"The Painted Doll"

(Russian Art Film-Pathe—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is the first feature among the newly acquired collection of Russian pictures to be exhibited by Pathe for review. It is a tragedy based on the eternal triangle—a tragedy because the Russian producer only employs the happy ending when it is altogether logical. It was made in Russia and a cast of Russian players successfully interpret all the parts, both principal and extra, to a degree that can safely be termed flawless from a technical point of view. Tanya Fetner, who essays the most prominent part, is an actress who puts body and soul into her role with all the sincerity at her command. The impression she creates is one of great appeal. For that matter each of the other three named players work with a vim and vigor that is seldom found in the work of domestic players. It takes a little time to become accustomed to such portrayals.

"The Painted Doll" was written by A. Pauzakin, and the director in charge bears the name of Cheslor Sabinsky. The story, though simplicity itself in the telling, is replete with situations from which unusual power has been derived. There is no doubt that A. Pauzakin is a skillful dramatist, for in these situations he has revealed himself as capable of creative work that should earn him all manner of praise. However, the exhibitor looks first and foremost to the probable effect it will have on its audience. That "The Painted Doll" will score successfully in its opening reels is altogether probable—partly on account of the fact that there have been few if any Russian pictures exhibited in this country heretofore, and partly because the work of the cast and the true and tried character of the plot demand interest on their own account.

The latter part of the subject drags to some extent and might appear to better advantage if the extra one thousand feet were eliminated, thus making it standard feature length. The players applied makeup too heavily in some of their scenes, while the photography seldom reaches a degree of merit to be compared with that grade of work turned out by our own producers. The settings in every detail are very good.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Ivan Kreslof (Ivan Mozakin), having lost all interest in his home because of the neglect of his wife (Mme. Lesinko) turns his attentions toward Tanya Lensky (Tanya Fetner), wife of one of his employees. Seeing that the young woman is pleased with him he sends Lensky (P. F. Sharoff) away on a business trip. When the unfortunate man returns he finds his wife the mistress of Ivan. Enraged, he seeks him out, determined to kill him. A servant interferes. Ivan, seeing a way to get rid of Lensky for all time, stabs the servant in the back, then accuses the other man of the crime and later learns of his execution. Tanya, her constant pleadings to Ivan to divorce his wife having failed, realizes that she means little to him—is merely a Painted Doll. Ivan, conscience stricken, confesses all to his wife. She urges him to try to bear it for the sake of their son's name. But it proves impossible and Ivan, after going hopelessly insane, dies.

"Baby Mine"

(Goldwyn Pictures—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

MARGARET MAYO'S celebrated farce comedy as made into a picture by Goldwyn is bound to prove one of the most successful farce comedies that the screen has ever seen. "Baby Mine" will bring a twinkle to the eyes of the "man who never laughs" and make the cynic forget himself. When it was shown to capacity houses at the Strand theatre it called forth gale after gale of laughter that swept the house. It is advertised as the "picture of a thousand laughs" and the announcement does not exaggerate.

"Baby Mine" should prove even more successful as a film production than it was on the speaking stage, for the screen permits a range of action that was not possible in the spoken form. And as a picture there is none of the cleverness of the spoken word lost for the titles are unusually clever. Practically everyone of them brought the quick response of laughter, it seemed, almost before the audience had time to read them. Goldwyn has given the farce a superb production. There are some splendid lighting effects and the direction of John Stuart Robertson and Hugo Ballin is of the highest order.

Madge Kennedy, the star, promises to exceed her popularity of the speaking stage. She screens perfectly. There is something about her screen work that reminds one at once of Billie Burke and of the Gish sisters at their cleverest best. She is a woman of unusual beauty and is able to grasp the comedy expressions perfectly. And to that she adds the quick gracefulness of youth. John Cumberland, as Jimmie, has the chief male comedy role and shares with the stars in the laughs. Frank Morgan as the husband, and all the remaining members of the cast do splendid work. A bunch of babies register pronounced hits.

THE STORY AND THE PLAYERS

Zoie (Madge Kennedy) is a young bride who looks on the lighter side of life, who loves society, suppers and the theater, much to the alarm of her very serious minded husband, Alfred (Frank Morgan). Her guileless deceptions cause her entanglements, and finally the end comes when her husband, on his return to the city, finds that she has been to lunch with another man. The other man is really Jimmie (John Cumberland), the husband of her best friend Aggie (Kathryn Adams), and the meeting was purely accidental, but first the young wife denies she has been to lunch and further entangles herself so that her husband leaves her and moves to Boston. Zoie is really devotedly in love with her husband and she and Aggie fix on a plan to effect his return—through the arrival of a baby at the home. So Alfred is "prepared" by a series of illusions. Meanwhile the two young wives have "gone shopping for a baby" and find one that suits, only the Italian mother (Sonia Marcelle) will not agree to give it up. However, the hospital director assures Zoie that he will gain the mother's consent in the morning and Jimmie is sent to the telegraph office. But instead of sending a night letter, he sends a day letter and back comes the reply that Alfred is coming home that evening. Jimmie is dispatched to steal the baby and succeeds, only to have the mother on his trail. No sooner has Alfred taken "his son" in his arms than the conspirators learn of the angry mother on their trail. Just as all seems to be lost comes the news through her daughter (Virginia Madigan) that Zoie's washerwoman (Nellie Fillmore) has given birth to twins and Jimmie is sent to borrow one. He succeeds, but as he is about to make the exchange Alfred enters the room and the only explanation that can be made is that "it is twins." Then comes the bright idea to borrow the other child of the washerwoman, and again Alfred discovers the three of them and the admission must be made that "it is triplets." But then comes the angry mother on the trail and the father of the twins (Jack Ridgway), on returning home, learns what has happened and goes after his infants. Meanwhile discovering the Italian mother after her child, Alfred puts police on guard to watch for kidnappers with the result that she, the father of the twins and Jimmie are all arrested as kidnappers. After no end of complications, each one bringing a laugh, the fiction is ended and Alfred and Zoie are reconciled when she tells him to "be patient."

"The Apple-Tree Girl"

(Edison-Perfection Pictures—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE APPLE TREE GIRL" is endowed with a very pretty production. Scenes on the golf links and on the old New England countryside furnish it a setting that is always a delight to the eye. And Shirley Mason fits well into the setting—being something of a delight to the eye on her own account. At first she appears as a poor school girl, the butt of her haughty cousin's sarcasm. This reflects on her character a certain amount of sympathy that awakens in the onlooker the hope that she will some day show the haughty lady how good she really is. And she does, of course.

The psychology of "The Apple-Tree Girl" is, however, rather false. We hardly think that a girl who had an exaggerated idea of her own beauty and social importance should be constantly stuffing the position of her poorer cousin down her throat. She might say mean things behind her back, but such a type would have the brazenness to be hypocritical when she came face to face with the other. In one respect Shirley Mason was a bad choice for the title role. She believes herself homely, and no girl as pretty as Miss Mason would be thinking herself homely. One look in the mirror and a certain personal pride would do its work over and above the quips of a sarcastic cousin.

In these respects the picture presents artificiality at a high degree. Mayhap there are those who will appreciate the girl's position and sympathize with her. But these people would themselves fail in sketching a true character. It is the good production, the prettiness, that counts in "The Apple-Tree Girl." Joyce Fair is the unreal haughty cousin and Paul Perez a likable hero.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Charlotte Marlin (Shirley Mason) lives with her rich relatives. Margaret (Joyce Fair) her cousin is constantly horrid to her. After graduation Charlotte loses what little money she has and is forced to take up teaching in a country school. Three questions puzzle her: how to make everybody like her; how to make herself famous; and how to marry a millionaire. She solves the first by being kind to everyone else, the second by taking up golf and defeating the world's champion. The third she can fulfil, but all of a sudden the realization that love means more than money dawns upon her and she marries a comparatively poor doctor.

Jessie Stevens and William Wadsworth head the supporting cast, which is generally well selected.

Conquest Program No. 10

(Edison—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

"YOUR OBEDIENT SERVANT," a story suggested by Anna Sewell's famous book, "Black Beauty," is the feature picture on the Conquest program No. 10. It strikes a very human element and though the story that it tells is very sketchy it is likely to carry a considerable appeal. The horse is one of the best actors in the picture, animal of rare intelligence. The riding scenes are overdone to the point where they become tiresome. Peggy Adams and Pat O'Malley have the leading roles, and there are some genuine negroes in the cast who enact their roles naturally. The story, briefly, tells how "Black Beauty's" strength saves the life of the young master's mother and then how the master, now a Confederate officer, is shot and left for dead and "Black Beauty" carried off to the North. The horse goes through many adventures until he is finally sold to a cruel cab driver. There in all his misery "Black Beauty" is discovered by his former master, who was only stunned in the fight during the war, and the faithful animal is taken back to his Southern home.

Mildred Havens and Ray McKee are the featured players in "A Duke for a Day," a three-reel comedy which could very well have been reduced to a single reel and would still have left plenty of room for all the laughs that the three-reeler got.

Robert Browning's poem, "The Pied Piper of Hamelin" is pictured in a single reel. It will especially interest the children.

"Angling for Trout" shows some pretty scenes at a Pennsylvania millionaires' fishing club, while the remainder of that reel is devoted to "Raising Ostriches in South Africa."

"Flirting with Death"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

FOR a story replete with interest from many points of view let us commend "Flirting with Death." The picture is based on "Sky High," a story by Waldemar Young and Frank Dazey, and brings one into actual contact with "small town" stuff, from its annual invasion by a circus, through the throes and thrills of a parachute descending from a balloon, and the woes of a love-sick girl for one of the circus "fellers," down to the catch-penny tactics and side shows of such affairs. The flying trapeze and other stunts are adequately portrayed, the photography is uniformly good, even down to the look of disgust on the face of the water boy bewailing his fate 'cause he can't "fill the elephant."

The sheriff has his trouble, too, but taken all in all it's a fine production and cannot fail to arouse interest, if not enthusiasm in most houses, for everything portrayed is so homelike and natural.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Two side show "fakirs" of a country circus, "Sky High" Wardwell (Herbert Rawlinson) and "Domino" Dominick (Frank McQuarrie) are jailed by the local constabulary for running a game of chance. They break jail and by means of a convenient freight train land in the city of Watabunk (state not stated). They make an impression on Jane Higginbotham (Brownie Vernon), daughter of Dave Higginbotham (Marc Fenton) and are admitted to the family circle. Old Dave Higginbotham has for years been working on an idea of an infallible aerochute, and these two astute worthies proceed to put it on the market. This fact, and the fact that Jane looks favorably upon them, hurts the feelings of her former lover, Ed. Warmboth (H. F. Crane). He, therefore, investigates their career and learing of their having broken jail informs the whole town of the fact and to make good "Sky High" decides to test the aerochute. This he does successfully and the day is saved.

"The Sunset Trail"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE SUNSET TRAIL," Vivian Martin's current picture presents an average little story, a bit unreal in spots, yet offering her a part of the sort she well knows how to carry. As Bess Aiken, a girl who has been reared in innocence of the world outside her mountain home, she creates an appealing character. The part of Camilla Aiken, the girl's mother, seems somewhat artificial with its chameleon-like changes of character. At one instant her dominating passion is mother love and at the next a desire to defeat the ends of a man she dislikes overwhelms it. This might have failed to intrude as an erroneous piece of character drawing had not Bess been painted as totally unaware of her mother's worldliness and willingness toplace implicit confidence in her judgment. Added to this there is the unexplained dislike of Camilla Aiken for the hero.

But such faults make minor impressions in comparison to those created by the picture's merits. Miss Martin's charming refreshness is set off to ideal advantage in the opening reel, which introduces several pretty mountain locations. The photographic effects are some of the best which the Lasky company has offered and this means much. There is some telling contrast introduced by flashing back and forth from the wholesome home of old Judd to the mountain lodge where society holds sway, and this results in the production of a strong vein of pathos, the interpreters of which are Judd and his partner.

George Melford directed, working on a script prepared by Beulah Marie Dix from a story by Alice McIver. Good assistance is rendered by each and every one of the supporting cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Camilla Aiken (Carmen Phillips), after deserting her husband, Judd (Charles Ogle), for a society man. Theolar (Henry A. Barrows) returns to the vicinity of her old mountain home on a house party. Bess Aiken (Vivian Martin), who has remained with her father, secures his permission to visit her mother. She attracts the attentions of Levington (Harrison Ford), an upright young man toward whom Camilla is antagonistic. Bess refuses to place any confidence in Levington, and begins a career of cocktail drinking and cigarette smoking, sponsored by her mother. She in the meantime carries on a flirtation with another man. Bess encounters them in the midst of an embrace, and her illusions regarding her mother are shattered. But when Treolar arrives on the scene she claims the attentions of the other man in order to shield her mother. Despondent she wanders away from the house. Camilla in a moment of love for her daughter lets the truth of her affair be known. After an all-night search instituted by Levington, Aiken and his partner (Billy Elmer), the girl is found, and all ends well for her and Levington.

"The Heart of Ezra Greer"

(Thanhouser-Pathe—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

FREDERICK WARDE and the Badgley children, Helen and Gerald, form the center of interest in this sentimental offering by Lloyd Lonergan. The vehicle was obviously written specially for this trio, with Mr. Warde carrying away the greatest acting honors, while the kiddies contribute a considerable share of comedy. Mr. Warde's big scenes, it must be confessed, are all more or less noticeable for the "acting" part furnished him. He goes through these studiedly and slowly, and, although every point is made clear beyond a doubt, the mechanics of the action seem too apparent.

To offset the sentiment contributed by the three above-mentioned stars, there is a young lady by the name of Lillian Mueller who carries a "baby vamp" part to excellent advantage.

Mr. Lonergan's story cannot be termed unconventional. The story of the girl betrayed by a supposedly sincere lover and left to suffer trial after trial has been seen many a time before. However, lovers of the sentimental will watch "The Heart of Ezra Greer" with interest. Its main element is sometimes overdrawn to give Mr. Warde an opportunity to register a fact that is known to be coming, but this appears to be its only major shortcoming.

Emile Chautard has given the picture a production, apropos in every respect, and which, in some of its spectacular scenes such as the cabaret, warrants no slight praise.

THE STORY AND THE PLAYERS

Ezra Greer (Frederick Warde), an old valet, learns that his daughter, Mary (Leila Frost) has run away with a school mate, John Denbeigh (George Forth) after her graduation. He resigns his position and starts a search for Mary. Later he obtains a position as valet to Denbeigh who is leading a worthless life. Greer is largely responsible for Denbeigh's awakening to the shallowness of his surroundings. Mary, one day, leaves her child in Denbeigh's care. An accident to the child later proves the means of reuniting Mary and Denbeigh, who has completely reformed.

Two Episodes of "Grant, Police Reporter"

(Kalem—One Reel Each)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE MYSTERY OF ROOM 422" and "A Deal in Bonds," one-reel numbers with George Larkin, daredevil par excellence in the principal role of each, are short subjects, the likes of which are seldom if ever offered the exhibitor in this stage of the picture business. They combine thrills and quick, suspenseful action to a remarkable degree. Either one of them appears worthy of a place on the best of programs, for even with such spectacular thrills as one often sees nowadays he may justly be amazed at the sensational stunts performed by Mr. Larkin.

Robert Welles Ritchie, author of the previous "Grant, Police Reporter" series, wrote the two in hand. They are skilfully constructed stories, presenting a maximum amount of action in a minimum amount of footage. In all sincerity there are five-reel pictures issued week in and week out that contain not as much action as there is in these. The scenes are short, each one it seems, holds it own important place in the story—there are no scenes that might be edited out.

Mr. Larkin is a remarkable athlete as well as a daredevil. He can scale the side of a building with ease, and stepping from window sill to window sill with scarcely a hand hold is to him, it seems, easier than walking on Broadway after theatre time. Such examples of his ability are given in both these pictures. A new stunt is also introduced in "A Deal in Bonds." From the roof of the building he descends several floors and enters a window by placing a flagpole, around which is wound a rope, from roof to roof, and then hanging on while it unwinds to his weight. A stunt of equal daring is done in "The Mystery of Room 422," when he swings from a rope into a hotel window.

"A Deal in Bonds" has some comedy besides. This is introduced by Mary Taylor-Ross as Jenny Dobbs, a character that might be first cousin to the late Hetty Green. This old lady is kidnapped by gangsters who learn that she has just made a purchase of a half a million dollars worth of bonds. They attempt to force her to sign an order for the release of the bonds. Grant, who has previously attempted to interview her, effects her rescue. A comedy touch is registered at the finish, when Jenny Dobbs extracts the bonds from her umbrella.

"The Mystery of Room 422" concerns Grant's successful efforts to solve a murder mystery. An innocent man is accused of the crime, but Grant traces the real criminal to his lair and after a healthy fight subdues him. Ollie Kirkby assumes a leading role in each picture, while the supporting casts are quite efficient. Robert Ellis directed and has done work which, though below average in some instances, is satisfactory taken as a whole.

"Ashes of Hope"

(Triangle—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"ASHES OF HOPE," authorship of which is credited to Thomas H. Ince, has the Western dance hall for its chief locale and the queen of all the dancers for its chief character. Triangle treated a like story with respect to its leading character, in the recent "Flame of the Yukon," and while this present picture is not as pretentious in either setting or length, it presents a strong story, well written and very capably presented, livened by the customary barroom action and its incidental strenuous fight.

Belle Bennett is featured as Gonda, queen of the dance hall and one of those ladies that authors of pictures paint as virtuous despite their vampire cloak. Gonda attempts to lure her man, Miles Norton, by a generous display of limb but still with this act and bits of a kindred sort, she is as pure as a New England schoolgirl. This premise is rather a difficult one to believe, but it is perhaps unfair to mention it with respect to "Ashes of Hope" when it is so generally in use. Miss Bennett is very pretty to look upon although her acting, as yet, lacks spontaneity and in some of her closeups one can almost hear the director directing.

Walter Edwards has given the picture an excellent setting. The Western atmosphere is well maintained, the fight is well staged and the action never drags at any place. Some of the subtitles are, in their fantastical composition, mindful of earlier Ince subjects and might be toned down and modified to better advantage, but all things considered "Ashes of Hope" makes capital entertainment of its sort.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Gonda (Belle Bennett), stellar attraction in the dance and gambling hall operated by "Ace High" (Jack Richardson) attempts to fascinate Miles Norton (Jack Livingston), a peculiarly indifferent stranger, but meets with little success. When, however, he gets in a fight, because of her, and beats his opponent to a pulp she nurses him back to health. He then professes to love her and promises to marry her, but upon receiving a letter from the East from his wife informing him that he is no longer suspected of murder, he sneaks away. "Ace High," in love with Gonda, learns of this and, pursuing him, shoots him down and leaves him for dead. At night Miles returns to hold up "Ace High." He is captured and things look black for him until Gonda, upon learning that he has a child waiting for him at his distant home, assists in his escape.

"The Fatal Ring"

(Pathe—Fourteenth Episode)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THRILLS continue in this serial as it draws to its close. In the episode in hand, entitled "The Painted Safe," a number of melodramatic situations of the Nick Carter variety are introduced to sensational effect. First, Pearl is rescued from her perilous position beneath the ferryboat. Carslake leaps overboard from the tramp, and is thought to have gone to the bottom of the river with the Violet Diamond in his possession However, he is quite safe, and, eluding Pearl and Carlton on shore, places the gem in the keeping of a pawnbroker. The broker places it in his safe. With the Spider's assistance, Pearl cuts through the door of the safe with acetylene and removes the stone. To conceal these operations a curtain containing a replica of the real safe and its immediate surroundings is hung before it. Pearl and the Spider all but make their escape when Carslake and his gangsters, in the uniforms of policemen, take them captives.

"The Secret Man"

(Butterfly-Universal—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

EVEN special followers of Harry Carey and the Western type of melodrama will find small satisfaction in sitting through the five reels comprising "The Secret Man," in which this popular actor is starred.

Virtually the story, prepared by George Hively, deserves a much smaller allotment of footage, while the characters in it are generally unskillfully drawn. "Cheyenne" Harry is modeled to draw upon the sympathies, to be sure, and, by reason of the introduction of "the little child shall lead them" thread, succeeds in so doing to a slight extent. But the other characters are made to do such contrary things that they never become firmly planted.

The picture abounds in some striking Western views of rolling plains, with cattle grazing; and the attempted escape of Harry from the posse is the speediest episode in it. Jack Ford directed.

THE STORY AND THE PLAYERS

"Cheyenne" Harry (Harry Carey) is aided in escaping from jail by Beaufort (Morris Foster). He secures a job as cowboy, but before long the sheriff (Vester Pegg) gets on his trail and he is forced to flee. The foreman (Bill Gettinger) of Beaufort's ranch has been told by his employer to see that his (Beaufort's) and Molly's child (Elizabeth Janes) be spirited away until further notice. Pedro (Steve Clemente), bus driver, takes the child on his trip. The horses run away, Pedro is killed, while the child is discovered by Harry. On seeing her suffering from thirst he gives himself up to the sheriff in order that she may live. The sheriff believes Beaufort unmarried to Molly (Edith Sterling), his sister, and so goes to kill him. Harry breaks from jail and prevents the tragedy because of the former good turn done him by Beaufort. The death of Beaufort's uncle makes possible the announcement of his marriage.

"The Sultan's Wife"

(Keystone-Triangle—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

BOBBY VERNON and Gloria Swanson carry the principal parts in this comedy which makes entertainment of a commendable sort. The Sultan sets eyes on Gloria and then attempts in divers ways to obtain her for his own but thanks to Bobby and Teddy, the clever Keystone dog, she is rescued.

The settings for "The Sultan's Wife" are lavish and the action is nearly always laughable. The picture does not, however, contain the dashing, rip-roaring chase usually appended to the end of Keystones, to which all the former action leads. This, though, is not missed as the offering presents another type of comedy having laughs enough in less elaborate action to put it cleanly over.

"Conscience"

(Fox Film, Standard Picture—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY R. M. JOHNSON

PHOTOGRAPHICALLY this picture is striking and unusual. In the scene depicting the court of Conscience there are double exposures that surpass all recent tricks of this kind. Gladys Brockwell takes the part of Ruth. In this scene it is supposed her astral body stands before a court in which a veiled figure—Conscience—presides. Other veiled figures stand as accusers.

One after the other these figures, representing Lust, Avarice, Envy, Wicked Ambition and the like, are unveiled. In each instance as the veil is thrown back there stands Ruth herself, in the characterization.

It is uncanny almost to see Gladys Brockwell in three or four different forms on the same picture. It is led up to in a way that makes it logical enough. This is accomplished by motion picture tableaux that preface the development of the plot—if plot it may be called. If "Conscience" had only these first scenes it would be noteworthy for its photography. First there is the poet Milton, blind, dictating Paradise Lost. It is a fac simile in moving picture of a painting that is hung in a local gallery.

Then follow scenes that are clever reproductions of the most vivid of Dore's pictures of the entrance to the place of eternal torment. The spirits are driven down, down by the devil himself. The blazing fires, the fiery wand in the hand of the Archangel Michael, the unrest of the condemned, the whole artistry of the picture compares favorably with the screen masterpieces.

The theme is the marshalling of the past before Ruth as she stands in the court of Conscience. The scenes pass before her—the scene on a yacht where, being threatened by an illicit lover, she locks him in her cabin, and then herself gets in the first boat that leaves as the burning craft sinks, and the other scene in which she lures away the simple sweetheart of a young country girl, who in her despondency throws herself into the sea.

So charming and beautiful is "Conscience" pictorially that it is to be regretted that these scenes illustrating the evil that Ruth has done are too frank. It is said the picture is now six reels and is to be cut. It is to be hoped the cutting will be judiciously done, by elimination of eight foot kisses and other too candid proofs of the girl's reckless youth. It is a pity to ruin an admirable production with this kind of slush.

THE PLOT AND PLAYERS

Gladys Brockwell as Ruth has possibly done her best work before the screen. Another excellent characterization is that of Bertram Grassby who takes the part of Dr. Norton, really the devil. Colin Chase as Ned Langley, wireless operator, gets an excellent opportunity. Charles Kaufman, who was at the camera, deserves full credit, as does Bertram Bracken, the director. J. Searle Dawley and E. Lloyd Sheldon have certainly achieved a real novelty.

"Some Nurse"

(Strand-Mutual. One-Reel Comedy)

REVIEWED BY T. G. SPENCER

BILLIE RHODES and Jay Belasco as May and Jack respectively have put over some stunning comedy in their Strand series, but "Some Nurse" surpasses them all. There's real humor, an entire absence of the "slap stick" in most of them, but this one abounds in mirth-provoking qualities. The whole theme is woven around two ardent, serious lovers seeking the hand of a fun-loving, heartfree, frivolous girl. It's a positive winner anywhere and is scheduled for release October 2.

"Jerry's Big Deal," a Cub single reel comedy, was released September 27 last, and in this George Ovey assumes the character of Rev. John H. Little and on being received at Hicksville by his deacons and parishioners begins at once to fall in love with the daughter of one of the deacons. He later, however, surprises them in a poker game, and after admonishing them insists on getting into the game. By clever manipulation he cleans them up and is about to make his getaway when exposed by the presence of the real Rev. Little. He has to make a hasty exit, but he contributes all his winnings to the Red Cross.

"Officer Jerry." (Cub-Mutual. One-reel comedy.) In this single-reeler George Ovey again resorts to his wits to get into the presence of his girl, this time by throwing a tailor's dummy into the lake and hollering for help. A policeman, anxious to do a deed of daring and save a human life, sheds helmet, coat, badge and belt and makes the dive. Jerry appropriated the dismantled apparel and appears at the house of his girl's father to undertake the duties of a "special officer."

It is up to the general run of "Jerry" comedy and will certainly draw a laugh.

"Birds of a Feather"

(Rolin-Pathe—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

HAROLD LLOYD, better known as Lonesome Luke, and his large group of clever team mates strike their old stride in "Birds of a Feather"; a fast and furious and funny stride that never abates in any of its departments. The comedy is typical Rolin stuff. There is a lot of kicking, falling and fighting, all done in such a nonchalant way that it registers as unusual comical rough-house. In between the more conventional gags are interspersed a number of new ones that display the inventive genius of the producers to good advantage.

"Birds of a Feather" introduces Luke as owner of a lunch counter. He comes into a million, and thereupon makes his debut into "smart" society to rather disastrous effect. He finally throws all his fashionable guests out of his house, and subsequently opens the doors to his old friends. Bebe Daniels, Harry Pollard and Margaret Joslin appear in other important parts.

"The Eyes of the World"

(W. H. Clune—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM J. McGRATH

A PHOTOPLAY that pleases the eyes; foils the censor and will bring delight to the thousands who have read it is "The Eyes of the World." Clune produces every once in a while but when he does he gives quality. It is artistic and dramatic as was evidently designed and should meet with just as much approval as its predecessor under this banner, "Ramona." The picture is a dramatization of Harold Bell Wright's story. The Wright readers number way up in the thousands and the screen portrayal of it is bound to meet with popular favor.

No display of pastoral paintings could outshine the beauty and selection of the mountain and valley scenery that is a big feature of the production. It would be an ace in the hand for any California booster. The musical accompaniment at its first showing at the Auditorium, in Chicago, is splendid and adds materially to the silent beauty of the picture which fences in the dramatic action.

The story is ingenuous but nevertheless interesting. It exploits the triumph of good influence over bad. Shows how the clean, mouse-like type of a girl used her aura of purity and the strings of a violin to charm her beloved away from the wiles of a sophisticated temptress.

Once again we have Monroe Salisbury and beautiful Jane Novak with us in this picture. As Sybil her work in the allotted part is one of the bulwarks of the picture. Then there is Jack McDonald, Kathleen Kirkham, Edward Peil, Jack Livingston, Arthur Tavares, Beatrice Burnham and Fred Burns giving worthy and often scintillating support to their leads.

Punctuating the quiet trend of the film in general are several thrills that one is loath to pass over. The fight on the dizzy mountain ledge and a fall down the side of a mountain by a horse and rider are these. It is the sort of a production that a state rights man should seize with avidity and reap profits therefrom.

LATE NEWS

Goldwyn Employees Raise Voices Against War Tax

More evidence of the unwelcome nature of the war tax on theatre tickets, which move has passed the Senate and awaits action of the House, was uncovered last week. Members of at least one big motion picture producing and distributing organization are uniting to protest what seems to them an undue handicap of the various theatres.

Employees of Goldwyn Pictures, acting in concert, with stimulus provided by the facts in the case presented to their attention by an executive department, are forwarding their views on the subject to their various Congressmen in a final effort to modify still further the tax action. Provided this measure passes the House, it will go into effect November 1. The stiff fight which has been waged since the introduction of the bill caused a postponement of four months, and representatives of the industry still hope to make the suspension permanent.

The Goldwyn organization has a membership of more than 350 persons, covering every motion picture territory in the country in home offices, branch offices, studios and laboratory.

"Public Defenders" Invited to Raver Trade Show

Harry Raver last week sent telegrams personally to each of the nineteen "Public Defenders" throughout the United States inviting them to the initial exhibition of "The Public Defender," the screen production based on the book of the same name by Mayer C. Goldman. Assurances were quickly received by Mr. Raver that the majority of the official "Public Defenders" of the country would be present at the premiere. The consensus of opinion seemed to be, according to the telegrams sent in to Harry Raver's office, that the screen version of "The Public Defender" will give a great impetus to the movement started by the author of the book, Mayer C. Goldman—said movement having for its object better treatment and a fairer deal for poor persons accused of crime in our courts of law.

"Honor System" Finds Favor with Numerous Critics

The critics in the various cities where R. A. Walsh's master film, "The Honor System," has been shown have been much in favor of the production, according to the printed reviews. The Boston newspapers, as well as those of Chicago, were unusually profuse with adjectives in writing up the picture. In addition to this mark of approval, which is supposed to carry with it also the opinion of the general public in the immediate vicinity, two Governors attended performances of "The Honor System" in Boston recently.

The production was made by William Fox, under the direction of R. A. Walsh.

Exhibitors Asked to Help Conserve Food

Campaign Planned for Motion Picture Activities During Conservation Week in October Affords Chance for Patriotism

THE Motion Picture Division of the United States Food Administration announced last week through its president, Arthur S. Friend, who is also treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky, that motion picture exhibitors will in October have an opportunity to demonstrate their devotion to the United States. The exact dates set cover the week of October 21 to 28. The call to exhibitors is made, it is announced, for their co-operation and active participation in the drive for enlisting the Food Conservation Army. The technical name of the movement is the Food Pledge Card Campaign.

Concerning the movement Mr. Friend said: "Not only are exhibitors requested to exhibit pictures bearing upon the campaign, but they are also urged to make prominent display of slides, posters and other matter supplied for exploiting this tremendous campaign for the conservation of food in the international crisis.

"Samples of the slides are to be sent to all exhibitors. There are two series, one for the week of October 14, a preliminary series, and one for the week of the campaign, marked A and B, respectively.

"It is the desire of the Food Administration that the motion picture exhibitors of the United States shall fully appreciate the importance of this campaign, the gravity of the situation, and the manner in which they can materially assist.

"On October 21 the first of the official pictures of the Food Administration will be released. It will constitute a portion of the weekly news reels of Pathe, Universal and Mutual, so that every picture theatre in the country subscribing to any one of these three news weeklies will be able to show it. The picture shows the signing of the Food Bill by Senator Saulsbury, President pro tempore of the United States Senate, in the presence of Senator Chamberlain, who led the fight for the bill from the floor of the Senate; the signing of the bill by Hon. Champ Clark, Speaker of the House of Representatives, in the presence of Representative Lever, who fought the bill through the House and in the Conference Committee; and Mr. Hoover himself as he came from the White House just after having been appointed by President Wilson as United States Food Administrator.

Enclosed please find check for $2.00, in payment of one year's subscription to the NEWS. Mailing address is given below, and as soon as we change address, which we expect to do shortly, will notify you.

Incidentally, when you publish the Studio Directory again, don't leave me out for I've got a hunch I'll be back scribbling and maybe directing again in one of those Los Angeles (good old Los Angeles) Studios, and I don't want to come back and find I'm forgotten entirely.

This troop will act as headquarters troop for one of the National Guard divisions, which expects to go over the seas soon. Probably we'll have Thanksgiving dinner in France, and positively Christmas dinner. Can't tell but what we'll eat New Year's dinner on the steps of Kaiser Bill's castle in Berlin, who knows?

Start my subscription to the NEWS as soon as possible as I expect it to be great company for me, reading of the doings in the Studios.

Geraldine Farrar with Goodwyn Pictures in 1918

Opera Favorite Plans Winter Season of Concert and Opera Work Before Commencing Work on First Goldwyn—More Artcraft Releases Coming

ANNOUNCEMENTS from Los Angeles state that contracts have been signed whereby Geraldine Farrar, noted American opera diva and motion picture star, will next year appear in pictures for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Lou-Tellegen, husband of the singer, is declared to have completed negotiations in New York recently and the last details of the arrangements were successfully agreed upon.

Miss Farrar last year appeared under the Lasky banner, and this summer has also been working under a Lasky contract which runs until May, 1918. She is at present putting the finishing touches on her latest Artcraft picture at the Lasky Studios, in California, under direction of Cecil B. DeMille. Upon its completion Miss Farrar has announced she will return to concert singing and the opera for the season as she did after her picture work last year.

The opera star in her screen debut scored a big hit in a version of the operatic favorite "Carmen." It was at the Lasky Hollywood Studio that she met Lou-Tellegen, and the close association of studio work, and mutual admiration for each other's talents, developed the acquaintance into a love affair culminating in the marriage of the two.

In "Joan, the Woman," Miss Farrar eclipsed her performance in "Carmen," the picture running for months in New York to crowded houses. Her latest production is "The Woman That God Forgot," while the title of the subject on which she is now working is announced as "The Devil's Stone."

Both the Art craft and Goldwyn offices in New York declined on Monday to make any statement in reference to the Pacific Coast announcements. It was declared by the Artcraft officials that all statements regarding the diva's plans must come from her, that nothing is known here concerning them.

Newspapers Dub William Fox "The Aesop of the Movies"

"ALADDIN and the Wonderful Lamp" is drawing well at the Globe theatre, where it opened Monday. The New York critics have this to say:

The American.—"It is spectacular. It is more exciting than the biggest screen 'thriller,' and a thousand per cent. more wholesome."

The World.—"Distinctly repeats the success of 'Jack and the Beanstalk.' The children display very remarkable prococity as film actors."

The Herald.—"The picture has many ingenious effects in the numerous indoor and outdoor scenes."

Evening Sun.—"The adult will find entertainment in the film version of that popular child story."

The Evening World.—"Was not only beautifully done, but interested the older folks as well as the children who packed the theatre."

Harriette Underhill in the Tribune.—"It shall merely be stated that we enjoyed it more than anything we have seen this season."

Morning Sun.—"William Fox, the Æsop of the movies, is presenting in the second of the Kiddies' feature series on the screen of the Globe theatre."

Herbert Howe to Edit Triangle Magazine

If Kathleen Clifford Can Keep Up This Pace, Paramount's Serial, "Who Is Number One?" Should Move Any Audience Right Up to the Extreme Edge of Its Seats

Chaplin Getting New Stage for Day and Night Work

Charlie Chaplin has completed his twelfth and final production to be issued under the Lone Star trade mark, and thereby fulfilled his contract with the Mutual Film Corporation for $670,000. Finishing "The Adventure," the comedian starts his affiliation with the First National Exhibitors' Association, and during the next eighteen months will make eight pictures for a consideration of $1,075,000, with additional payment in the event any of the eight subjects measure more than two thousand feet.

Plans for a new studio to be located in the Hollywood or Melrose section of Los Angeles are now prepared by architects and call for a plant second to none in Southern California. Particular attention is to be given to the stage, which will be of exceptional size and fitted with a diffusing system designed by Chaplin. This will be of such nature that the stage may be used during the rainy season or at night by the use of artificial light.

John Jasper, who has been manager of the Lone Star Studio since April, is to continue in the same capacity for Mr. Chaplin, and it is believed all members of his company and technical staff will be retained.

Carl Laemmle Finds in West a Manager for the Broadway

Al. Nathan, who fore the past three months has served as manager for the Superba theatre, Los Angeles, owned by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is shortly to go to New York, where he will take up the management of the Broadway theatre, an institution now leased by President Laemmle of the Universal.

No successor has been named for the management of the Superba in Los Angeles. Nathan is a former San Francisco exhibitor and theatre manager, and is a live wire. His advertising, lobby displays and business getting ability were recognized by President Laemmle when in Los Angeles, and the result is the promotion to the management of the Broadway.

Harry I. Garson, former general managing director, is giving all his time to the Clara Kimball Young Film Company, although he still retains heavy holdings in the theatre and is the president.

Exhibitors in Maritime Provinces Joining A. E. A.

Upon his return from the Maritime Province Motion Picture Convention held at St. Johns, N. B., Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association, announced that while the convention had voted to postpone indefinitely any affiliation with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, a majority of the members had joined the A. E. A.

Mr. Pettijohn was enthusiastic over the support he received from the exhibitors in that section of Canada, and has been asked to work in conjunction with the attorneys of the Canadian exhibitors in fighting adverse legislation. Mr. Pettijohn, Rose Tapley of the Vitagraph Company and a number of exhibitors of the Maritime Provinces had an audience with Premier Foster of New Brunswick, who was enlightened on the subject of film taxation from the exhibitors' standpoint. He expressed wonder when told that many of the exhibitors frequently lost money when playing some of the bigger stars, although their theatres were packed, because of the high cost of film rental, and made money on the lesser celebrities of the screen with houses not entirely filled. The Premier said he thought the exhibitors should band together to fight the star system.

Premier Foster invited Mr. Pettijohn to appear before a meeting of all the premiers of the Dominion of Canada when they next convene, to address them on matters of interest to Canadian exhibitors, which invitation has been accepted.

Marshall Neilan, Pickford Director, of Draft Age

Marshall Neilan, it seems, is only twenty-six years old—and of draft age. This is a subject of some worry to his employers.

It was Neilan who directed Mary Pickford's latest Artcraft triumph, "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," and who, at present, is working on "The Little Princess" for "America's Sweetheart," which will be released sometime in November.

Neilan has spent most of his life in association with either the stage or screen. When he was six years old, in San Francisco, he played a child actor part at the old Alcazar theatre in that city.

"No Electric Signs" Possible Order to Theatres

Darkened theatre fronts may be a result if Dr. Harry A. Garfield, coal administrator, adopts the most radical plans for conservation. It is admitted the country must save fuel and eliminate waste.

Dispatches from Washington state that it has been urged that electric signs are unnecessary. This would hit the theatres which make use of them everywhere.

Every industry in the United States comes under the scheme worked out by Dr. Garfield as a war measure. The coal will be distributed through the country by means of an elaborate staff of local coal administrators, according to the actual needs of the different communities.

A full announcement of what may be expected in the fuel conservation campaign will be made at a later date.

Canada Overloaded With Films—Business Poor

W. A. Bach of Universal Outlines Conditions in Provinces—Mushroom Exchange Growth Hurting Business—No Market for All Film Brought In

CONDITIONS have been generally extremely poor in motion picture circles in Canada during the Summer, according to a statement made last week by W. A. Bach of the Universal Film Company. In a resumé of the causes of the depression, Mr. Bach said:

"Canada has just passed through the worst Summer in its existence, as far as the moving picture business is concerned. Especially is this true in the east provinces.

"Proof of this fact may be seen in the absolute closing of the St. Denis theatre of Montreal, a modern theatre seating 3,500 people, now in liquidation, and which is not likely to open during the duration of the war. Moreover, the increase in the seat tax in Quebec provinces has closed at least six houses that were unable to pay the taxes. One standby for the exchanges in the summer has been the stock and vaudeville houses, which use pictures in the summer to offset the regular attractions during the winter months; but unfortunately the bulk of these have remained dark the entire summer through, and consequently the exchanges have suffered a loss of several thousands of dollars that they had counted upon in the past.

"These closings, business troubles, etc., may seem trivial to a territory like the United States, where 12,000 theatres are constantly in operation; but in Canada, where there are only 883 theatres open all the time, and these spread over the continent and only serving a population of under 7,000,000, the consequence can be imagined.

"Yet to judge from the rush of film into Canada, the opening of new exchanges and the investment of capital in huge quantities, would indicate there was a tremendous business to be done.

"For instance, this fall the following companies will be operating in Canada selling films from pictures like "The Lone Wolf," "The Barrier," "Come Through," etc., down to the regular program releases, as follows: Canadian Universal Film Company, General Film, Mutual Film.

"State rights features releasing "Come Through," "Pay Me," "God's Law," etc.

"Regal Films, distributing Goldwyn pictures and state rights productions.

"Independent Film Company of Montreal, "Art Dramas."

"H. B. Wright of Calgary, releasing "The Barrier" and other similar pictures.

"The Globe Film Company, showing "Redemption," "Mothers of France," and Ivan films.

"Triangle pictures are being marketed. Metro pictures have their exchanges.

"Special Film and Import Company are distributing Pathe.

"It is also reported on good authority that Mr. Griffin of the Griffin Circuit has purchased the Canadian rights to "The Lone Wolf" and the new Petrova pictures, as well as a host of smaller exchanges releasing pictures of sorts.

"Where all this vast quantity of film, the influx of which is increasing every week, is going to find a market, let alone a profitable market, in 833 theatres, is a question that is going to take some answering, and it is the opinion of everyone versed in the Canadian situation that there is going to be a considerable amount of money lost during coming season by investors in the Canadian market.

The only hope for Canada is in the reduction in the amount of film being brought in and also in the number of exchanges operating in the territory, because there is no chance of the number of theatres in the Dominion or the seating capacity rising owing to the demands of the Government and the war in the way of taxes, increased prices, etc."

This Director a Real War Hero in France

Bennett Molter, formerly one of Metro's directing staff, is in this country on the twenty-one days' leave of absence granted him as a volunteer in the French army. He arrived on the Espagne. Mr. Molter is a pilot aviator, a member of French Escadrille No. 102.

This is one of the crack escadrilles, and one of the four upon which has been conferred the privilege of wearing the Fourrageres decoration, given for exceptionally good work. In a recent encounter with enemy planes, this escadrille brought down twenty-four Boches, losing only three men in the encounter.

The former assistant to William Christy Cabanne at the Metro Studio handles four different types of aeroplane, the Bleriot, Spad, Morane Parasol and Nieuport.

Mr. Molter was recently injured in the attack of July 22, but after his visit home will go back "looking for more trouble." He has for some time been stationed on the Flanders front, at various points between Nieuport and Ypres.

He went directly from the boat to the Metro Studio, 3 West Sixty-first street, where he was greeted by his former coworkers, and with his special "pal," Robert J. Huntington, business manager of the Cabanne forces, proceeded to see New York all over again.

Good Pictures Make Better Prices Easy

In view of the price-raising campaign now going on, the experience of Howard J. Sheehan, managing director of the Rialto theatre, San Francisco, is of particular interest. He simply booked a superlative box-office attraction and broke his house record. In a letter to Pathe's San Francisco office, Mr. Sheehan says:

"I cannot help expressing to you my satisfaction with the results thus far obtained through the exhibition of your picture, 'The British Tanks in Action at the Battle of the Ancre.' As a matter of fact, notwithstanding that last Sunday inaugurated a change of policy in the Rialto theatre, in that we raised the prices from ten, twenty, and thirty cents to fifteen, twenty-five and thirty-five cents, all house records were broken, both in dollars and cents and the number of admissions played to."

Plans Ready for Releasing Liberty Loan Film

All Film Exchanges Will Handle Feature, Starring Leading Screen and Stage Players—No Rental Cost to Exhibitors

THE committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which has been appointed to co-operate with the Government in the promulgation of the loan soon to be launched by the United States, has already completed its plans for the distribution and exhibition of the Liberty Loan film, in which forty leading stars of the stage and screen appear, together with numerous public characters.

The second Liberty Loan picture comprises five distinct subjects, each about five hundred feet in length, any one of which is a complete episode in itself. It is explained by the committee that any one of the five episodes can be shown by exhibitors in any sequence as there is nothing to indicate that any one film follows another. The subject of the films are all of a distinctly patriotic and historical nature, presenting upon the screen in the persons of the most distinguished stars the greatest characters in the history of the country—the signing of the Declaration of Independence, and twenty or more other memorable events in the history of our country are enacted upon the screen by these stars, always with a view to kindling a patriotic spirit.

Chairman Zukor appointed A. L. Lichmann, sales manager of Paramount, as a committee of one to supervise the distribution of the production, of which there will be five hundred prints in all. It is the purpose of the committee to have these five hundred prints shown in as many communities and theatres as is humanly possible during the time that the campaign for the second Liberty Loan is in progress. With that end in view, Mr. Lichmann has ordered the managers of the various Paramount exchanges scattered throughout the United States to obtain, from each exchange of all other motion picture companies operating in their respective territories, a complete list of all theatres which their exchanges are serving. The territory will then be apportioned to each of the several exchanges and they will be furnished with the names of the various towns in which they will handle the distribution of the second Liberty Loan film. By this method every exhibitor in the country will be reached and the dividing up of the entire production into five separate parts will enable the exchange managers to give the picture the widest possible distribution.

Among the personages and stars who take part in this production are President Wilson, Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo; Dudley Field Malone, late Collector of the Port of New York, and Thomas A. Edison; De Wolf Hopper, Raymond Hitchcock, Douglas Fairbanks, Julian Eltinge, William Hart, Wilton Lackaye, David Warfield, William Courtleigh, Clifton Crawford, Leon Errol, Edmund Breese, Jack Hazard, Jefferson DeAngelis, Hal Forde, Paul Everton, Jed Proudy, Tom McGrath, Will Rogers, John Drew, Barney Bernard, Mary Pickford, Lillian Russell, Mabel Taliaferro, Beverly Sitgreaves, Mrs. William Courtleigh, Billie Burke, Pauline Frederick, Ann Wheaton, Nance O'Neil, Ethel Barrymore, Elsie Janis, Laurette Taylor, Marguerite Clark and Lillian Walker.

Realignment Closes Houses in New Orleans

Motion Picture Industry Stands Unaffected by Changes, Although Smaller Theatres Are Placed in Precarious Position—"Better Theatre" Movement

THE end of the summer vacation period has brought a distinct realignment of amusement interests in New Orleans and some of the changes already made have been marked and others are altogether probable. The motion picture industry has not suffered by these changes, although some of the smaller houses have found themselves in a precarious position and others have already been closed.

Early in the movement for better theatres and better programs came the Saenger Amusement Company with the Strand theatre and its very pretentious program, including Don Philippini and his orchestra as a permanent feature; a magnificent pipe organ, and the best pictures the market afforded. The Strand gained instant favor. Then in September the Crescent theatre, which had been a popular-priced dramatic house, was taken over by the Marcus Loew interests and made a combination picture and vaudeville house. The same thing was done with the Triangle theatre, which had been made a popular motion picture theatre under the management of Ernst Boehringer. The Triangle is under the direction of the Orpheum circuit and is now called the Palace. Both of these theatres have been doing a phenomenal business and the Strand has held up remarkably well.

The effect of this realignment first made itself apparent by the closing of some of the smaller "store shows" in the downtown section. The first to close was the Dreamland, in St. Charles street. Later the Dreamworld, which was one of the old Fichtenberg houses, located in Canal street, was dismantled, and rumor has it that several others will be closed within the next few weeks.. The Diamond theatre, running straight pictures and having a seating capacity of about 2,500, has been having a very satisfactory business despite the "pop" vaudeville opposition close at hand.

The closing of the smaller theatres does not indicate a falling off of patronage. On the other hand it indicates a growing demand on the part of the public for the better form of entertainment, and the distinct preference is for motion pictures presented in the modern manner. The same conditions that exist in the downtown section obtain among the suburban theatres. The modern ones are enjoying fine business and the "dumps" appear to be doomed. The public demands the best pictures and it knows what are the best. It is absolutely useless to try to run an old film and "get away with it," and the exhibitor who tries it generally suffers diminishing receipts for some following his expriment. Naturally, there is a strong spirit of optimism among the exhibitors and the outlook for the winter months is exceedingly bright.

H. A. Benie has completed a $10,000 theatre at Rayville, La., with a seating capacity of 1,000, and this house will be under the management of Jack Wineland, an experienced exhibitor. In the more important cities of the state projects of unusual moment are under way and will be rushed through as fast as conservative work will permit. Heading these is the Liberty theatre, in New Orleans, which, after annoying delays, is now under way with every available man at work. This theatre is the project of the Boehringer Amusement Company. Contracts have been executed for the erection of a duplicate of the Liberty theatre on the site of the present Elks theatre in Baton Rouge, and other theatres of the same class are to be erected in other cities.

New Glass Enclosed Stage Approved by Lasky

Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced on his recent arrival at Hollywood, Cal., that the majority of the productions of the company would be made in California during the coming winter. He added: "Within the next few months a number of the Eastern stars will arrive, and I have just O. K.'d the plans for a new $50,000 glass inclosed stage, 85 x 250 feet in size, to accommodate the increased production activities. Also there are to be new concrete property rooms, among the largest of their kind in the country.

"I came West," continued Mr. Lasky, "to consult with C. B. De Mille, Thomas H. Ince and Mack Sennett regarding future Paramount and Artcraft productions. I find that they are delighted with the spirit of co-operation developed among the studios here in the West."

Out of the conferences arranged by Mr. Lasky with the various studio heads will undoubtedly grow many new ideas which will be put into practice just as soon as plans are perfected. The exact nature of the subjects to be discussed is not as yet available.

Capacity Business on Pathe Serials, a Buffalo Record

Bruce Fowler of the Olympic theatre, Buffalo, has written the following letter to N. I. Filkins, Pathe manager there:

"We have shown more serials in conjunction with our regular vaudeville programme than any theatre in Buffalo and each serial has had from a six to seven day run.

"Seven photoplays in serial form is our record and with the exception of two they have all borne the Pathe trademark. 'The Red Circle,' 'Who's Guilty?' 'The Shielding Shadow,' 'The Double Cross' and now 'The Seven Pearls' have all played to capacity business and each one has proven better than the preceding one."

EXHIBITOR PERSONALS

ALBERTA.—Calgary: George Aylsworth of the Princess theatre has returned to the United States to join the colors. George will be missed by his many Calgary friends. He has done much to put the Princess on the map.

ARIZONA.—Miami: Fred Green, owner of the Unique theatre, has installed a size 40 Photoplayer made by the American Photo Player Co. of New York and Berkeley, Cal.

Globe: L. T. Gaines and L. A. Goodenough, lessees of the Martin theatre, have installed a No. 40 Photoplayer, of which C. W. Cooper, late of the Burbank theatre, Los Angeles, Cal., is the operator. The photoplayer is a distinct novelty in this part of Arizona, and has created quite a stir.

Charles Alden, part owner of the Dime theatre, left a few days with Mrs. Alden for Los Angeles and the California beaches in their new Hudson Super Six.

Safford: Charles Gilpin, owner of the Safford theatre, has installed a new Simplex machine.

Phoenix: George Mask of Phoenix is reported very sick. He is the owner of a chain of theatres in this state. He has the Columbia and the Amuzu in Phoenix, Iris and Juarez in Ray, National and Rex in Hayden, and the Isis in Florence. He is a well known and well liked picture show man and all who know him wish him a speedy recovery.

CONNECTICUT.—Hartford: The Scenic motion picture theatre on Bank street which has been closed for the past week is to be reopened in a few days under a new management. Orlando P. Smith, who has conducted the house for over a year, disposed of the equipment together with the business to Salvatore Foti of 53 Meadow street, Hartford, a few days ago. The latter's son, Samuel Foti of New Haven, has come to this city and will manage the house for his father. Fotis stated that they intend to have vaudeville acts and music with the pictures.

ILLINOIS.—Newton: Frank Stanley, proprietor of the Garden summer theatre has again shown his patriotism, liberality and public spirit by donating the entire proceeds of his Bluebird photoplay for one night to Company B, and also by contracting with the Jasper County Fair to give a free high-class moving picture show each evening of the fair in front of the amphitheatre on the fair grounds. This arrangement will not interfere with Mr. Stanley's regular programs at Garden summer theatre.

Decatur: Joseph Allman has leased the Avon theatre to a company who will take the active management of it in the immediate future.

INDIANA.—Williamsport: Manager Reece has made some very noticeable improvements in the Princess theatre the past week. The front has been changed and redecorated. The operating booth has been enlarged and made to comply with the state fire laws. In due time a second machine will be installed and this will add considerably to the pleasure of the shows, as there will be no stopping to change reels—the show will then run as one continuous reel. Mr. Reece has also installed several more electric fans along the walls. This will make the room cool and comfortable on the warmest nights. Those who attend the shows will not be tormented with the heat. Mr. Reece is booking some of the very latest shows, one of which is "Medicine Bend," featuring that well-known and daring acress, Helen Holmes.

Waynetown: Chase McDermond, who established the Orpheum theatre three years ago and has made it one of the most popular motion picture houses in this part of the state, sold out recently to John Lape, formerly of this city, but who for some time has been in business in Williamsport.

Fowler: F. O. Bryson has sold the Fowler theatre to Andrew La Fountain and Ed. Martin, and they took charge two weeks ago. Ancil Gay will remain as operator.

IOWA.—Cherokee: John Williams has purchased the Happy Hour theatre.

Storm Lake: Edward Roberts has leased the Princess theatre.

Council Bluffs: Exhibitor L. Marcus of the Majestic theatre is installing a $4,200 Bartola, larger than any in Council Bluffs or Omaha, just across the river. The theatre is being redecorated and remodeled, the balconies taken out and the seating system rearranged. A Gold King screen has been put in. These changes, says Mr. Marcus, are being made in preparation for a big opening, when the first of the new Paramount-Artcraft pictures will be shown. The Majestic admission price will be raised to 20 cents for the new pictures. It is now 10 cents.

MINNESOTA.—St. Paul: Ruben and Finkelstein have taken over the Strand theatre, which makes nine now controlled by this firm in the Twin Cities.

Rushford: Milton Radke, manager of the Elite theatre moving picture business in this city, has sold out his interest to O. K. Quarve of Rushford, who will hereafter conduct the business of the opera house, of which he is the manager. Mr. and Mrs. Radke will make their future home in Detroit, Mich.

We claim—and can prove it—that in the you get more real value than you can in any other projecting machine on earth at any price.

WE COULD CUT DOWN OUR COST $50.00 and no one but an expert would know it. That doesn't mean it wouldn't be found out later on, for it would be, and "later on" is not a good time to find out things about a machine you buy. The live exhibitor has "found out" the real QUALITY and high class projection obtained from the MOTIOGRAPH—that is why the large number are being sold.

ALTERNATING CURRENT

All A.C. Difficulties Overcome.
Intense Illumination—Noiseless Projection.
A bright, flickerless, eye-resting light.
Perfect operation with an arc that will not wander.

The new Speer "Alterno" Carbon means the realization of all that A.C. operators have long hoped and wished might be perfected. It means that photoplays can now be projected on A.C. with the same degree of satisfaction as D.C. It facilitates the showing of a film with an intensely bright light, produced by an absolutely flickerless, noiseless arc.

No new costly and elaborate equipment needed. Merely the proper setting of the Speer "Alterno" upper and lower carbons in the same old holders. The carbons perform almost incredible results. A.C. operators' duties are greatly simplified and made a real pleasure.

An Appeal from an Exchange

THERE is no need, as the writer of the following letter suggests, of additional comment. This letter speaks for itself and brings out points which should be of universal interest to exchange men, theatre managers and operators alike:

Mr. Wm. Johnston, Motion Picture News,
110 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Illinois.

Dear Sir:

There has been so much said and so little done in the past few years about the manner in which an exhibitor handles the advertising matter and films sent him from an exchange. The lack of care which he displays with film, photographs and slides shows clearly that this is a subject on which much stress can be made by the trade's papers and an opportunity for much good is apparent.

The cost of photographs as you know, is approximately $1.25 per set. The cost of film is four cents per foot. The way it is handled in 70 per cent of the operating rooms in the theatres you would think that it was of absolutely no value.

For a long time I have contended that the awful condition in which film is returned from some houses shows clearly that the management of these particular houses is at fault in not insisting upon employees giving proper and due attention to the condition and return of rented materials.

For instance, last week I had a film returned from Rock Island which the exhibitor had cut into ribbons. When I say "ribbons"—I mean just what I say. The film had been cut into with a knife and it was returned to us in probably six hundred pieces. A letter accompanied the film saying that the film had been received in bad condition and that this was his way of getting even.

Advertising matter is returned from several theatres in such shape that it cannot be used again. We are always careful about our shipments to see that everything goes out in the best of condition. Our Inspection Room, we feel is perfect—a corps of experienced workers are employed in both this department and the Shipping Department, and particular stress is laid on the handling of film.

If these incidents were only brought to our attention once in a while it would not be so bad, but they are becoming universal. It seems to me that with the high class of men which we have engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures, with the standing that most of them have in their individual towns and cities, and the fact that they themselves are a part of the fourth largest industry in the United States, they themselves are catering to the best in their individual neighborhoods, that they would in a measure feel and be responsible and take pride in saying that each individual exhibitor throughout their territory would get and receive all rented materials from an exchange in as good condition as it was possible, in so far as he personally and his help was concerned.

I believe that there is a big field open for a strong editorial on this subject and I trust that you will find some way that will serve to bring this matter to the attention of the guilty and bring about an improvement.

When I tell you that the complaints about the return of film in bad condition are practically universal and occur in each exchange in Chicago, not once but several times each day, and the fact that the cost of film service and advertising matter has advanced in the past few years to double its former amount due to, among other things, a few of the above abuses, you can appreciate the value of this to your subscribers.

Yours very truly,

THE NATIONAL ANTI-MISFRAME LEAGUE, which has at the present time 500 members, is through these members endeavoring to right the very condition which is shown up so admirably in this letter.

Films are maltreated in the Projection Room, perhaps not universally so, but in a sufficient number of instances to leave little doubt in the minds of exchange men that the entire operating fraternity practices vandalism.

On the other hand, the film exchange is not free from blame, for in a great many instances they send out film in such a condition that a decent show is absolutely impossible. As stated before on this page, this is, to a very large extent, due to the fact that all the film rentals at the present time are at such a low rate that there is absolutely no money in handling the film and still keeping it in order. This is one of the troubles which will ultimately be corrected.

One of the main troubles at the present time which must ultimately be eliminated is the fact that every exchange man is suspicious of every theatre manager and every operator and that every theatre manager and every operator is suspicious of the exchange man, whereas they should be cooperating every minute to help make their respective branches of our industry more efficient and more profitable.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Lombard to Lecture to the I. P. A., Inc.

THE department has been requested to announce that the second lecture to be given to the members of the International Projection Association, Inc., will be delivered by A. P. Lombard of the Precision Machine Company, on Friday evening, October 5, at the club room of the association, 652 Bergen avenue, Bronx, N. Y.

Mr. Lombard, an operator, is another one of those who have "risen from the ranks" and now holds a responsible position with the manufacturers of the well known Simplex projector. In choosing a topic which he thought would be of interest as well as a source of information to the members of the I. P. A., Inc., he chose "Mechanism," which will, I believe be an interesting talk on the manufacture, efficiency and upkeep of the Simplex, and a subject which will bring out an even greater crowd than that which ushered in the first lecture by one of the members of the association as described in last week's NEWS.

National Anti-Misframe League

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Notice! Anti-Misframe League Members

Membership cards are now ready and are being sent out as fast as possible. There are a number of operators, however, who have neglected to send in the desired information. If they will fill out the blank and mail to me, button and membership card will be forwarded to them.

Member's Name .....
Home Address .....
Name of theatre where employed .....
Address of theatre and name of manager .....

This notice does not apply to those who have already sent in this information, but it is for those who have neglected doing so, many of whom have merely given their name and name of city, without any street address, making it impossible for the post office employes to deliver the letters addressed to them. Now let us all get together and raise our "Army of 1,000," and show that we are sincere in our efforts to better conditions in general. I. G. S.

The Roll of Honor is something to be proud of this week, covering as it does nearly all parts of the United States as well as a part of Canada. Many of the names are those who are affiliated with the I. A. T. S. E. Especially is this true of the boys registered from Sioux City, Iowa, all members of Local 355, which local has, as was announced in this department a week or so ago, decided to reduce its initiation fee for a limited time in order to give all those operators living and working in its jurisdiction an opportunity of becoming better workmen as well as good union men.

Still the League is a long way from the 1,000 mark which we have set, and many have expressed the hope of reaching 10,000 instead of the smaller figure. Well, the more the merrier; so come on, boys, and let us all get together and pass the 1,000 mark before Christmas.

To Save Film Cement

A. S., Worcester, Mass., writes: "Can you tell me anything about a Spanish carbon? An operator showed me one but he did not know the name of it, or who sold it, and there are no distinctive markings on it. It is very glossy, that is what shows up most, and of course, I am taking his word that it is Spanish.

I have found the following plan a good one for saving film cement and to keep it from getting too thick: Take an ordinary film cement bottle, get a new cork, one that will stick out far enough to be grasped by the fingers and into this cork fit a small camel's hair brush. Now take an ordinary candle and melt enough of it in a small can cover to soak the cork in, keeping the wax hot and letting the cork soak until it has absorbed enough. Do not get the wax too hot as the cork will blister. With a cork treated in this way, the cement will not stick, the cork will keep its shape and consequently keep the bottle tightly closed and prevent the cement from evaporating."

IN REPLY: To answer your inquiry regarding the Spanish carbon, I would say that there is such a carbon, but I do not believe you would care to use it, for from experiments that have been made by various operators they have been found most unsatisfactory. The U. T. E. Co., 729 Seventh avenue, New York, have a supply on hand if it is your desire to give them a trial, and you may communicate with them for prices, etc. The suggestion you offer for the saving of film cement is a good one, and I am passing it along for the benefit of others. I might say, however, that some managers and operators too save cement by not buying any.

NATIONAL MAZDA

It has been certain from the beginning that there would one day be a NATIONAL MAZDA lamp with which motion pictures could be projected at a practical cost.

Here it is.

This lamp gives an absolutely flickerless light!

It sharpens and steadies the pictures. Once focused, it requires no adjustment. It leaves the operator "nothing to watch but the film," and he is therefore able to devote all his attention to giving you better pictures.

It reduces the fire hazard. It does not, like other illuminants used in projecting pictures, contaminate and overheat the air in the operator's booth and threaten his health.

And it saves money besides. It saves two-thirds of your current, saves on condensing lenses, saves on carbons, saves on adjustments and repairs.

Because of these many advantages, NATIONAL MAZDA will rapidly supplant the older light-sources in motion picture projection—just as it has supplanted them practically everywhere else.

For full information about this new lamp or for help on any theater lighting problem, write your supply house or Nela Specialties Division, National Lamp Works of General Electric Co., 141 Nela Park, Cleveland, O.

Manager Works While Operator Plays

W. E. SOUTHWICK, Cherokee, Oklahoma, writes: "I have been reading the NEWS every week and I notice that the National Anti-Misframe League is making some headway. I have been slow in writing this letter as I have been very busy; my operator being away on his vacation made it necessary for me to do my own operating. It seems like old times to get in the booth (please, please say operating room—ED.), as I am an operator and electrician by trade. I opened up this place the 20th of last November, and if I do say it myself, I am running one of the best shows in northwest Oklahoma; nothing but high class features. Have a Minusa screen and a 1916 A1 Motiograph, throw is 76 feet, and I am using 60 amperes. You will note that we are using plenty of amperage, but as I am my own boss now, and light is what I want, light is what I get. There are too many managers that try to "save" by cutting down on the current, which also tends to "cut down" on the profits or receipts. I have found that when a patron pays to see a show they expect to see it and not have to turn to their neighbor and say, "What did that title read, the light was so bad I couldn't read it?" And, of course, the operator gets the blame. Did you ever hear of anything like this? If you haven't, drop down in this neck of the woods and I will point out to you many such theatres, many of them in larger towns than Cherokee. But I have gotten off the subject I started to write about. I am enclosing the application of my operator for membership in the N. A. M. F. L., and I hope his name will be placed on the Roll of Honor, and if managers are eligible I would like to have mine there too. Wishing the League all prosperity and hoping to see our names on the Roll, I will bring this to a close."

IN REPLY: First let me say that you, even though a manager, are eligible for membership in the League, and you will note that the names of yourself and operator have been placed on the Roll of Honor. I trust that the vacation was mutually enjoyed and that brother Huff returns to work more than ever anxious to do his best in putting over a show which will be a credit to him, and to you, his employer. In describing your equipment you did not state whether you were using A. C. or D. C. I wish you would write me giving further and more complete data regarding your operating room equipment; what current and voltage, also whether you use rheostat, transformer or motor generator set in connection with the arc.

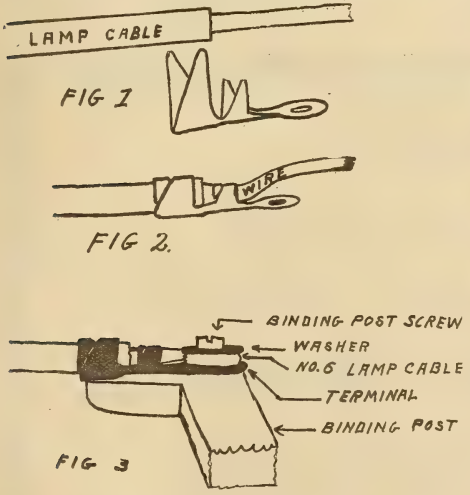
I agree with what you say regarding those managers who try to effect a saving at a loss, and yet you will agree there is such a thing as using too much current, but of that I will have more to say after you have forwarded me the desired information. A patron most surely has the right to expect a good show, for that is what they are paying for and unless a good show is given—they don't come again.

Non-Burn Off Terminal for Five Cents

DARREL S. KEPPLER, Crawfordsville, Ind., in his letter of September 6, says: "I see my last stunt 'passed' so here is another one. This is the way to make a good, solid, non-burn off terminal at a cost of but five cents. Enclosed you will find a drawing explaining to the best of my ability, my method of doing it. First take a terminal like the one shown in the drawing (made by Bell & Howell Co.), strip the asbestos covering of the lamp lead for about two inches from the end, then put the terminal on the lamp lead, clamping the large prongs of the terminal over the cable and the small prongs over the bare wire, this leaves about one and one-half inches of cable extending from the terminal; now take the screw out of the lamp binding post and put a washer on it, place the terminal on in the usual way, except that before tightening up on the binding post screw the cable (that part of it extending from the terminal) must be wrapped around it, then tighten up on the screw and that's all there is to it."



"Non-Burn Off Terminal for Five Cents"

COMMENT: The drawing is, I think, self explanatory, and I am greatly obliged to brother Keppler for the suggestion. I would like to know, however, just what commission he is receiving from the Bell & Howell Company. The men engaged in the operating game who have experienced trouble in the past by reason of lugs burning off unexpectedly are recommended to try this stunt, some may be familiar with the idea, some may not. It is the some who may not that I am trying to reach. Come again, say I to brother K, and all you other members of the N. A. M. L.

Stronger Light

The light from an Alternating Current arc comes alternating from both carbons, while from a Direct Current arc it always comes from the same carbon. The Direct Current arc can therefore be arranged so that the maximum amount of its light always passes through the lens, while it is impossible to do this with an Alternating Current arc. A Direct Current arc also gives off more light for the same current than an Alternating Current.

If your electric service is only Alternating Current, a

A Loyal Member

CHARLES BURKHOLDER, Anderson, Ind., member of the National Anti-Misframe League, and president of Local 628, has this to say: "I received my membership card and button some time ago and think they are great, but I have not yet received the stickers which I would like to have very much. I am president of Local 628, and the only member of the League from our Local. One of our members told me that he had been working for the Misframe League for five years and has not joined it yet. I told him that I had worked for it for seven years and am a member of it, and was not ashamed to let others know of it. We ran a six-reel feature last Wednesday and when it was received we found that the name of brother Charles Wheeler, Lebanon, Ind., was on the sticker. This was the first film I had received from a brother member of the League, and I want to say that brother Wheeler is certainly living up to the pledge; I did not have to make a patch the entire day. I hope that the other members will be just as conscientious as the brother whose name I have mentioned. Well, there is nothing more to write about, so I will close, hoping to get the stickers very soon."

In reply: It is a pleasure for me to receive letters like the above. It not only shows that there are some who have the welfare of the industry, and not their own personal aggrandizement at heart. This letter from one who is a member of the League, and not afraid to let others know it, expresses to me something of the ability of brother Burkholder. As president of the Local, he perhaps, more than any other could do much to increase the membership of the League and help us reach the 1,000 mark. I will forward the stickers you request, at once. For your kind words, complimenting brother Wheeler, I thank you.

Size Screen

NEWCOMERSTOWN, OHIO, writes: "Will you kindly advise us correct size for a screen, and size of lens for a house 22 x 90 feet, with a 17 ft. ceiling. Our throw would be 90 feet."

ANSWERS It seems to me that a picture 18 feet in width and 12 feet in heighth would be just about ideal for this condition. A lens of 5 in. focus will do the trick and give a picture whose exact measurements at 90 feet will be 12.3 x 16.8. However, if the ceiling is only 17 feet above the floor, I would advise a smaller picture, say a 10 x 14, which would call for a lens whose focus is 5¼ inches. This will allow the picture to be on a line with the eyes of the audience and also allow those seated in the rear of the auditorium to have a clear view of the screen. On the whole I would suggest the latter instead of the former, for I believe the audience will be better satisfied with the smaller size picture and the added brilliancy which is obtained with a smaller picture, and using the same amount of current which would be required with the larger picture without its advantages.

WHAT is undoubtedly an announcement of interest to the motion picture industry is the statement that Thomas H. Ince delivered his negative of "Civilization" to the Shipman Photo-Process of Los Angeles and secured from the negative all the large "still" photos which were in evidence during the New York run of the picture and throughout the country. Many of these enlargements were almost life size, and were enlarged from the film by a secret process. Mr. Ince was so pleased with results that his order is said to have entailed a cost of $2,000.

The new process of clear and effective enlargement is a step further on the road of film accomplishment, and is hailed as a time-saver to the producer.

WHITE A. C. SPECIAL CARBON

FOR MOTION PICTURE WORK

Pure White Light Noiseless Operation
Requires No Change in Lamp Fixtures

"THE CARBON THAT CHANGES A. C. TO D. C."

THE NEW WHITE A. C. SPECIAL MOVING PICTURE CARBON means noiseless operation, a pure white light and steady burning. Operators who hitherto have felt that A. C. was not desirable for moving picture operation have completely reversed their position due to the splendid results obtained by using the White A. C. Special.

Not a few of these operators have found a great deal of humor in being able to convince their friends that this carbon actually changed A. C. to D. C. Indeed, the complete absence of noise is in direct contrast to the old sputtering A. C. carbons. This remarkable change, insuring quiet burning and a steady white light, has given alternating current a new lease of life in the motion picture industry.

No more eye fatigue, no more roaring noise. Everybody in the audience satisfied. The change from the old carbons is as simple as filling a pipe. Take the old carbons out, put the new White A. C. Specials in and you have a pure white light that insures perfect screen definition.

An investigation of the possibilities of these new carbons will highly repay you. In localities where D. C. cannot be obtained they are the salvation of the moving picture operator.

Write for our new booklet describing these White A. C. Special Carbons.

For D. C. OPERATION

the National-Silvertip combination is the standard everywhere.

With these two carbons, both unique in their fields, and designed especially for use with A. C. and D. C., we can fill every requirement in the motion picture industry!

THE CAMERA

The Technicolor System of Color Cinematography

Of considerable importance to the future of motion picture color photography was the Technicolor Company's demonstration at Aeolian Hall, West 42nd Street, New York, on Friday morning, April 21. Before a very representative audience a seven-reel drama, reproduced by color photography, was unfolded, and the manifest approbation of the spectators was evidence of the improvement which can be effected in cinematographic productions by photographing them in colors. As the aesthetic side of this question will, doubtless, be dealt with by other writers, we proceed to the consideration of the technical means by which these new color pictures are produced.

The Technicolor process is the result of several years' research and about two years' actual experimenting, the sponsors of the method being Messrs. Kalmus, Comstock and Wescott, industrial engineers of Boston, Mass. Especially prominent in connection with the new color process is Daniel F. Comstock, a capable physicist, and the patentee of the Technicolor camera and projector attachments. In charge of the Technicolor Company's actual production work is C. A. Willat, while the practical photographic phases of Technicolor have had the attention of that well-known scholar, E. J. Wall.

Primarily the inventors of Technicolor claim the following advantages and innovations for the new system: First, the process is a continuous, rather than an alternating, or successive, process, therefore the colors are combined upon the projection screen instead of in the observer's eye. This results in absolute freedom from eyestrain, when viewing the pictures, and is also claimed to permit of purple shades being distinguished in the scenes projected. It is considered by many that the sensation of purple is not induced at the retina of the eye, but further back along the optic nerve, so that while the alternating colors by two-color successive projection do not remain long enough at a time to produce the purple stimulus, this is accomplished when a complete color picture is viewed on the screen. The advantages of a continuous method of color cinematography, whereby the synthesis is accomplished on the projection screen, are very manifest, and this principle has already been utilized in the Gaumont "Chronochrome" process of three-color cinematography.

The second point of advantage claimed for Technicolor is that there is no "color fringing"; a claim which we shall see is satisfactorily fulfilled. The inventors moreover claim as an innovation in their procedure the use of hypersensitized panchromatic negative film, but, as will presently become apparent, the use of hypersensitive film is a necessity, rather than a luxury, in the practice of color cinematography by the Technicolor method.

Like the majority of cinematographic color processes, the Technicolor process is a two-color process, which is a practical foundation to build upon, notwithstanding the slight deviation of two-color methods from the physiologically correct trichromatic theory. As this new process differs radically in mechanical conception from any of its predecessors, we proceed to describe the devices and mechanisms wherewith Technicolor films are photographed and exhibited. The principle of this method is to photograph each pair, or cycle, of orange-red and blue-green color-sensation images simultaneously and from the same viewpoint. This means that instead of the red- and green-sensation images on the film being photographed successively, one after the other, or by two lenses, they are both photographed at the same time and through the same lens. To accomplish this requires a specially designed and constructed camera, of course, and the optical arrangements of the Technicolor taking-camera are shown diagrammatically in Fig. 1.

Referring, therefore, to Fig. 1, a is a vertical side elevation of the optical system of the Technicolor camera, while b shows the manner in which the respective orange-red and blue-green color-sensation images are recorded upon the film. When the camera is in operation rays of light from the objects being photographed traverse the lens L and pass into the double-reflecting prism P^4, falling, eventually, upon the light-splitting mirror or grid G. The light-splitting device, or grid, G, is a special feature of the Technicolor camera and is the subject of U. S. Patent No. 1,231,710. Briefly stated, its characteristics and mode of operation are as follows: At the interface g of the reflecting-prisms P^1 and P^3, is a mirror formed by the deposition of silver or platinum. This metallic coating is, of course, formed on the surface of one of the prisms, P^1 or P^3, but it is not, as might be supposed, a continuous mirror or reflecting surface. The metallic reflector G has its opaque surface interrupted by numerous transparent openings of square or rectangular shape, these being scattered at random over the silvered surface. These openings are produced by removing the metallic coating at various places, or, more practically, by preventing the deposition of silver at those spots when the reflecting surface is prepared.

The completed light-splitting device or grid G acts in such manner that some of the rays from the lens pass through the openings, retaining their original direction, while the remainder of the light is reflected downward at right angles to the axis of the camera objective. This results from the fact that the light-splitting grid is situated right behind the objective and is inclined at an angle of 45 degrees to its axis. The proportion of the amount of light transmitted by the grid G, with respect to the amount reflected, is regulated by the number or size of the transparent openings in the metallic layer. This can obviously be arranged, at the time the reflector is made, so as to transmit and reflect equal amounts of the incident light, or to transmit and reflect in any ratio which may be desired. For the purpose of two-color cinematography equal intensities for the transmitted and reflected beams would probably be about right, although this point depends upon the spectral-sensitiveness of the negative film used.

In order to secure freedom from optical aberrations, the prisms P^1 and P^3 require to be cemented together with balsam at their interface g, where the light-splitting grid G is located. It will further be appreciated that the opaque (metallic) reflecting portions of the grid would tend to cast shadows on the image produced by the transmitted beam if the grid was located too close to the focal plane. The effect of this would be underexposed areas in the photographic image produced by the transmitted rays, but this is eliminated by locating the light-splitting device close to the camera lens, as shown in a, Fig. 1. A device which divides a beam of light, as above described, is of considerable utility in photographic and optical work, and this light-splitting grid recalls to mind the two-color camera of P. D. Brewster.

Having described the means by which the light from the camera lens is directed along two different paths, we will now follow the transmitted and reflected beams to their respective destinations. The light transmitted through the apertures of the grid G continues in its normal direction and enters the reflecting-prism P^1. It is reflected from the surface R^1 of the prism and enters the prism P^2, which is in optical contact with the prism P^1. Upon traversing the prism P^2 it falls upon the reflecting surface R^2 and is reflected onto the negative film at the exposure aperture A^1.

Returning, now, to the rays reflected from the grid G, we see that these traverse the double-reflecting prism P^3 and are reflected from the face R^3 into the glass block P^4. The block P^4 is in optical contact with the prism P^3 and serves the purpose of making the optical train equal in length for both the transmitted and reflected light rays. This is necessary in order that the images produced by the respective beams shall be of exactly the same size, which is an absolute requirement in color photography. The reflected rays after passing through the glass block P^4 form their image upon the film at the aperture A^2. The orange-red and blue-green color-filters through which the exposures are made may be placed before the apertures A^1 and A^2, respectively, or at any suitable place in the optical system.

We have not as yet secured the data as to the exact spectral transmissions of the taking-filters used by the Technicolor Company, but the requirements of two-color taking-filters were extensively treated in a previous article.[1] The question of the taking-filters used in color cinematography naturally brings up the question of exposure, and it is now apparent why hypersensitive film is a necessity in the Technicolor process. When we consider that the light from the camera objective is reduced to about one-half its intensity in the case of the beams transmitted and reflected, respectively, by the light-splitting grid G, Fig. 1, and that each of these beams suffers a further absorption of about 50 per cent by the orange-red and the blue-green taking-filters; it is apparent that no ordinary panchromatic film would yield developable impressions with exposures of such diminished intensity. It is interesting, therefore, to note that the inventors of Technicolor have overcome this handicap by preparing a film of great color-sensitiveness combined with the maximum of integral speed. The exact manner in which the company hypersensitize their negative film has not been divulged, but a feasible method of accomplishing this was outlined in the Camera Department some time ago.[2]

As we have now considered, as comprehensively as possible, the manner in which Technicolor film subjects are photographed, we must next endeavor to explain how the positives, printed from the color-selection negatives, are projected upon the screen, thereby approximating the coloration of the subjects photographed. Like all of the most promising color processes, the Technicolor process is an additive one, in which a black and white positive print from a color-selection negative is translated into a color picture upon the projection screen through the medium of suitable color-filters attached to the projector.

The mode of projecting the Technicolor positive differs radically, however, from the projecting arrangements of any other process of color cinematography. As b, Fig. 1, shows, the two color-sensation images (a red and a green) forming a set or cycle in the Technicolor system, are not adjacent to each other as in the case of the successive processes, but are separated from each other by a space equal to the height of two images on the film. In b, Fig. 1, the two images forming a Technicolor cycle are designated by I^1 and I^2, and their spacing will be seen to correspond with the distance apart of the exposure apertures, A^1 and A^2, of the Technicolor camera. It will now be readily apparent that each time the intermittent movement of the Technicolor camera operates, the film is drawn down to the extent of two pictures, and that this must also be the case with the projecting machine.

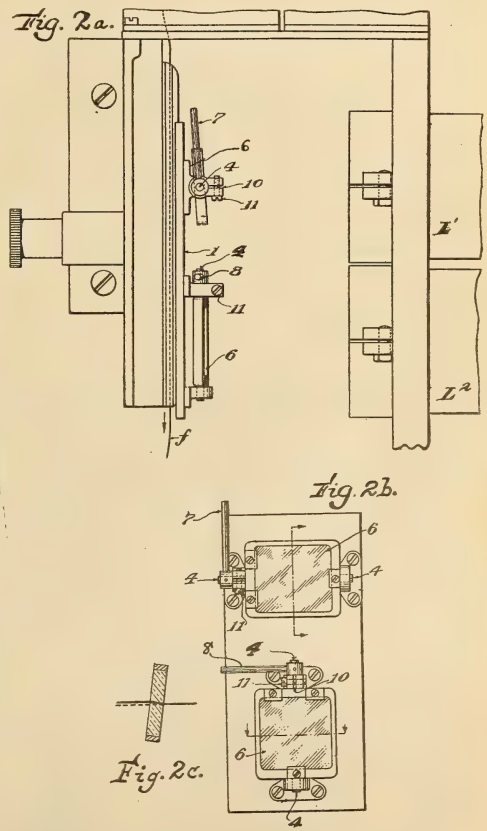
The Technicolor positives are projected with a Simplex projector, which is specially fitted up for the purpose. As it is apparent that the widely separated images comprising a color-cycle in this process could not well be projected through one lens, we see, by reference to Fig. 2*a*, that the Simplex mechanism used in the Technicolor process is provided with two projection lenses L^1 and L^2. Now, as any projecting machine operator knows, it would be impossible to exactly superimpose the screen images by any manipulation of the lenses, and, moreover, the registration of the screen images by tilting the lenses is far from being a delicate means of adjustment. One has only to tilt the lenses a small fraction of an inch, and, if the projection screen be 100 feet or so away, the picture will be displaced a foot or more. No inaccuracy of registration is tolerable in a color process, for if the orange-red and the blue-green colored images do not coincide exactly on the lantern screen, the edges of objects in the picture will be bordered by one or the other of the two projecting-colors.



With the Technicolor projecting arrangement a delicate adjustment is provided the operator, whereby the component two-color images may be superposed on the screen in a very accurate manner. This adjustment, or auxiliary registering device (U. S. Patent No. 1,208,490) is shown in side and front elevation by Figs. 2*a* and 2*b*, and its action is shown diagrammatically by Fig. 2*c*. Mounted between the two image-apertures and the two lenses of the projector are two plane-parallel glass refracting-plates, 6, 6, Figs. 2*a* and 2*b*. The glass refracting-plates are mounted between pivots 4, 4; the upper plate being rotatable about a horizontal axis while the lower plate rotates about a vertical axis.

These refracting-plates may be readily tilted by means of conveniently situated handles 7 and 8, in the figures, and are clamped in any desired position with the split-collars 10 and the screws 11.

Assuming that the light from the projector arc lamp may be divided into two beams by prisms placed before the condenser system, or by other suitable means, and that the light is allowed to pass through the two image-apertures of the projecting machine, let us now see what will be the action of the refracting-plates 6, 6, on the light rays incident upon them. This is shown by Fig. 2*c*. In passing through the parallel glass plate the light rays are refracted or deflected a bit to one side of their point of incidence but then proceed (parallel to their original direction) to the projection lenses. In this way the positions of the images projected on the screen may be altered just as surely as they may by tilting the lenses, and the extent to which the screen images are moved will depend upon the extent to which the refracting-plates are tilted, following well-known laws of refraction. A precision and delicacy of adjustment are attainable by the use of these glass refracting-plates which would not be possible by tipping the lenses, and thus the two component color-sensation images may be superimposed quite exactly upon the projection screen.

The Technicolor positive film, as we have previously noted, is a black and white print from a color-separation negative. Unlike the various successive processes, the color-filters used on the Technicolor projector are not mounted in a rotating disc, but are stationary filters attached to the projection lenses. These projecting-filters may be mounted at the back of the lenses or between the front and rear components, the most favorable position being easily determined by experiment. We have not been able to ascertain the exact spectral transmissions of the projecting-filters used for Technicolor; but it can be remarked here, that with stationary filters, which afford no opportunity of color balancing, by the adjustment of their relative areas or partial intensities, it is extremely difficult to secure a good color balance, in the case of a two-color process, and still more difficult to produce a sensation-white, which will analyze a high percentage white. This point has been investigated by L. A. Jones[8], at the Kodak Research Laboratory, whose findings may be referred to on this question of two-color mixtures.

As the projecting arrangements have now been considered from various angles, we have next to consider the actual operation of projecting the Technicolor positive. When the film is threaded through the projector mechanism, with the respective red- and green-sensation images behind their proper lenses and projecting-filters, the next step is the registration upon the screen of the red and green component pictures. With a light source of the necessary intensity for color projection this registration must obviously be accomplished with the film running through the machine; the red and green screen pictures are thus superimposed by manipulation of the refracting-plates 6, 6, Figs. 2*a* and 2*b*, through the medium of the handles 7 and 8. Although the Technicolor film images are photographed in pairs, thus requiring double the length of film necessary to record a given scene in black and white, the rate of projection is the normal rate of approximately 16 pairs, or sets, of images per second. In other words, the film pictures are interchanged by the intermittent movement at the same frequency which is customary in black and white cinematography.

We must not neglect to point out here that, inasmuch as both the red and the green component images of each color cycle are photographed simultaneously by the Technicolor camera, any blurring, due to rapid movement of the objects photographed, will be reproduced exactly the same in both the red-and green-sensation images. Upon projection these blurs will be superimposed and in correct colors, so that no "color fringing," due to rapid movements, is in evidence in the screen results by the Technicolor process.

After this lengthy dissertation on the mechanical aspects of the Technicolor system we come at last to speak of the quality of the screen results, which, after all, is the crucial test of a color process.

An outstanding feature of a Technicolor exhibition is the complete absence of eye-strain. After two or three hours spent in watching these color pictures the eyes are less fatigued than would be the case for an equal time spent in viewing ordinary pictures.

The colors, one and all, were characterized by extreme softness, and in most instances were eminently faithful to the original subjects. Flesh tints are better reproduced by the Technicolor system than by any other motion picture color process ever studied by the writer; they were, in fact, comparable to any stationary color process, including the Autochrome. In contradistinction to some of the more recent demonstrations of color cinematography, the Technicolor method differentiates very well between blue-greens and greens, and pronounced green hues were often in evidence. As is well known, some of the color processes have absolutely failed to reproduce greens, although this can probably be laid to the inferior sensitiveness of some panchromatic negative film to the green and blue-green spectral regions.

For reasons previously stated the whites were, however, of low purity; they appeared to be about 40 or 50 per cent. white, and with the present arrangement of projecting-filters it is doubtful if they could be higher than 70 per cent. white. This condition is difficult to ameliorate, the chromatic balance varying in the case of various sets of projecting-filters, as was the case at the Aeolian Hall demonstration. One machine showed an excess of red, giving a yellowish white; while the other machine showed an excess of green, giving the whites an almost imperceptible greenish tinge.

A most interesting feature to study is the accuracy with which the red and green pictures can be superimposed on the screen. This was accomplished by the Technicolor projecting machines with a degree of closeness sufficient to completely conceal any fringes of overlapping color, but the delicacy of the adjustment appears to be not quite comparable with the dimensions of the finer details in a cinematographic film image. Although, as mentioned, no overlapping colors were apparent, the definition of the pictures was unsharp excepting in the case of close-ups, where the principal objects in the picture possess sensible dimensions on the film images.

This lack of real crisp definition is no doubt due, in part, to the fact that the Technicolor pictures require to be photographed with the camera-lens opened out to a large aperture (*f*4.5 or upwards), but improvement of the definition in these screen results requires investigation along several lines.

Whether the falling off in sharpness is caused by the refracting plates, or by the projecting filters, or by film shrinkage, are points worthy of study, but one who has not had the opportunity of examining the film itself can but conjecture as to the cause.

No invention of as complex a nature as a motion picture color process was ever absolutely perfect upon its initial demonstration, and it may be said for the Technicolor process that it has an equal chance with all other methods of cinematographic color reproduction.

More Floor Space Required by Simplex

OWING to increased business the Precision Machine Company has been compelled to secure additional floor space in the buildings opposite the Thirty-fourth Street plant. Floor space formerly used for storage purposes will now be used for manufacturing, thus enabling an increase in production.

The new $125,000 Grand theatre, Esterville, Iowa, has been equipped with the latest model Simplex projectors, by the Theatre Equipment Company, of Minneapolis, Minn. The Westcott Film Corporation have also purchased Simplex machines from the above supply house with which to present "Intolerance" in the territory secured by them.

One more church, "St. John, the Baptist," Manayunk, Pa., has taken to the motion picture and this week purchased a Simplex projector from Lewis M. Swaab, the Philadelphia supplyman.

We Agree with You

WILLIAM MURPHY, Vallejo, Cal., writes: "I hereby make application to join the National Anti-Misframe League of which I have read so much about in MOTION PICTURE NEWS. I make application with true faith as an operator who stands for the betterment of projection. Let me say that the organizer of the League has taken a step in the right direction.

There is very little that I can say that I have not already said concerning the League. If you will read up the recent issues of the NEWS you will find a statement of its aims and objects. Your name has been added to the Roll of Honor, and membership card and button will reach you in due time. The success you wish the Deague depends to a great extent upon the co-operation of every member in it, and I hereby appoint you registrar for the city of Vallejo, and hope you will be able to enlist every member of the local in which you hold membership.

Glad to Hear from You, Old Timer

BEING a member of Local 199, I.A.T.S.E., and working in a theatre here nights, with very short hours, and having had a great deal of experience in the handling of film, the ——— exchange asked me to take charge of the running off of all their films, also take charge of their inspection department, which was in a bad way when I took hold of it; numerous complaints being received daily. Now we seldom receive a complaint, although we could make complaint regarding those operators who think themselves street car conductors and fill a reel of film full of holes. We are "getting them," however, slowly, but nevertheless surely. I cannot but help congratulate the NEWS and yourself for the fine stand you have taken in the betterment of film condition and I most willingly take the pledge in the A. M. F. L. At the exchange here we will surely endeavor to do more than our share as long as I remain here. I have been operating a Power's machine ever since the No. 4, which, if you remember, is a long time back. I have always taken bad patches out of film, also misframes, and I do not think it will be any hardship to continue doing so."

COMMENT: My sincere congratulations to you, one of the first union operators to become general film inspector for a film exchange. As you know, this is something that I have for a long time recommended and I am pleased to say that I have been instrumental in having placed a number of union men in charge of inspection in several exchanges. When one makes a practice of doing his work well it soon becomes a habit, and it should not be any hardship to continue. May the day soon arrive that all film inspectors will become members of the League.

Locks No Bar to Conference of Operators and Exhibitors

THERE is an old saying that "love laughs at locksmiths" that is equally true when applied to the seeker of news for the NEWS, and was borne out when the writer stumbled into a conference being held between the motion picture exhibitors and the executive officers of Local 306, held in the Paramount projection room, 729 Seventh avenue, of the Sherry Feature Film Company, on Wednesday, Sept. 19. While I did not obtain any information, what I saw was enough to let me know that the conference was in relation to the new wage scale of Local 306, which goes into effect the 24th of this month. Held behind closed doors, those in conference were much surprised when I made my appearance, and was politely informed that the result of the conference would be issued in the form of a statement, to the trade papers. The next time I fall into any such opportunity to obtain news I'll go in disguise.

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

War and Music

MUSIC without war is fine; but war without music would be even worse than General Sherman's conception of it. The soldier boys must have songs to sing, and even if they don't get the right kind they compose their own. But if the khaki clad boys do not get enough of war songs it is no fault of the song writers or publishers, for they are working night and day grinding them out. If the President were to issue a call for volunteer song writers it is a hundred to one they would respond in a body. It would require a vivid imagination to picture a slacker war song writer. Congress would not have to draft a law, nor would it have to set an age limit, as the volunteer song writing army would range in age from ten to eighty years old. And just picture how useful this army could be at the front if they all started to sing their compositions to the Huns. No human being has ever been discovered who could withstand such a charge of poetical bullets, and although the Huns have displayed wonderful courage and powers of resistance, they would have to beat a hasty retreat once the volunteer war song army settled down to business.

At the beginning of the war most of the wiseacres predicted that the American Army would adopt some one song as a slogan number, just as the British "Tommies" did with "Tipperary," but the wise men were all wrong, for up to the present time the soldiers have taken quite a fancy to a number, including "Over There," "Good-by, Broadway, Hello, France," "Where Do We Go From Here," and "It's A Long Way to Berlin, but We'll Get There." And when these songs have outlived their usefulness the boys will warm up to others, which means plenty of business for a few wise writers and publishers. But the big writers and publishers are not assured of all the gold and glory, for like the modest private who suddenly becomes a hero by taking advantage of an opportunity, so will some unknown song writer or publisher be likely to spring into the limelight if he keeps on the job.

Now the question that bothers individuals and committees interested in seeing that the soldiers receive plenty of music is, what kind of songs would they like to sing, what kind keeps them in a cheerful and optimistic mood? The best way to answer this query is to find out what type of songs appeals to a crowd of young fellows under normal conditions. Do they sing hymns, classics or popular songs? When a crowd of young men start out for a good time they usually sing the light or popular songs, and the majority of those in the army to-day are trying to think of the fight as a good time, and by so doing they rid themselves of the fear of impending dangers and make good soldiers. The best proof of this is the part that popular songs like "There'll be a Hot Time in the Old Town," "Break the News to Mother," and "Strike Up the Band," played in the Spanish-American War. What the boys really like is something in which everyone can join in the chorus, whether he can sing or just howl the notes—the kind of a song that makes one forget present troubles and cares.

L. Wolfe Gilbert and Anatol Friedland's "Set Aside Your Tears for Laughter" is somewhat different from the average war song and is making quite a hit with the folks who have to stay behind while their loved ones go to save the freedom of the world.

Since this country jumped into the international scrap many moving picture pianists have turned their hands to writing songs, and some of the manuscripts submitted appears to have all the earmarks of hits. There is room for more good ones as long as the war lasts, but with the keen competition existing, one will have to offer something better than the obvious titles like "U. S. A.," "Uncle Sam," "Old Glory," and "The Boys in Blue."

Lawyer Turns to Song Writing

THE fact that Jeff Branen is a successful song writer is proof that all popular song writers do not come from the Bowery or cabarets. Jeff has won success because he learned the trick of singing to the masses in terms that were familiar to them, and any one who can do the same can become just as successful.

Branen started out as a lawyer after graduating from the Chicago Law School in the Class of 1899. And with his shingle out, he sat down to wait for clients, and when none came to engage his valuable services he amused himself and added to the larder by writing newspaper poems for the big dailies in Chicago and New York. While he was pondering over the wisdom of quitting law and getting a regular job on a newspaper, H. W. Petrie, composer of "Asleep in the Deep," and "I Don't Want to Play in Your Yard," communicated with him, saying that he had taken quite a fancy to the stuff Jeff had been doing for the newspapers and wished to know if Je[illegible] to collaborate.

From time to time while Jeff had been troubled about incoming bills he had read how song writers made fortunes in a week, and this prompted him to write Petrie, accepting the offer. But the fortune did not come to him as quickly as he had anticipated, and for a long time he kept writing, at times thinking he had done a foolish thing in deserting law. Still, he kept at it, and at last he had the pleasure of receiving a royalty from a publisher. Since then royalty checks have been common with him, and the ones he received from the sales of "She's the Daughter of Mother Machree," convinced him that song writers do get a lot of real money once in a while.

A few months ago Jeff looked over his bank account and found that it was big enough to permit his taking a chance on the publishing end, and as a result wrote a dozen songs with Evans Lloyd and opened up an office at 145 W. 45th Street. Three of his numbers, "Valley Rose," "All That I Want is in Ireland," and "We're After You" are selling as fast as any on the market.

Besides being a successful song writer, Branen has another mark to his credit. He is now a commissioned Colonel of Governor Stanley's staff, who is the Governor of Kentucky, making Branen the only northerner who ever held a like position on a southern Governor's staff.

RITTER LANDS TWO HITS

When Abe Olman left for the coast a few months ago Maurice Ritter, the genial professional manager, was engaged by Fred Forster to follow the good work done on "Oh, Johnny, Oh!" And by keeping on the job night and day, whether Forster happens to be in New York or Chicago, he has put over "All That I Need is a Girl Like You," and "She Never Kissed Anything but the Blarney Stone."

To Provide Towns with Symphony Orchestras

"My idea is to make the leading motion picture house the musical center of each community. Practical experience and observation have demonstrated to my satisfaction that any motion picture house with a seating capacity of 2,000 can support an orchestra of twenty-five musicians. Most cities of 100,000 or over have such theatres already, and where they haven't been built they are being planned. Presuming that the city possesses such a theatre, let its orchestra of twenty-five pieces be the nucleus for a larger civic organization capable of giving symphony concerts at regular intervals throughout the season. By recruiting fifteen or twenty extra musicians, from among the local talent in the city an orchestra could be built up that no community need be ashamed of, one that, on the contrary, would be an extremely educational and uplifting influence.

"I conscientiously believe that if the manager of the theatre went before the City Council and outlined this plan to its members, he would have no difficulty whatever in securing an appropriation sufficiently substantial to pay the salary of a first-class musical director to conduct the orchestra, plan the concerts and secure the requisite talent. If the councilmen could not be made to see the value of such an organization, I am sure that the necessary sum could be raised by subscription among the cultured well-to-do and music-loving portion of the populace. There is no question as to the popularity of symphony orchestras. Any city of the size I have in mind would be glad to support one if the expense were not so heavy. At present it is only here and there that conditions have proved favorable to the maintenance of such an organization, but, where they have proved successful their reputation and popularity have spread so far that they are able to undertake highly successful tours every season.

"Under the method I have outlined, the major portion of the expense would be taken care of by the theatre. The community would only need to come in for the extra amount necessary to secure a thoroughly competent conductor, and for the purchase of music and other incidentals. The manager of the theatre would, of course, donate his house for purposes of rehearsal in the mornings as often as necessary, and also give the city the use of the theatre for the symphony orchestra. The director of the symphony orchestra, naturally, would become musical director of the theatre, and his influence in that capacity would be the strongest kind of a factor in educating the patrons to an appreciation of the better sort of music. They would come to see the pictures and would find themselves listening to good music whether they were particularly interested in it or not.

"In every community where I have presented this form of entertainment the standard of taste among my patrons has been steadily raised to such an extent that it has become difficult to say whether the music or the pictures has the greater appeal. By discriminating judgment in his selection of musical numbers and incidental music the conductor of such a civic band in any town would gradually but surely convert the motion picture enthusiasts in his audiences into equally enthusiastic supporters of a symphony orchestra comparing not unfavorably with those formerly existing in European cities of the same class. This scheme would work out with success in any community where it was handled intelligently. If it were put into general operation throughout the United States, I think it is no exaggeration to say that this country would soon become the musical center of the world."

THEATRES WORTH WHILE

New Suburban Theatre Opens in Chicago

Irving Park, one of the suburban sections of Chicago and now a city in itself, has a new $200,000 theatre which will compare with any of the downtown houses, the Irving. It was opened on the 1st of September and has been doing splendid business. The new theatre seats 1,800, and has an unusually central location which gives it a big territory for its appeal.

One of the distinct features of the new house is the large lobby and foyer where several hundred people can be accommodated without crowding when the main auditorium is filled. The foyer is adorned with large cheval mirrors, restful lounges and couches.

The auditorium itself is artistically decorated in dainty tints of blue and pink on cream grounds, with banks of flowers around the wall lights. The lamps are shaded with rose-colored silk tapestry, and the doors have heavy velvet hangings.

There are no projecting corners or awkward curves in the theatre to prevent full view from any part of the house, and those in the last seats have an uninterrupted view of the screen. The seats themselves are of special design and made by the A. H. Andrews Company, of Chicago.

Music is furnished by a $20,000 Hope-Jones unit orchestra and a special program is provided for each picture. The Pol-Aero ventilating system is used.

The theatre announces that it will present the highest class of pictures that are shown in the Loop district—that it will bring the Loop to Irving Park. The opening attraction was Mary Miles Minter in "Charity Castle."

Splendid Theatre for Pennsylvania City

ROWLAND theatre, Philipsburg, Pa., has just issued a handsome booklet celebrating the opening of the theatre for the theatrical season. The house was first opened for motion pictures on July 4, the first theatrical attraction on September 19. The theatre is owned by Congressman Charles H. Rowland, and under the management of A. J. Fleckenstein.

Rowland theatre has a distinctive appearance. Its three stories are of red tapestry brick trimmed with polished granite and Indiana limestone. The fronts of the small store rooms on either side of the entrance are trimmed with Alaska marble, with the handsome vestibule, with its marble effects and floor of red quarry tile give the house a dignified and attractive appearance. Over the sidewalk is a massive marquise brilliantly illuminated at night by concealed lights.

The interior of the theatre is artistically decorated. Above the proscenium arch is a mural painting emblematic of mythical lore

The orchestra pit will accommodate twelve musicians and there is a $6,000 American Photoplayer which is used exclusively for picture productions. All of the opera chairs are of morroccoline leather and are ample in their space. The main floor seats 612 and the balcony 529. There is not a pillar in the entire auditorium.

All of the illumination of the theatre, with the exception of the two hanging lights in the lobby are of the indirect type. In the foyer white bowls reflect the light to the ceiling and in the auditorium these are concealed at the top of the side pillars.

By means of a powerful fan in the basement, twenty cubic feet of fresh air per person is forced into the auditorium each minute while ventilators and exhaust fans remove the foul air through the roof.

The theatre is absolutely fireproof and panic proof. The immense girders overhead are of solid concrete and the pillars in the side walls of reinforced concrete. All the doors, with but two exceptions, are of steel and the windows of fireproof glass. The doors in the exit are "panic proof," opening outward. The exits are so arranged that the house can be emptied in five minutes.

Everything in the motion picture booth is fireproof. Metal humidors are provided for holding the film and two of the latest Power 6-B projection machines are used.

A handsome ladies' rest room and all other conveniences of a modern theatre are provided. In fact the Rowland is a remarkable house when one considers that the population of Philipsburg and its suburbs is only 15,000. It is a base of supply for numerous mining hamlets.

The theatre was designed by John Millard, of Altoona, and constructed by W. A. Hoyt.

The theatre opened with "The Garden of Allah," and up to the present has been running only pictures, but the policy of the house during the winter season will be to show the best of legitimate road attractions when they can be secured and divide the time with pictures. The management announces that the policy will be to exhibit the higher grade of pictures only.

New Theatre Opens in Jersey City

JERSEY CITY has a new theatre, just opened, of which the New Jersey metropolis just over the river from New York may well be proud. This is the new Apollo, 248 Jackson avenue, and managed by E. H. Burns and H. Robinson. It is owned by

New Apollo Theatre, Jersey City

This attractive theatre occupies a ground space of 75 by 125 feet, and affords seating capacity for 800. The building is of concrete, white brick and white terra cotta.

The theatre has just been opened and is not yet fully equipped. The interior walls are still to be decorated, a modern screen installed and up-to-date equipment provided for the projection booth. The theatre has bought two motor-driven, 6-B Power projection machines. The throw is 110 feet.

Special attention is given to the music in the new Apollo, and a handsome American Fotoplayer has been purchased. This has been attracting much notice, and the management of the house declares that it will be fortunate if all the equipment yet to be purchased is to be kept up to the equally high standard.

The American Seating Company furnished the chairs, and Menger and Ring supplied the lobby fixtures.

Three performances are given each day, the price of admission being ten cents in the afternoon and fifteen in the evening. Fox, Artcraft, Triangle, Metro, World and state rights pictures are being shown.

The theatre is located in the downtown section of Jersey City, and plans to use all forms of exploitation, including newspaper advertising, bill-posting, card displays and a weekly program.

other modern devices for the projection room. John B. This is one of the most successful large houses in a medium-sized town, Provo having a population of 8,500, and the seating capacity of the Columbia being 1,250. The Artcraft "Little American" and Dorothy Dalton in "The Flame of the Yukon" have proven the best attractions for the Columbia since its conception in 1914.

$600 to $3120 Extra Profits Yearly

He stated March 17th that he had kept account of the number of sales of Butter-Kist Pop Corn which he had made in the year 1916, by a tabulation on his register. He has just a little stand there, and his Pop Corn Machine served 49,015 people in 1916. He said he would go on operating that machine if he lost money doing it. For in his estimation anything that would bring 49,000 people into his shop was worth while even if operated at a loss. His sales of Ladies' Home Journal, for example, jumped from 6 a month to 80 after his Butter-Kist Machine began to operate. His sales of Popular Mechanics jumped from about 15 a month to 75. His sales of bottled drinks increased. And the profit on Butter-Kist itself is over 200 per cent. As he states, he has no unusual location. He says he just used a little brain work, and he believes that anybody ought to be able to not only make big money out of the Pop Corn Machine, but make it a leader that will bring business amounting to more than its own sales, by attracting people into the Butter-Kist place.

IDAHO

Just a half block east of the Masonic temple building at Seventh and Bank streets, Wallace, the basement is about completed for a handsome theatre building which is being built by a stock company at a cost of approximately $50,000. This theatre building is to be a modern playhouse in every particular. It will be 50 x 100 feet with full basement. It is to accommodate stock companies as well as motion pictures, and will have every possible stage and dressing room facility. The seating capacity will be 700, which will include the main floor and the mezzanine floor.

ILLINOIS

J. Frank Stanley, proprietor, reopened the Star theatre, east side, Skelton brick building, Newton, a few days ago, showing "The Nation's Peril."

Several improvements have been made that will add to the safety and comfort of visitors and help to make pictures show up to better advantage. The ticket office and machine gallery have been enlarged and the latter made as near fire-proof as possible with sheet iron and asbestos lining; the same entrance and exit at the front are retained, but both are widened and given the same incline from the foyer to the auditorium, retaining also the alley exit for emergencies, and the stage has been set back several feet.

WISCONSIN

R. T. Holcomb and Joe Collins of Monroe have made plans to open a new moving picture house in that city in the Gettings block, the former home of the picture shows. Monroe has had two picture houses under one management for the past few years but the game evidently looks good to the men who are venturing in the field.

The Lex theatre, Chippewa Falls, was opened a week ago under most auspicious circumstances. The ceremonies of the opening consisted of the playing of "America," by the city band on the stage, with the little daughter of Mrs. J. J. Brooks waving an American flog. After the first show Attorney D. E. Cook addressed the audience on behalf of the citizens, thanking R. Hoch of Duluth for building such a beautiful temple of amusement for Chippewa Falls and the Messrs. Beyerly and Zauft for their work and the Progressive League and all who had aided in securing the fine edifice.

GEORGIA

The Majestic theatre, Andrews, Georgetown County, will shortly be a reality, for papers of incorporation were taken out a few days ago and a general motion picture and amusement business is the project of the incorporators. Fuller details of the venture will be published in this column in the near future.

For a long time the question has been asked by Atlanta theatregoers—"What will be done with the Forsyth?" and "When will it open?"

Both questions were answered last week when Jake Wells and John Evins opened with the super-film, "The Daughter of the Gods," with Annette Kellermann in the leading role.

There was considerable doubt for a time as to the future of the house, but this was dispelled when the success of the Lyric as a vaudeville home became evident. So Keith attractions will continue at the Carnegie way theatre, where the seating capacity is considerably larger, and the Forsyth will be devoted to the best offerings of the silent drama.

"The Daughter of the Gods" was shown here last year at the Lyric and was a tremendous success. This production cost $1,000,000, and is one of the greatest undertakings of Wiliam Fox. It marked the acme of the moving picture art, offering dazzling water scenes, and withal presenting a plot that was of the greatest interest.

Last week we had it the other way, but now we say:

"When You Know the Tree, You Know the Fruit"

When you know a master mind, trained in every detail of a certain art or craft, you're willing to gamble on the product of his brain—

—you know that anything in his line into which he has put his very best, his utmost, is bound to be superlatively good.

Take, for instance, the men who designed and are building the Simplex. Some readers of the Motion Picture News have not (yet) become acquainted with the Machine; but it will help them decide to secure the Permanently Perfect Projection which only the Simplex can give, when they know more of the Experts whose masterpiece it is.

On the other hand, those to whom we spoke last week (who know the machine but not the men), will be glad to make the acquaintance of the men who gave the World of Projection the Machine that is serving them so excellently.

So next week we will begin to tell you something of these men.

However, if you have the slightest desire to learn more of the Simplex, don't wait for that advertisement, but "Obey that impulse," and ask for Catalog "N."

national advertising campaign to send more people to your theatre

Making a greater America.

The motion picture industry has come into its own. Today one of the greatest of all America's wonderful industries takes its place in national advertising among the first in the land.

And it will be greater. Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has done its "bit" in the past. It is going to do more.

$1,000,000 is to be spent to carry your message to every corner of America, to tell the people that, as in the days of Ancient Greece, "the theatre of all the people" is open to all.

$1,000,000 invested to realize literally hundreds of millions for the exhibitors of Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

A colossal sum, yes; but none too great to do the things we want to do for you, and for this great industry.

The Newspaper Advertising

'Advertising'-America's religion.

A newspaper without advertising would be as dry as dust. There is no way to say your say to so many people at the same time, with the same force and effect as through the newspapers.

They are the first, the straight line of communication between the man with something to sell and the man who wants to buy.

And this national advertising campaign of Paramount and Artcraft is going right before the eyes of 26,408,462 readers of newspapers—the readers of the newspapers in your town.

And they'll read it; it will be news that will be worth reading. Not everybody knows what the modern photo-play has in store for them. They do not know that now they can see the best in literature, art and drama, portrayed by the greatest artists of the day; they do not all know the educational possibilities of the modern motion picture. They do not all know, even yet, what Artcraft and Paramount pictures mean.

But they will know. They will read about Paramount and Artcraft in more than 300 of the best newspapers in America. They will have the message flashed before their eyes on electric signs in big cities and popular resorts; and they will prove the supremacy of Paramount and Artcraft pictures from a chair in your theatre.

The Magazine Advertising

Pike's Peak and 20 others.

In Colorado are twenty mountains, all of them higher than Pike's Peak. But you never heard of the 19 others. It pays to advertise.

You can have the finest auditorium within a week's walk; but if you don't put the right kind of attractions in it and then go out and tell the man in the street where you are and what you've got, you'll be as lonesome as an old maid at a mothers' convention.

Your people read magazines. It's towns like yours that make "million circulations" possible. It's the small and moderate sized community that is the backbone of this great industry.

And Famous Players-Lasky Corporation knows this, and they use three millions of circulation in magazines to reach your patrons and the people who by right ought to be your patrons.

This national advertising campaign has a lot of thought behind it—with you in mind at every step. And every ounce of power known to modern advertising will be turned on, and every device will be used to help every exhibitor get every possible benefit.

And the 41,609,000 magazine readers are one way to sell you and your theatre to your public.

The Exhibitor

Count a million.

Of course you won't. Well then, think a million. $1,000,000 going out in cash to newspapers and magazines for advertising to fill your theatre, every day, every performance.

It's going to do just that, sure as fate, if you have the goods; if you're ready to fire right along with the big guns of this publicity.

In plain English, you won't get all that's due you—all the benefit of the great big advertising "main" laid through your town unless you have a "faucet" in the house with which to turn it on

In still plainer English, you must tell people that yours is the theatre the advertising talks about, that you show that kind of pictures, and that they can tell it in a minute by looking at your theatre. Then you've got them for good. Because Artcraft and Paramount pictures are going to hold them.

In the words on the cow-boy monument, "We've done our derndest-angels can do no more"—now, are you going to cooperate and help us to make this the first industry in America? Your part is "linking up."

Goldwyn Pictures

We Admit That There Are Reasons—

WHY eighty odd first run exhibitors are playing Goldwyn Pictures from our first release and telegraphing or writing their increasing approval of each new Goldwyn release.

Why each Goldwyn Picture and each of the Goldwyn stars, in their order of public presentation, have registered remarkable successes and attracted capacity audiences in every section of North America.

Why hundreds of smaller exhibitors have followed the lead of the big and successful showmen of the country and booked Goldwyn Pictures for their theatres.

Of course there are reasons for these significant indorsements. First of all, Goldwyn Pictures make money for exhibitors.

And they play at a profit because they have extraordinary and unrivalled stars, with remarkable stories by the ablest brains of our nation, directed and presented by artistic and skilled men who have always made money in tremendous amusement enterprises in which their own fortunes were invested.

Goldwyn's Great National Advertising Campaign

NEXT WEDNESDAY—October 10—Goldwyn Pictures, the Goldwyn stars and the Goldwyn standards of production will be introduced to millions of friends of the screen in the first of a series of advertisements in The Saturday Evening Post.

Goldwyn has booked its pictures all over North America on their merits; on their drawing power; on their novelties and refinements.

In succession we have backed these productions up with a national billboard campaign and unparalleled publicity.

And now Goldwyn places behind its stars and its productions as its greatest step—and without advance promises—the tremendous force of the greatest advertising medium in the world.

Our one comment to exhibitors on this campaign is: Goldwyn considers it much better to give them this co-operation that was never promised than to promise more in advance and give them less afterwards.

America's millions are eager to see Goldwyn Pictures. The progressive exhibitor will book them now.

A Perfection Contract

Its Value to You!

EVERY EXHIBITOR holding a Perfection Contract has taken out box-office insurance. It is one kind of insurance that you don't have to die to win. The longer you live and retain your contract the more valuable it becomes.

¶ Perfection Pictures are being exploited by the most gigantic campaign of advertising and publicity ever launched on behalf of a motion picture enterprise. Perfection Pictures are being brought to the attention of every man, woman and child in the United States. All these people are interested in Perfection Pictures. They are looking for the theatres showing them. By securing a Perfection Contract for your territory you are bringing these people to your theatre.

¶ More and more people every day are looking for the Perfection trade-mark before going into the theatre. If they see it in front of your theatre they will go in. Insure your box-office the biggest run of prosperity it ever enjoyed.

¶ There's a new Perfection Picture released each week. You can secure them all and be sure of big business for fifty-two solid weeks. Arrange to secure a Perfection Contract for your locality. For full details inquire at the nearest Exchange of the George Kleine System.

B. S. Moss has just completed arrangements with Pthe whereby its latest and much exploited serial, "The Seven Pearls," will be shown in all the Moss theatres the first three days of next week. This in conjunction with the usual vaudeville and motion picture programmes.

Every motion picture and vaudeville manager in Greater New York has been camping on the steps of the Pathe Exchange awaiting the release of "The Seven Pearls," but it remained to the aggressive Mr. Moss to secure the prize. While other managers were wiring, writing and telephoning the Pathe offices, the early installments were being reeled off in Moss's private projecting room in offices in the Godfrey Building. When the last reel was completed Moss's signature was already dry on the Pathe contract.

DON'T GAMBLE!

You can't afford, Mr. Exhibitor, to slight the quality of the shorter offerings at your theatre any more than you can afford to book poor multi-reel "features."

AN EDITORIAL FROM THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD:

SPOILING the effect of a good feature by filling in with two or three reels of poor or mediocre material is a shortsighted policy that more than a few theatre managers seem to be guilty of. Paying large rental rates and spending much time in selecting the feature or big subject on the program and then paying little or no attention to the other subjects necessary to complete the required number of reels can only and does result in dissatisfaction on the part of a large majority of each audience. The feature may be the very best and may fascinate every one in the theatre, but if it has been preceded, or is followed, by poor and unsatisfactory shorter subjects, the good effect of the former is bound to be minimized if not nullified altogether. Looking out for the general excellence of the whole program is well worth while.

OF NEW YORK'S DRAMATIC AND TRADE REVIEWERS

Harriette Underhill in The Tribune—"It shall merely be stated that we enjoyed it more than anything we have seen this season, because it is filled with delicious, subtle humor, furnished by some totally unconscious, incredibly clever children."

The American—"It is spectacular. It is more exciting than the biggest screen 'thriller,' and a thousand per cent more wholesome. It has more humor to the fifty feet—this being the prescribed way to measure film excellence, according to the shop talk of the audience—than the funniest farce of the season."

The World—"Distinctly repeats the success of 'Jack and the Beanstalk.' The children display very remarkable precocity as film actors."

The Herald—"The picture has many ingenious effects in the numerous indoor and outdoor scenes, and the sand storm shown in the second part was as stirring and realistic as could be expected of any film representation of the fury of the elements."

The Evening World—"Was not only beautifully done, but interested the older folks as well as the children who packed the theatre."

The Globe—"The audience smiled, sniggered and cooed its delight. And well they might."

The Evening Sun—"The adults will find entertainment in the film version of this popular childhood story, especially because of the beautiful scenes that are unfolded and because there is a certain novelty in the work of the youthful artists employed in the play."

The Evening Telegram—"This latest of feature photoplays has exceeded even the apparently limitless boundaries of the famous Arabian Nights' fable as it was written."

The Evening Post—"It bids fair to be as popular as its predecessor, 'Jack and the Beanstalk,' which was the first of the Fox Kiddie features, as it provides a delightful entertainment for both young and old."

Journal of Commerce—"Here is another picture that not only will set children wild with delight, but will please fathers and mothers just as much."

In order that his most famous role of Hajj, the beggar of old Bagdad, may live after him, Otis Skinner has finally consented to make his screen debut. The advent of Mr. Skinner will unquestionably be the supreme motion picture event of the coming year. The opportunity to collaborate with Mr. Brenon caused the star to reconsider his determination never to enter the silent drama.

"The Woman Thou Gavest Me," which sold so far into the millions that it was termed the world's best seller and which was translated into fourteen languages, will make a tremendous "picture-novel" of today. The story of Mary O'Neill, married in innocence to a dissolute nobleman, is a theme of intense dramatic power. Critics pronounced it the most vital study of the feminine soul in literature. Moreover, Mr. Caine's discussion of religion and divorce caused "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" to attract international comment.

In course of preparation

"Empty Pockets" will have all the attributes of Mr. Brenon's visualization of "The Lone Wolf," which was called the most adroit and swiftly moving mystery romance of the screen. "Empty Pockets" has another baffling problem, its action is keyed to top speed, and, moreover, it goes beneath the shell of mere melodrama in its humanness and closeness to life. "Empty Pockets" has a delightful love interest, aside from its thrills and well sustained interest. It is expected to surpass "The Lone Wolf" in swiftness and and power.

"The FALL of the ROMANOFFS"

based upon absolute facts furnished the producer by ILIODOR (the Mad Monk) former confidant of Rasputin and confessor to the Czar.

"The Fall of the Romanoffs" is the screen's first big effort to film contemporary history. Mr. Brenon chose the most epoch-making event in the evolution of democracy---the hurling of the Romanoffs from their hereditary throne with the birth of Russian freedom---and told the story with compelling and absorbing force. "The Fall of the Romanoffs" is no mere sequence of historical events---it goes beneath the glamor and tinsil of the Russian court and unfolds the human side of royalty. No picture since the birth of the picture industry has had the publicity of this production.

Permit us to inform you that the Hon. Charles M. Hough, U. S. Circuit Judge, today, granted your application to restrain, pendente lite, Ben.Blumenthal, Isaac E. Proof by affidavit was made to the Court that in July, 1917, the defendant Blumenthal copyrighted the photoplay now advertised as "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs with Iliodor", as "Ivan the Terrible". Advertisements describing the film as "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs with Iliodor" were printed in the trade journals in September.

The Tax and Higher Admissions

THE important matter of higher admission prices has taken a sudden and radical turn.

The unexpected imposition of a huge war tax on films and on theatre admissions takes out of our mouth the arguments we had planned to present here in favor of a general raise in admission prices. Conditions within the industry—that is, better entertainment, higher rentals, higher maintenance costs all around—were enough in themselves, in our opinion, to make higher admissions logical and necessary.

Furthermore, in our opinion, many theatres—in fact the majority of theatres—could profitably increase their prices, provided their pictures were more cleverly presented and more intelligently exploited to the public.

A large number of theatres evidently felt this way about it, for throughout the country, this Fall, theatres have jumped their prices and what is more to the point made the new prices pay.

Conditions within the industry started the higher admission movement.

And now we have conditions without the industry—thrown into the balance so overwhelmingly that the situation has been lifted beyond argument or choice.

Prices now have got to be raised.

* * * * *

LET us bear one point firmly in mind. These conditions—these conditions without the industry—are abnormal.

We are passing through a great world crisis.

Congress has just completed the appropriation of twenty-one billion dollars—the greatest legislation appropriation in history; and many more billions are to follow.

Taxation is, of plain necessity, heavy. In many cases—and this we might remark includes publishers—it is a double and treble taxation.

We hold no brief for the tax on motion picture theatres.

It is in our opinion one of the most illogical and pernicious pieces of a tax budget that is bad and unjust in a number of glaring counts. It is no more than was to be expected from a patriotic House leader, who at the eleventh hour, jammed through a "joker," penalizing every good salary in the country except his own.

It is a tax that should have been avoided; and we are at a loss to know why this industry did not avoid it. We believe, as we pointed out before, that it could have been avoided—not by politics and ballyhoo, but by a plain presentation of the true facts and figures of this industry—which facts and figures would not countenance a tax on the low-priced—too low-priced amusement of the masses; nor, especially, would it seek to penalize the desirable advance of an industry by taxing every admission save the cheapest.

But the tax is here.

It is due to abnormal conditions, beyond the exhibitors' control. It will have to be faced by the exhibitor with a clear understanding of these abnormal conditions, and what they demand.

It is a tax upon the public—a war tax, just like the taxes placed directly or indirectly on almost everything else in the way of necessities and luxuries. The public must pay.

* * * * * *

AND we believe the public will pay.

The public will pay more—eliminating entirely from consideration the tax angle; eliminating the fact that the exhibitor has succeeded in explaining clearly to all his public that the tax is theirs, theirs to pay; eliminating the further fact the public, grown used to paying higher retail prices all along the line, will not question greatly the higher retail prices of pictures.

The public will pay more for the better presentation of pictures; and the public will come in greater numbers because of the better advertising of pictures.

These big facts are applicable to the majority of picture theatres in the country.

As stated before we don't, by any means, lay all the burden on the picture houses. Good pictures, pictures the public will pay for, were never demanded as they are now. The stuffing of the independent market with over advertised and under made pictures is inexcusable; so is the crippling of a good program with "losing" pictures.

"Tell us how to popularize the 'losers,'" writes a practical exhibitor, "and you will have solved the problem of higher rentals."

Very true. Higher admission prices is equally a manufacturer's problem; and if he doesn't meet it—with

Speaking Editorially:

Whose Fault

AN exhibitor came into our office last week and gave the facts of a deplorable instance of exchange carelessness.

The print of a very prominent and high-priced picture reached him in such bad condition that his audience hissed its presentation. He was mad clear through and discouraged.

We cited this instance to a prominent and successful exhibitor and got an unexpected rejoinder.

"The exhibitors' own fault!" said he. "Exchanges are often bad. We all know that. But do you think I would let my business suffer for that reason?

"If I had booked an important picture like that, and advertised it heavily I would have got up at daybreak if necessary, gone to the exchange, and examined the print. In fact I've done that many a time.

"It's my business to please my audience. I never rely upon anyone else but myself. I take no chances.

"Conditions are bad for the exhibitor. But what's the use of railing at them? Stop complaining, double your working hours, use your showman intelligence—and you'll succeed, anyway."

A Happy Note to Picture Making

ANOTHER word on the Fox Kiddie Pictures will not be amiss. They deserve double mention.

The second picture of the series, "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," has just been shown in New York. It is as good as the first success, "Jack and the Beanstalk." And there are more to come, of which "Treasure Island" is one.

These pictures sound a happy note in picture making—happy because they move abundantly—these pictures can be made of equal interest to grownups and children. They will solve a question asked every day in many an American home: "Is the picture safe for our children to see? Dare we take them with us?"

"Bogey" Brought Out to Kill Sunday Pictures

CORVALLIS, Oregon, has defeated Sunday motion picture exhibitions by a vote of 534 to 500. Heretofore Corvallis has been one of the best Sunday exhibition towns of its size in the state.

Copies of the Corvallis papers reaching the NEWS print the arguments for and against Sunday showings. The state agricultural college is located in Corvallis and the greatest argument against pictures on the Sabbath was that they interfered with the studies of the pupils. The fight was conducted by the Ministerial Association. As the Daily Gazette-Times said the day before the election: "Everybody here is scared to death about the college. If there should be one pupil less because of Sunday pictures the whole town would go in mourning for a year. The writers of this argument know it and play it as their trump card." This paper cites "Skinner's Dress Suit" as an example of the pictures that can well be shown on Sunday.

It is significant that the Liberty League, which defeated the Oregon "blue laws" offered to send speakers to Corvallis to urge Sunday exhibitions, but this permission was refused. The league showed that in other college towns the institutions lost attendance because pupils refused to be buried in communities where they had no amusement on their day of rest.

"Side Show" Tactics Shake Pictures' Pedestal

REPORTS come from various section of exhibitors who are taking advantage of the large attendance at their Saturday and Sunday shows to put on poor bills. The reason is that the people are coming to the theatre any way and that they might just as well save film rental by using cheaper offerings.

Not only is this rank fraud perpetrated at the expense of patrons who probably have no other day in which to see a motion picture, but it is the surest way in the world to kill a theatre and weaken the public faith in the screen.

It took the public a long time to find out that the motion picture was not a "fake." Many of the manufacturers and exhibitors have spent millions of dollars in bringing the silent drama to the forefront of art-amusement. And yet the short-sighted exhibitor can, so far as his community is concerned, pull the industry from its pedestal by "side show" tactics.

The Tax and Higher Admissions

salable pictures—he'll have eventually his creditors to meet.

But it is yours—and yours still more than his.

The whole object of this and preceding editorials is to give you a jab that will do you good.

You have been following too much the easiest way. The easiest way is to cut prices—or to hold them low and give a lot of poor quantity for the money. It has been done before in many lines; but it has never succeeded.

The hardest way is to charge the price and give good quality; but it is the money-making way.

The time has passed when people will come into your theatre because you've got film and projection machines.

And the time has passed for you to rely upon someone else to give you good pictures, in good condition, and add the highly necessary adjuncts of good music, good advertising and constantly new and attractive methods of presentation.

The public will pay for this kind of entertainment, pay well in round numbers, and if you don't give it someone else will.

* * * * * *

WE presume there will be some disastrous results from this theatre tax.

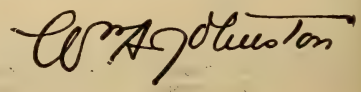
Some exhibitors who have raised from five cents to ten will go back to five.

Some ten cent theatres will go out of business.

But, in no case, will this backsliding be due to good retailing; in each instance it will be the choice of the easiest—and worst way.

Think it over—exhibitors—before you act. Think it over carefully. The procession of higher prices and better retailing is on. It is inevitable. You must keep up with the procession or step out.

Stepping out now means staying out. This is a crisis. Are you going to play easy and lose; or play hard and win?



War Tax and Operating Costs Boost Many More Admissions

Audiences in General Not Averse to Paying More When Better Show Is in Sight and War Situation Is Understood—Baltimore, Philadelphia and Newark Among Latest to Take the Step

IN line with the move of the legitimate and motion picture theatres in the East to raise admission prices because war conditions demand it and better shows justify it, both large and small exhibitors throughout the country are adding their theatres to the long list of houses which have increased the door charges, the initial news of which was carried in MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week.

The movement, instead of cutting into the attendance at the various theatres, seems to be having a better effect than was at first expected. Audiences, as a rule, are awaking to the fact that war conditions in this country make it absolutely necessary to charge more even for amusement and entertainment, and that the small increase in admission charges makes it possible for the exhibitor to present a better show.

Baltimore Public Likes the Best

Following close upon the heels of the story in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS to the effect that Marcus Loew, B. S. Moss and William Fox have decided to raise the scale of admissions in their various theatres, comes the announcement from Baltimore that exhibitors there are doing the same. With the increased cost of the better motion picture productions, in the main due to the public demanding more elaborate film plays and the attendant burden entailed by the war, some of the Baltimore theatres have been compelled to join houses in other parts of the country in raising admission charges. In line with the advance in the motion picture industry the West End Theatre, in order to secure the larger productions which come direct from the metropolis, took the leap last week. This house has booked the productions featuring the leading stars of the screen, including Marguerite Clark, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Billie Burke, George M. Cohan and Elsie Ferguson. The cost of these pictures has greatly increased, owing to the heavier burden now borne by the producers, and unless the exhibitor desires to present an inferior show, certain to hurt his business and probably ruin it altogether, the increase is inevitable. Also, along with the increased price, there will be other improvements made in the presentation of the pictures. Among the innovations decided upon is the installation of a large orchestra at the West End, more than twice the size of the former one.

With the same idea in view, that of giving better shows while meeting the increased cost of living, the Idle Hour has also made a slight change in policy. Hereafter the house will enlarge its program, which in the past has been composed of Universal productions with special Bluebird days, and will in addition use other feature productions, leading off with Earle Williams in "Transgression." The admission will be raised to meet the enlarged program.

Philadelphia in the Swim

The rising tide of higher prices, in its rush westward, is engulfing Philadelphia theatres. Already all the downtown theatres are submerged and the neighborhood houses are feeling the dash of the fifteen-cent waves. Thus far no wrecks are reported, and it is quite likely that none will be, as the public is not averse to the raises when it understands that war conditions make it necessary to charge more for the shows. All the theatres are weathering the gale admirably, and some are even stronger than before.

The Stanley, which started out as a 15 and 25-cent theatre, raised recently to a 35-cent maximum, and has now gone to 40 cents, with no decrease in patronage. Nearly all the Stanley theatres (about one hundred in all) are adding 5 cents to the former admissions.

The Regent remains at 15 cents for evening week days, but has increased to 25 cents on holidays and Saturdays, with the evening prices going into effect at six o'clock.

Stanley Mastbaum, manager of the Palace, declares that his house has not lost in popularity since prices were raised on Labor Day, and that not a complaint has been heard from patrons. On the contrary, it is Mastbaum's opinion that the people are better pleased than ever with the attractions, as attested by the bigger business done.

Boyd's Arcadia has not yet gone above the 25-cent limit, but has set the afternoon price forward to one o'clock, instead of six o'clock as formerly, with the night charges in effect all day Saturday. D. A. Donjian, house manager, is authority for the statement that the crowds are just as large, and a better class of patrons attend in the afternoon. The other Boyd house, The Family, after extensive improvements doubled the price in the early autumn, and a 15-cent raise is possible at any time at that theatre.

Among other houses in Philadelphia to raise prices are six Central Market Street theatres managed by Frank W. Bukler, four neighborhood houses managed by Columbus Stamper, and the Park and Jefferson, managed by Jay Emanuel.

Newark Raises 100 Per Cent.

Admission prices in motion picture playhouses in Newark, N. J., have been advanced practically 100 per cent recently, and with but few exceptions exhibitors report attendance records averaging fifty per cent improvement over box-office records for July and August. There is not a single exception to the report that attendance figures under the increased admission prices are materially larger than when a cheaper price was charged.

While the advanced prices have been general among exhibitors throughout the city playhouses, managers declare that the total attendance of patrons of motion picture houses in Newark during the month of September would show a gain of at least 33 1-3 per cent over the previous month. This they unite in saying shows that motion picture patrons of Newark are not averse to paying a comparatively fair amount for the entertainment to which they are partial.

F. D. Allison, manager of the Strand theatre, sheds a little light on the operations of the higher prices in this city. "My patrons did not grumble at the advances. It can be safely said that their visits to the Strand are just as frequent as when the policy of the house was different. I notice, however, that many patrons feel that by paying more they have a right to be taken into the counsel of the exhibitor. Many who never talked to me before now seek me to make requests about pictures they would like to see or some little innovation they would like to have undertaken by me. All of which I endeavor to encourage.

Indiana Directors of A. E. A. Very Active

Meeting in Indianapolis on September 28 Shows That New Organization Is Going After Things Without Gloves—Largely Attended

DIRECTORS of the American Exhibitors' Association for the district of Indiana, meeting at the Hotel Severin, Indianapolis, September 28, attested the approval of the new organization by the manner in which they buckled down to business. Every director was present to discuss various questions of interest to the association, its members and to the motion picture industry.

While the meeting was an executive session for the directors, Frank J. Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Ind., head of the Indiana district organization, gave out the principal subjects discussed. He pointed out that Indiana has the strongest state organization of the Exhibitors' Association. Every Indiana exhibitor, he said, is unanimously in favor of the American Exhibitors' Association, and has withdrawn all connections and affiliation with the old organization.

Mr. Rembusch said the directors discussed the numbers of complaints that have been received from the exhibitors over the state regarding what he termed the unfair methods of some film manufacturers, and they talked over proposed plans with which to protect the exhibitors in these matters. These plans, he announced, would be made public later.

How the Indiana exhibitors are "doing their bit" in the war was also pointed out by Mr. Rembusch. The State Council of Defense asked the association to assist it in furthering the food conservation and other patriotic movements.

Mr. Rembusch and Charles C. Pettijohn, the general manager of the National Association, were chosen by the directors of the Indiana branch to represent the state at the Chicago meeting of the association which was held October 2 and 3.

Exhibitors Protest at the Revenue on Admission Charges

With Increased Cost of Operation and Higher Rates for Programs, Managers Conclude They Will Have to Fight Hard for Protection and Existence—Wisconsin Exhibitors Make Formal Protest in Letter to Washington

THE tax on admission prices has been subject to much comment. MOTION PICTURE NEWS has received numerous letters from exhibitors from all parts of the country and the consensus of opinion seems to be that thousands of exhibitors will be obliged to close their theatres. They state that attendance will be materially decreased because of this tax. With the increased cost of operation and the increased cost of program and independent productions, due to the tax on film, the exhibitors conclude that they will not only have to fight hard for protection but even existence in the business.

The exhibitors of Wisconsin have made a formal protest against the tax and have forwarded to Washington a letter addressed to the Conference Committee on War Tax, setting forth the injustice of the tax and asking that something be done to lessen the burden imposed on the exhibitor.

Several Houses May Close

J. E. Sherwood, speaking for the exhibitors of Wisconsin, states that in his opinion and in the opinion of the majority of the exhibitors of the territory, the larger number of them will have to close their doors. The letter sent by the Wisconsin exhibitors was sent prior to the passage of the bill in order that the tax might be lessened and the general effects of the legislation mitigated. Now that the bill has passed and has been signed by the President, the exhibitors will have to makes the best of the tax and it is hoped that they will find that it is not going to have the destructive effect which they have predicted. It remains to be seen whether or not the exhibitors throughout the country will be so adversely affected that they will have to discontinue business. Many of the exhibitors hold this point of view.

The patron is the one who, it seems, will have to decide this question. If the attendance holds up and the public is willing to pay the extra cents on the regular admission price, the status of the box-office will not be affected. The exhibitor, however, will have to look to other phases of the tax law than that affecting the admissions. The tax on the raw material and the positive prints will be reflected on the price the exhibitors will pay for their program and other features, and this, too, has to be taken into consideration.

Radical Changes in Policy

With less than a week's time having elapsed since the passage of the tax bill, reports have come to MOTION PICTURE NEWS of radical changes in the policy of some of the motion picture theatres.

From Washington, D. C., the manager of the Maryland Theatre writes that until recently his top price for admission has been 5 cents. After improvements and a more elaborate program, Mr. Johnson, the manager, says that he raised the admission price to 10 cents, charging 5 cents to children. Since the tax on amusement admissions was assured, Mr. Johnson says that he has returned to the old price of 5 cents.

"I don't feel as though my patrons would pay that extra cent," said he, "and I will not be able to give the shows I have been giving under the 10-cent admission charge. I will, however, endeavor to give my patrons the best show possible for the 5-cent admission."

The above is an example of one instance where the tax law has had its effect on the theatre in a concrete way.

The public should clearly understand that the exhibitor is not responsible for the raise in admission price of one cent or more. He is compelled by law to make such additional charge. On every 10-cent admission, or fraction thereof, there is a tax of one cent; on every 15 or 20-cent admission, there is a tax of 2 cents; on every 25 or 30-cent admission, there is a tax of 3 cents and so on up the scale of prices. It must be remembered that the tax is placed by the Government on the public not on the exhibitor. The people who attend an exhibition of motion pictures are the ones who pay the tax and it is so stated, very clearly, in the bill, as passed and signed by President Wilson.

Zukor Declares Government Will Lose by Taxing Theatres

Famous Players-Lasky President Points out Disastrous Results Certain to Follow—Thinks It Will Reduce Production and Cause Shrinkage of Income from Tax on Producers and Distributors

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has followed carefully every new development of the war situation, in so far as it concerns the motion-picture industry, has made a statement in which he points out to Congress some of the results that are certain to follow the agreement of the Congressional Committee on the war tax bill intended to raise three billion dollars, and concerning which a decision was reached September 29.

There is no doubt that other motion-picture men, who have given the matter the same attention and thought as has Mr. Zukor, think along the same lines, but the real question of which will be the ultimate loser, the Government or the motion picture, seems a long way from settlement.

Pictures Great Aid in War

Mr. Zukor prefaced his statement with: "From the moment that the motion picture industry was recognized as a factor in the preparations for war, and its value in aiding the Government in the prosecution of its plans therefore fully appreciated, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has taken a leading part in the various activities in that direction, and has demonstrated its patriotic principles and eagerness to assist in every way possible. It has co-operated with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to the fullest possible extent in devising ways and means of bringing before the people the innumerable necessities of the stressful times. In this latest tax development, however, I see a grave danger to the film industry and cannot refrain from pointing it out so that those who are in a position to do so may use their utmost endeavors to prevent it now. As applied to the motion picture industry, the new bill strikes out the exemption clause for those theatres which charge twenty-five cents or less down to five cents admission and imposes a tax on the gross receipts from all theatre admissions.

Some Houses Forced to Close

"Those in the industry recognize that there are thousands of small theatres throughout the country which do not make a profit on their entire investment commensurate with the tax on their intake which the conferees now propose. The result will certainly be that most of these small theatres will be forced to close their doors. They could not continue to exist and operate at a loss or with no profit. The result of this in turn will reflect directly upon the Government, because it will entail a loss of income and surplus profit tax from the theatres and from the great producing and distributing organizations whose profits will thus decline.

"It is true that the tax will not so materially affect the larger theatres because some may continue to operate at a sacrifice on their admission receipts. It is the small man who will suffer and unfortunately he has already been called upon to face local and other taxes in many instances which have rendered his position precarious. I do not make this statement from any lack of loyalty to the Government, because I believe it to be the absolute duty of every man in this country to assist to the last degree in the prosecution of the war. I am thinking solely of the fact that the Government, in the end, will lose more than it will gain from this tax levy. Taking up the tax on films them-

Tax to Collect Over Fifty-Three Million from Pictures

Of This Large Sum Three Million Dollars Will Come from Raw Film Product, Fifty Million Dollars from Admissions and Seven Hundred and Fifty Thousand from Cameras—Bill Goes into Effect December 1

WHEN President Wilson placed his signature to the war revenue bill calling for $2,500,000,000 as an internal revenue tax last Wednesday, this tax to take effect the first day of December, he gave implied notice to the motion picture world, both industry and patrons in general, that of this sum there is expected $53,700,000 to come directly from the film industry and the general public—$3,000,000 from the raw film product, $50,000,000 from amusement admissions (including any and all forms of amusements where the price of admission is in the excess of five cents), and $750,000 from cameras. (The major portion of this tax on cameras will be derived from cameras used for projecting motion pictures.)

This, in terms of dollars and cents, is the extent to which the internal revenue bill, signed by President Wilson, last week, to become a law and in force on and after the first day of November, will affect the motion picture industry and all those who find amusement and entertainment within the doors of a motion picture theatre charging as admission a rate in excess of five cents.

Country's Whole Population Affected

The war tax bill, taken as a whole, affects practically every individual in the United States and it is safe to assume that the tax on the motion picture film and admissions to motion picture theatres affects the entire populations of the country, excepting very small children. Any person, excepting children under the age of twelve years, entering a motion picture theatre to witness an exhibition of motion pictures, which theatre charges, as an admission price, over and above five cents for each person, shall pay a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction of 10 cents greater than 5 cents. Other persons besides children under the age of twelve years who are exempt from paying this tax are, bona fide employees (those actually engaged in conducting the routine business of the theatre), and municipal officers on official business. Under the term municipal officers will come fire inspectors, building inspectors, etc. With these three classes exempt, all other persons are subject to the tax.

It should be noted that children under the age of twelve years are only exempt from the payment of the tax when such children are admitted free of charge. If it is the rule to charge children 10 cents or more, the same as adults, then the children, regardless of their ages, are compelled to pay the tax, the same as adults. So that, the law, as interpreted by the writer, provides exemption to only two classes of persons: bona fide employees and municipal officers on official business, unless the management admits children under the age of twelve years, free of charge.

What the New War Tax Bill means to you.

THE REVENUE MEASURE COMPILED IN CONDENSED FORM FOR THE READY REFERENCE OF EXHIBITORS AND PRODUCERS OF MOTION PICTURE FILMS

The salient points of interest to the exhibitor:

1. Only Theatres Charging Admission Price of 5 Cents Are Exempt.
2. All Amusements, the Proceeds of Which Go to Religious, Charitable or Educational Institutions, Are Exempt.
3. All Persons Using Season Passes, Complimentary Tickets, Etc., Must Pay Tax.
4. Only Bona Fide Employees, Municipal Employees and Children Under Twelve Years of Age, Where No Admission Charge Is Made by the Theatre for Such Children, Are Exempt from Paying Admission Tax.
5. Report Must Be Made Monthly, According to Form Prescribed by Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by Owner.
6. Tax Must Be Paid in Revenue District, Where Theatre or Principal Place of Business Is Located.

Chronology and purpose of the War Revenue Measure:

1. Signed by President Wilson, October 3.
2. Effective as Law, December 1.
3. Tax Placed on: Raw Film Product, ¼ Cent Per Foot; Positive Prints, ½ Cent Per Foot; Admissions Prices, 1 Cent on Every 10 Cents or Fraction thereof; Cameras.
4. Total Amount to Be Raised by Tax on Industry, $53,750,000.
5. Distributed as Follows: Motion Picture Films, $3,000,000; Amusement Admissions, $50,000,000 (Including All Forms of Amusement); Cameras, $750,000.

"Deadheads" Must Also Pay Tax

And all persons admitted free of charge to any motion picture at a time when under circumstances an admission is made to other persons of the same class, shall be made to pay the tax of 1 cent on each 10 cents or fraction. This includes all persons holding season passes, complimentary passes or other form of ticket admitting them free of charge. To state the law, in general terms, all persons, excepting the classes noted above as coming under the head of those exempt, whether they gain admittance to an exhibition of pictures where the management of the theatre charges an admission price of 10 cents, more than 10 cents or a fraction of 10 cents greater than 5 cents, by actually paying the admission price or by virtue of a season pass or complimentary ticket or otherwise, where under the circumstances other persons of the same class are charged admission price, are compelled to pay under the law as construed by the writer, the sum of 1 cent on every 10 cents or fraction thereof.

It should be noted that the revenue law as affecting amusement admissions not only applies to motion picture theatres but all forms of amusements—cabarets, legitimate plays, operas or any form of amusement where an admission price of 10 cents, more than 10 cents or a fraction of 10 cents greater than 5 cents, is charged.

The war tax on internal revenue bill as passed by Congress and signed by President Wilson, after setting forth the amount of the tax to be paid, the persons to be exempted, etc., reads "TO BE PAID BY THE PERSONS SO ADMITTED" (referring to the clause which states that persons, with the exceptions of those classes above noted, who are admitted free under circumstances where an admission charge is made to other persons of the same class).

Exhibitor Is to Collect Tax

"TO BE PAID BY THE PERSONS SO ADMITTED"— this particular phrase should be noted, as it places the burden of paying the tax on the patron. In other words, as construed by the writer, this phrase means that the exhibitor not only is not obliged to pay the tax without first receiving it from the patron, but he is obliged to collect the tax from the patron. The Film Shipments Delayed by Incomplete Addresses

Causes Much Loss to Distributors, Exchanges and Exhibitors and Brings Request by National Association to Assure More Careful Attention

CARELESSNESS in the addressing of film shipments is causing much loss to distributors, exchanges and exhibitors, and one of the express companies, having been unable to deliver many shipments, has requested the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, through its Transportation Committee, of which William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, is chairman, to lend its aid in an endeavor to assure more careful attention to shipments in the future.

E. E. Bush, traffic manager of the American Express Company, in a recent letter to the National Association states that these shipments have accumulated so rapidly of late that they have no further space at their terminals in which to store them. At the present time two safes are utilized for this purpose, but the shipments have accumulated so much that a surplus has built up around the safes, constituting a serious hazard. In fact, this official states the matter is so imperative that it will be necessary to enforce a rule in their classifications applying to the transportation of explosives and other dangerous articles by express which provides that when shipments of this nature are refused and cannot be delivered within 48 hours after arrival, they must be disposed of by storage in a safe place or by sale or destruction when it is evident that storage on the carrier's property will be a source of real danger.

With a view to relieving this condition the distributors and exchanges are offered the facilities of the National Association in an effort to trace lost shipments for which no returns have been made. The transportation committee of the National Association is working in accord with the traffic departments of all the express companies, which have extended every courtesy to the committee. This service through the National Association should prove of inestimable value to the exhibitors and exchanges throughout the country, acting as a central clearing house and incidentally saving the shippers much trouble and inconvenience as well as the expense of sending telegrams to hundreds of express agents throughout the country.

Film shipments valued at many thousands of dollars are now being held by the express companies, and the exchange managers are requested to check up their lists, forwarding a copy of the same to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, Times Building, New York city, which will advise the proper officials in the hope of making unnecessary the destruction of the films owing to the hazard and danger to the public involved.

Exhibitors Are Great Aid in Food Control

Arthur S. Friend Answering Many Questions from Exhibitors as to What Food Control Really Means—Hoover Well Pleased

HERBERT HOOVER, Food Administrator of the Government, has been highly elated over the manner in which the exhibitors throughout the country have come forth and offered their co-operation in spreading propaganda of the Food Administration in their campaign to have people waste less and to have one meatless day, and wheatless as well, each week.

One question that has come from many exhibitors in answer to their request to co-operate is, "What Does Food Control Really Mean?" Arthur S. Friend, treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who is the chairman of the Motion Picture Division of the Food Administration, is answering this question by telling exhibitors what Mr. Hoover himself had to say on the subject recently at a meeting of the State Food Administrators and his personal staff, when he gave a striking explanation of the part that food control plays in war.

He said that European nations went into the war giving little thought to the subject of food. Even Germany with all its preparations had not foreseen the significance of this factor.

This made it necessary to organize food supply and distribution, and the various countries tried various methods. They fixed maximum prices, and minimum prices, regulated the production and distributing trades, and put people on rations. Those countries which established the earliest and best methods of food control secured the greatest efficiency in war. Mr. Hoover said that, whether we like it or not, we must deal with the food problem of war in one of two ways. There is not enough food to go around if we stick to the lavish methods of peace times. Rising prices, coupled with depreciation of money, due to issues of war bonds in every country, which make the purchasing power of money shrink, compel us to adjust the food supply to the world's appetite, either by controlling that supply in ways that lead to economy and make it suffice, or by letting wages rise as prices rise, to keep pace roughly with fluctuations.

Red Cross Event Draws Five Thousand People

The National Red Cross Pageant, under the auspices of the American Red Cross, was given at the Rosemary Open-Air Theatre, Huntington, L. I., on October 5, in the afternoon, and more than five thousand people gathered to witness the spectacle, which proved to be one of the most elaborate dramatic events ever staged out of doors. Several hundred prominent personages of the stage and screen donated their services toward making the spectacle the success it proved to be.

Motion pictures were made of the production, to be shown over the entire world in order to aid further the cause of humanity.

Directors of A. E. A. Hold New York Meeting

A business meeting of the directors of the American Exhibitors' Association was held at their offices in the Times Building, New York City, Thursday, October 4. Many matters of importance of "doing something" for the exhibitor prevailed at the session.

Among those who attended were I. M. Mosher, Buffalo; William Fait, Jr., Utica; W. A. Steffes, Minneapolis; Guy Wonders, Baltimore; Peter Jeup, Detroit; M. Levy, Norfolk, and Charles C. Pettijohn, who held proxies for the other directors who were prevented from attending because of previous business engagements.

President Jake Wells, of Richmond, Va., who is opening a new theatre at Atlanta, Ga., and was unable to be present, kept in touch with the meeting by long distance telephone. The meeting was adjourned until Thursday, October 11, to conclude business.

New League Postpones Special Meeting

Due to a change in plans, the special meeting of the Exhibitors' Co-Operative League which was scheduled to be held on Tuesday of last week, has been postponed until Thursday, October 11. On this date at the Hotel Astor all of the exchangemen and leading exhibitors who will form the membership of the new organization will gather to complete the League.

Immediately following the adjournment of the meeting at the Astor the names of the various franchise holders will be made public and several surprises are promised in the announcement from the League head which will be forthcoming.

There will be present on Thursday representatives of the most powerful exchanges and circuits of theatres in the country, and it is said the presidency of the new organization will be assumed by a pioneer of the film industry with connections which extend from coast to coast.

Goldfish Represents Industry at Pageant

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, was designated by William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, to represent the industry at the Red Cross Pageant held at Huntington, L. I., Friday afternoon of last week. Mr. Goldfish had full charge of the activities.

"The Co-Respondent" Broadway Date Set Back

Jewel Productions, Inc., has announced that the opening of "The Co-Respondent," at the Broadway theatre, has been postponed until October 14. This will be the fifth Jewel feature to be shown at the Broadway since "Come Through!" began its run early in the summer. It will mark the debut of Elaine Hammerstein as a star of the new producing organization headed by Lee Shubert, Arthur Hammerstein and Ralph W. Ince, which will distribute its product for the present to the Jewel exchanges.

Executives Selected to Oversee European Distribution

Move Is Considered One of Greatest Contributions to War on Part of Motion Picture Industry—Step Is Taken at General Meeting Held in New York October 6—Powers, Irwin and Berst Are the Commissioners Unanimously Chosen

THE motion picture industry has again stepped forward, in its usual straightforward and wholesome way, and has advised the nation, through President Wilson, that it stands ready to shoulder even more of the war responsibility than has heretofore fallen to its lot.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, through its War Cooperation Committee, last week offered to appoint several of the best known film company executives in this country to have entire charge of the distribution of American films in Russia, France and Italy during the period of the war. The move is considered by officials both in and outside of Government circles to be one of the greatest contributions to the war yet made. It is also understood that European war pictures will also be included in the plan which is to be worked out in conjunction with the National War Work Council of the Young Men's Christian Association, which is erecting many buildings in the European countries for the entertainment and recreation of the soldiers.

Brady Calls General Meeting

In response to a personal request made by President Wilson during a conference with President Brady, Arthur S. Friend, P. A. Powers and J. A. Berst, at the White House on Thursday of last week, President Brady issued a call for a general meeting of the industry, which was held at the headquarters of the National Association in the Times Building on last Saturday morning.

The desires of the President of the United States as expressed at the White House conference were fully explained by President Brady, and it was decided to organize the American Cinema Commission in Europe under the supervision of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. President Brady then called for volunteers, and following this various suggestions were made as to the personnel of this commission, and that they should be men fully acquainted with the industry in all its branches, particularly the distributing, and should be executives and organizers fully capable of planning for the collation and distribution of American films and European films in the countries to which they are designated.

Three Commissioners Chosen

P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was unanimously chosen as the Commissioner for France. Mr. Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph V-L-S-E, was requested to take the Commissionership for Russia, and he hopes to be able to arrange his personal and business affairs so as to accept by Tuesday, at which time the appointment are to be filed with President Wilson. Mr. J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., was chosen for the Italian Commissionership, and he also expects to be able to accept the appointment by Tuesday.

It was the consensus of opinion that an American Commissioner should be chosen who will have under his sole jurisdiction the selection of all the films to go to these countries as well as the appointment of asistants and a staff which will be immediately organized for this purpose. Mr. Jules E. Brulatour, representing the Eastman Films and treasurer of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was the unanimous selection for the head of the American Cinema Commission, with headquarters in the United States. Mr. Brulatour reported that he had talked over the long distance telephone with Mr. George Eastman, President of the Eastman Kodak Company, at Rochester, N. Y., who volunteered the fullest co-operation possible from the company's organization in France in connection with the distribution of films in that country.

Other Film Men Volunteer to Aid

In connection with the great task which is placed before the American Commission is the selection of millions of feet of film which is to be sent abroad. There were several volunteers to assist Commissioner Brulatour in this country, among them being Samuel R. Rothapfel, of the Rialto theatre; Adolph Zukor, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Samuel Goldfish, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; B. N. Busch, World Film Corporation, and Al Kaufman, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

President William A. Brady presided at the meeting which was attended by the following: William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Corporation; W. W. Irwin, Vitagraph V-L-S-E.; Lewis J. Selznick, Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises; Arthur S.

Converting the Thrill Into Dollars

Play Up the Feature of Each Episode of a Serial You Show—How Paramount Advertises First

PARAMOUNT is shortly to release its first serial, "Who Is 'Number One'?" and there is naturally great interest in the manner in which an established company entering a new field will handle the chaptered story. Unquestionably Paramount is putting forward the biggest exploitation campaign that has ever been attempted on a serial story, and its service arrangements and exhibitor aids are the most complete that have come to our attention. The man who books this Anna Katherine Green story has been given every opportunity to clean up on it, if the story proves a strong one and the exhibitor himself will only do a little thinking and afford the sort of co-operation that his immediate effect upon his pocketbook. But it's a mighty hard job to get a lot of exhibitors to do this.

In the first place Paramount is going to do a vast advertising campaign in more than fifty of the principal cities of the country. In each of these cities there will be one newspaper used, and the newspaper carrying the advertising will also devote a page to the story each Sunday. This advertising ranges from 5,000 to 22,000 lines in each of the papers used, the most of the contracts being 10,000 lines.

Several papers which have not printed a motion picture serial for a long time are going to print this story, included among them being the Chicago Tribune and the New York World.

In the case of most of the serial advertising that has been done by other companies, the display has been made in advance of the showing of the first episode and running only about a week or so longer. But Paramount is providing advertising that will continue during the first-run showing of the serial. There are three advertisements a week, on Sundays, Mondays and Thursdays. The Sunday and Thursday displays refer to the picture as a whole, but the Monday advertising will be episode advertising. It will refer particularly to the matter contained in that episode and it will dwell upon some feature of that episode. All of this advertising will be paid for by Paramount in the one newspaper in each city which it uses.

But in addition to this the exhibitor is supplied, through the press book, with additional advertising, which he is advised to use liberally. These advertisements come in mat form and all that it is necessary for the exhibitor to do is to fill in the name of his theatre together with any additional matter that he wants to use.

Of course, the first-run exhibitor is going to get the greatest benefit out of the advertising for which Paramount is paying, and he is entitled to it because the first run man is paying a higher price for the service. Yet out of the advertising that Paramount is doing during the fifteen weeks' life of the serial there are two of the three advertisements refer to the serial as a whole and those who show the picture later are bound to get the benefit. Certainly they will have started the first episode before the first-run exhibitor has finished the last episode.

Here is one point to be borne in mind in connection with serials where the producing or distributing company is doing the advertising for you. There are a lot of people who will miss the early episodes at the first-run or even the second-run house and who, after hearing their friends talking about the picture and seeing the advertising constantly before them, will want to see the picture. Here is where every theatre in the radius in which the newspapers carrying the advertising circulate can get the benefit, if they will simply let the public know that they are to show the serial and make the date of the opening plain. This applies to the neighborhood house and the theatre in the smaller towns within the radius of the big city. But this theatre must spend some money to advertise the picture.

We have constantly urged that each individual manager should place the same stress on each episode of a serial as he does on a feature picture. Here is what Paramount says in the introduction of its press book and we endorse it fully:

"A serial that is a big box-office success must first be a well-made melodrama, full of mystery and thrills—a picture so fine that motion picture patrons will follow it to the end, a picture that pyramids receipts, that brings back the crowds.

"Second, it must be aided by enormous advertising, for a serial is meant to increase business and to hold that increase. The public must know about the serial and must be filled with a strong desire to see it. When they see it they must be more than satisfied. A huge advertising campaign will not make a bad serial pay. Advertising can help only a product of quality.

"The earning power of the right kind of a serial is in direct ratio to the amount of advertising behind it.

"Your task is to advertise heavily, connecting your theatre with Paramount's 'Who Is "Number One"?' campaign. Use every method that lies within your power. Make the people of your town think of your theatre when they read about 'Who Is "Number One"?' The more you advertise, the bigger your business.

"The entire city will know that 'Who Is "Number One"?' is well worth seeing, and if your campaign has established in their minds the fact that the serial is being shown in your theatre, you will get the business."

One of these articles we devoted entirely to "Keeping Up the Interest in Serials," and we have referred often to the fact that most exhibitors make some sort of an advance plunge and then expect the serial to carry itself. In spite of the fact that a great share of the advice offered by the producer is to concentrate all the effort on the first episode, we do not approve this theory. But we do say that the theatre should throw all possible effort on the first episode, and then keep up the drive on the following chapters.

For that reason we are especially pleased with the once-a-week advertising that Paramount is to do on each chapter of the serial. Some big point will be picked out. For instance, in this serial there is a battle between a "sea crawler" and a super-submarine under water, and in the advertising on that episode this fight will be featured. Similarly on each of the others there will some one point picked out for exploitation in both the advertising for which Paramount pays and in the special advertising which is furnished to the exhibitor in mat form.

In addition to this newspaper advertising Paramount is going to carry on a bill-posting campaign in one hundred and forty cities. A specially designed twenty-four sheet has been made by the famous artist, Frederick Dorr Steele, and this will be posted at Paramount's expense through the country. So far as we know this is the first time that distributors of a serial have carried on both newspaper and poster advertising along big lines. This poster is reproduced on the opposite page in miniature, and is in black and white, and does not show the striking effects of the huge, many-colored poster. The face of the woman on this poster is also featured in window cards and in other advertising accessories.

Besides the advertising Paramount is furnishing a large number of stock cuts of Kathleen Clifford, the star, in various sizes, and scene cuts on each episode. There will be special lobby displays on each episode, but these were not ready for reproduction at the time this article was written. There are also full sets of one, three and six sheet posters on each episode and a postal card carrying a picture of Miss Clifford.

Paramount suggests a number of stunts in connection with the serial. There is not space to discuss these in detail here, but they will be taken up from time to time under "Your Ideas." One of these suggestions is so good that we have to outline it here. It advises the exhibitor to line up all the "Number Ones" in his town and announce that they will be given free tickets for the first performance. This would include the "Number One" under

Shea's Hippodrome Sets Very High Mark In Stage Settings with Each Picture

MANAGER HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, is setting a pace for other exhibitors of the country with his stage settings. The result is that he has hundreds of people coming to his house who are attracted largely by these displays and they are come to be recognized as a part of the entertainment.

This feature was introduced by Mr. Franklin when he became manager of the Hippodrome, which is Buffalo's largest picture theatre. Mr. Franklin designs these displays and three men are kept at work constantly in the house studio on these settings, the lobby displays and poster work.

"Intermissions are now old fashioned," says Manager Franklin, "and these 'pictures with a punch' flashed upon the audience at the physchological moment in the overture has always aroused much enthusiasm, especially when the scene happens to be based upon some patriotic subject.

"Patriotic subjects, by the way, have proven to be the best for this work. Last week we illustrated the U. S. fleet steaming toward the audience through a sea of red and white stripes and under a blue sky of stars. Unbounded enthusiasm was awakened when at the climax of Victor Herbert's 'American Fantasie,' the curtains were drawn aside disclosing this scene. It instills patriotism in the audience and the intermission becomes a pleasure.

"We make the music fit the scene. For the scene of a canal street in Venice, we selected the overture from 'Lucia.' Hawaiian melodies accompanied an Hawaiian setting. The overture to William Tell was played in front of a beautiful Alpine scene, with a stream running down the mountain side. At Easter time we had a big cross illuminated with white incandescent bulbs. A cavalry charge was the illustration disclosed during the rendition of Suppé's Light Cavalry Overture."

The feature has proven a wonderful success. Of course, the whole thing is greatly helped along by the orchestra of symphony proportions, one of the finest in any theatre in the land. There are 26 men in Shea's Hippodrome orchestra and every men is an artist on his chosen instrument.

Shea's Hippodrome is undoubtedly one of the finest theatres for the exclusive showing of motion pictures in America. On September 3, the palatial house celebrated its third anniversary. It has a seating capacity of over 2,200, with spacious foyers and lobbies. The structure cost a little less than $1,000,000 to complete. The house is notable for the convenience and completeness of its arrangement, the up-to-the minute character of its equipment provided for the comfort of its patrons.

An interesting fact is that Shea's Hippodrome has a staff of nearly 100 employes, all under the direction of Harold B. Franklin, who has succeeded in bringing each department to a high degree of efficiency.

Shea's Hippodrome is in the open market. Only the best of Artcraft, Paramount, Goldwyn, Vitagraph and Pathe productions are shown, with two changes a week. The result of this policy has been a revelation from both an artistic and financial standpoint. Each picture is carefully analyzed and rehearsed for its musical setting. In added attractions, Shea's Hippodrome presents the pick of the Keystone, Mack Sennett-Paramount, Lonesome Luke and Chaplin comedies, together with the Pathe News, which is carefully edited.

Probably one of the biggest attractions at the Hippodrome is the orchestra. Most ambitious numbers are rendered by this organization. The Hippodrome maintains an extensive library of music, with a librarian in charge. Two overtures are played at each performance and the intermediary performances are accompanied with the large pipe organ.

In the art room are made the drawings for the advertising displays, Shea's Hippodrome using just as much space in the local papers as do the legitimate houses.

Recently the Hippodrome introduced girl ushers after studying the proposition thoroughly. It took eight weeks to get the kind of girls wanted and now the "Hipp" has a staff of 15 young ladies, who, according to Mr. Franklin, are most punctual, and decidedly more efficient in their duties than were the boy ushers. The girls are always on time, never absent and only one change has been made in five months.

Iowa Theatre, Pathe Exchange and Newspaper Show Value of Co-operative Advertising

CO-OPERATIVE advertising between the exchange, the exhibitor and the newspaper benefits all three when done rightly. A plan just started by Pathe in the Omaha, Neb., territory is proving successful.

Jake Schlank of the Princess, Sioux City, Ia., booked Mollie King in "The Seven Pearls." Mr. Schlank is a big advertiser. Combining his ad with that of the exchange, and the space given by the Sioux City Journal, a double page was used. The paper runs the serial. At the close of each episode the usual slide, "Read it in the Sioux City Journal," is flashed, but alongside his big twenty-four sheets, thirty of which are on billboards about the city, Exhibitor Schlank has put up huge signs he had printed saying "Read it in the Journal and see it at the Princess."

The Pathe exchange bought 5,000 lines of advertising in the Journal and is using it. The paper circulates widely among a number of smaller towns and the exhibitors here, too, who have planned on booking the serial, are aided immeasurably by this means.

The Lincoln Journal, when Exhibitor Frank Eager planned to show the picture at the Orpheum, got out a special four-page supplement, with four episodes and a number of advertisements. These were sent free to a list of exhibitors whose names were furnished by the exchange. These exhibitors distributed them free to the patrons.

"We find such serials are excellent circulation builders and for that reason are ready to enter heartily into any plan to advance them," wrote the Lincoln Journal to Manager C. E. Holah of the Pathe exchange in Omaha.

Where the Whangdoodle Mourneth

YOU'VE heard the expression: "He's gone where the whangdoodle mourneth."

It appears that the Whangdoodle is a sort of a bird which sits on a limb of a dead tree and continually mourns that he gets nothing of the joys out of life, while the Lark rises at early morn and sings his song of cheer to all the world.

Are you a WHANGDOODLE?

An appreciable share of the exhibitors are.

Ask the ordinary unprogressive showman how his business is and he will generally answer BAD. And he is generally telling the truth for he is sitting around on a dead limb, mourning. And he mourns alone.

The Whangdoodle constantly dwells on his plight. Do the other birds bring him food and cheer? They do NOT. He's a thing to be left to himself, and so when the expression is used that a man has gone where the whangdoodle mourneth, it means that he has passed into the oblivion where none care to follow him into a self-created vale where everything that is born of life and success will never go.

Your long face and tale of woe will never bring you patronage.

You've got to believe in your own business or no one else does. If you insist—even to yourself—that it is going to the dogs, you'd better get out at the first minute possible and get into something else that isn't headed the same way.

But there's nothing in the world the matter with the motion picture business. It is only your obsession that everything is going wrong and that it cannot be cured. And it can't so long as you do nothing to cure it yourself. Unquestionably there may be a lot of things the matter with your theatre that can be remedied. That's the reason that we have brought the EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU to you. Tell us your troubles. Ship us the whangdoodle. We'll promise you that we'll get mighty tired of it in a few minutes and kill the old bird off.

If you started in the business ten or even five years ago, you probably accepted everything just as it came to you. If your business is bad now it is because you are continuing to wait for things to come to you and are accepting them just as they do come. If you are, we predict that you are nearing the end of your slide.

And we are not pessimists. There's room for everybody to prosper, to increase receipts, to stabilize business, to insure the future beyond fear. But you can't do it by mourning over your present trouble. You've got to get out and hustle and hustle intelligently.

The Damnless Public

THE time has passed when you could bunk the public, consciously or unknowingly. Every day the great masses of the country come to know more and more about motion pictures. In many communities we would we willing to say that a considerable share of his patrons know more about motion pictures than does the manager himself. And, if such is your position, how do you expect to lead them to your house?

You've got to be a leader if you would march at the head of the procession.

We started in to talk about the Whangdoodle. Here's one thing that is sure banishment to the bird and that is CHEERFULNESS.

And we do not alone mean your cheerfulness, but the cheerfulness of your theatre, the cheerfulness of your employees, the cheerfulness of your performance. And close akin to that is COURTESY for they are bound together like Siamese twins.

Where Courtesy and Cheerfulness dwell soon CONFIDENCE will come.

And the Whangdoodle can stand none of the three.

Then let's sit down and "take stock" of your theatre. No merchant would think of doing business year after year without now and then taking stock, casting up where he has made mistakes in buying this or that brand, or in failing to buy. And no merchant ever continued in business long who didn't profit by the showing made when he "took stock."

You probably haven't ever taken stock of your theatre since you began to operate it. Lots of you, when we invite you to come to us with your problems probably don't even know what your problems are. Instead of calmly sitting down and figuring them out, you merely conclude that business is going to the dogs.

Don't Be a Sheriff-Dodger

IF you don't want to do it for yourself, take stock of your theatre for us now. Write us the problems of your house, tell us what you are doing and where you have failed. Let us have a view of your whole situation. We may be able to tell you just why you have dead goods on your shelves.

We can't come and forcibly take stock for you. ONLY THE SHERIFF DOES THAT.

We picked up an out of town newspaper the other day and noticed a heading "Walnut Street Improvements," and the little story gave an account of a motion picture threatre having been converted into a butcher shop. It probably was an improvement. The butcher that moved in probably will sell good meat, keep his shop clean, greet his patrons with a smile and give them the sort of service that brings more trade. Evidently the picture show didn't.

The butcher who constantly wears a face of gloom and mourns about poor business would probably be suspected of selling beef that had been dead a mighty long time.

Your business can be improved. The receipts of ninety per cent of the motion picture houses in the country can be increased, but not unless you help increase them. You've got to make the public think that you are alive and on the job. You've got to make yourself believe it even first. And you've got to be.

And you gentlemen of the industry who have refused to go where the Whangdoodle mourneth, let us hear from you about the joys of life and the successes that you are scoring and how you do it.

We like to hear the note of the LARK.

And we forgot to say that only one thing ails the Whangdoodle—and that is his wail. Once strangle that and he becomes a Lark.

Can't we help you in the strangling? It's an open season for it now.

Your Idea and Ours

THE only reason that keeps us from saying that this is the best advertisement that has come to our attention during the week is that we would hesitate to say that any production is "the world's greatest picture." In our opinion, it is very bad business to advertise any picture as the greatest. The exhibitor who does this once will unconsciously find himself repeating the same thing every few weeks. Don't use the superlative in your advertising under under any circumstances. Keep the adjectives down to the limit.

This advertisement commends itself because of its suspense effect. Note that not a word is said about the character of the picture, yet the half-tone of the race horse in the stretch gives the idea of action. It is a picture that will make people go to see it to find out what it is about. It should be followed during the week by advertising telling more particularly of the picture. As a Sunday display it is excellent. It comes from the Strand theatre, Syracuse, N. Y.

If you spend half of the time that you spend in watching your competitor's house on thinking about your own theatre, your bank balance will be a whole lot larger.

THIS is just the opposite of the advertisement of the Strand, already commented upon. Although the announcement of the Butterfly theatre appearing in the Milwaukee papers occupies a space of five columns wide by six inches deep, "The Spy" certainly offers plenty of opportunity for display—even sensational. But the man who wrote this advertisement tried to tell too much. Here is a picture that ought to be advertised with a striking intimate appeal. Instead of inviting the possible patron to read the advertisement, it really causes him trouble if he would read it.

It is well enough to use plenty of descriptive matter if you follow one theme. But the day of crowding your announcement with a lot of circus phrases is past. There is a considerable element of the population that would conclude that the picture itself was largely a fake.

Don't tell your patrons every other week that the current attraction is "the best picture of the year," but so advertise it that they feel that you are telling them the truth about your offerings.

MANAGER L. A. DeHOFF, of the New theatre, Baltimore, has achieved in his advertisement of "Baby Mine" the task of getting the display of the picture announcement and at the same time bringing the personal element of his interest into the display. He has taken as the main portion the display furnished by Goldwyn and has played around this the distinctive border used by the theatre which runs under the name of "The New."

Below he has added his personal endorsement of the film. When a film is really one that merits the endorsement, this is worth more than a solid page of adjectives.

"Put on a good front" is a good slogan for the exhibitor. But add to it "Put something on the inside."

MANAGER KOFELD of the Circle Theatre, Portland, used a unique stunt in his lobby display of "The Fatal Ring," the Pathe serial, featuring Pearl White. While scouting around the town he came across a huge ring, about six feet in diameter, and he promptly put this to work for him, arranging it close to the ticket booth. This was put up with each showing of the serial and the patrons came to look for it more than for the banners. In addition, Mr. Kofeld used the regular banners and the posters furnished on each episode.

Get intoxicated—with enthusiasm for your theatre.

WILLIAM ROPER, manager of the Roper theatre, Council Bluffs, Iowa, believes in popularity of the stars, and has a big sign painted for each one of the stars who appear regularly at his house with a space left for the name of the production in which he or she is appearing. All he has to do is to fill in the name. The various signs are kept in the stock-room.

This idea might be carried further, and with even better results. Why not start in to making collections of every possible photograph of the players, and use a special lobby display just before these pictures come? If you don't use the same star too often, you are going to find a large share of your patrons looking for these displays.

A patron got "sore." "I don't give a rip," said the manager. R. I. P. spells "Rest in Peace."

SEXTON theatre, Great Falls, Mont., which is showing Paramount Pictures, has been able to adapt the trade mark admirably to its electric sign. While not using the name "Paramount" the design is employed and in the minds of the public the theatre is naturally coupled with Paramount Pictures.

What Live Wires Are Doing

Some weeks ago this department warned against naming theatres after brands of pictures because of the handicap put on the theatre if it should change services. Here the Sexton has identified itself with the Paramount national advertising, but has not committed itself so far that there can be no change.

A thought in time saves many a theatre.

CASINO theatre, Marshalltown, Iowa, took advantage of the showing of Metro's "The Slacker" to aid in the recruiting in that city. Here is a picture of the lobby during the showing of the picture with the recruiting squad on duty.

Moving picture theatres owe it to the country to aid in war preparation at their every opportunity and here is a case of combining patriotism with the pocketbook.

Forcing a bad picture over discounts the good ones.

PALACE THEATRE, Waterloo, Iowa, designed a clever advertisement in connection with the showing of "Clover's Rebellion," starring Anita Stewart. In his handbills he printed the clovers in green and thereby further carried out the idea.

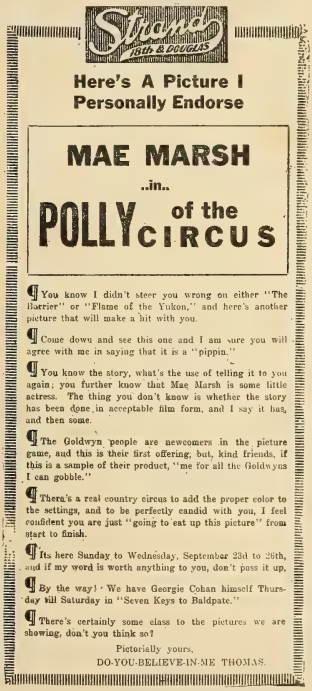
Tomorrow spend half of the time that you usually spend in knocking your competitor in knocking yourself.

STRAND THEATRE, Omaha, believes in varying his advertising. Last week we printed an advertisement which Manager Thomas used in announcing a new Douglas Fairbanks production, simply reproducing a number of pictures of the star without giving his name. Here is another idea from the same house on "Polly of the Circus."



Strand
16th & Douglas
Here's A Picture I Personally Endorse
MAE MARSH
..in..
POLLY of the CIRCUS
You know I didn't steer you wrong on either "The Barrier" or "Flame of the Yukon," and here's another picture that will make a hit with you.
Come down and see this one and I am sure you will agree with me in saying that it is a "pippin."
You know the story, what's the use of telling it to you again; you further know that Mae Marsh is some little actress. The thing you don't know is whether the story has been done in acceptable film form, and I say it has, and then some.
The Goldwyn people are newcomers in the picture game, and this is their first offering, but, kind friends, if this is a sample of their product, "me for all the Goldwyns I can gobble."
There's a real country circus to add the proper color to the settings, and to be perfectly candid with you, I feel confident you are just "going to eat up this picture" from start to finish.
Its here Sunday to Wednesday, September 23d to 26th, and if my word is worth anything to you, don't pass it up.
By the way! We have Georgie Cohan himself Thursday till Saturday in "Seven Keys to Baldpate."
There's certainly some class to the pictures we are showing, don't you think so?
Pictorially yours,
DO-YOU-BELIEVE-IN-ME THOMAS.

It's a good idea once in a while, but the exhibitor who uses this plan wants to be sure that the picture is a good one before he endorses it. We know one exhibitor who declares that he personally endorses all the pictures he shows and who never sees one of them in advance. Yon can imagine how much business his guarantee brings.

STANDARD
TODAY AND ALL WEEK
JACK and the BEANSTALK
Will Appeal to Every Child from Six to Sixty
A PRODUCTION MORE STUPENDOUS THAN A CIRCUS.

HERE, all things considered, is the best advertisement of the week, that we have seen. And in this connection, please remember that we are picking these "best ads" from those that are called to our attention. There may be a lot better ones, but we can't undertake to look up each one of them. Mail your newspaper clippings in to us and we will be glad to comment on them.

This display of the Standard theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, occupies a space four columns wide by eighteen inches deep. The average newspaper column is twenty inches deep, so that the space used gave the exhibitor a commanding position on the page. This advertisement would have been of ocnsiderable less value if cramped into narrow confines.

Note the little reading matter. Everyone knows the story, so a lot of descriptive matter would have been superfluous.

Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel

"ONWARD CHRISTIAN SOLDIERS" is bringing volumes of applause at the Rialto theatre this week, where it is played with the showing of the pictures of the Red Cross parade, the opening number of the Rialto Animated Magazine.

How many managers through the country would think of this musical selection in connection with this news scene? All over the U. S. A. the orchestra will be playing martial music well enough, but when you come to think of it there is only one air that really fits the picture, and that was "Onward Christian Soldiers."

We were present Saturday evening when Mr. Rothapfel was spending several hours going over various news reels which he inspects in making up his week. The moment that the first of the pictures of the parade were shown he turned to Dr. Reisenfeld and suggested the air. And it was so obvious to every one that this was the very thing that all wondered why no one else had thought of it. Here is the thing that makes Rothapfel the master. These ideas come to him on the jump; he doesn't have to "study" over them.

Ninety-nine out of every hundred managers who show news reels never look at them for the purpose of selecting the musical program. They leave this work to the orchestra leader, and in most cases the orchestra leader picks the first thing that comes along. To-day, with this country in the war, and the most of the subjects bearing more or less on the great fight, the news section of the program is one of the most important parts, and managers will find that study of this will increase receipts.

Rothapfel put over another one in the closing part of this Animated Magazine picture showing young American aviators in training. These are really remarkable pictures, taken from one of the airships. There wasn't any music at all with this, only the effect of the whirring motors and the splash as the planes hit the water, or the murmur as they rose into the air. The audience sat spellbound through this part of the picture and then burst into applause, and in every handclap one could almost hear the cry of admiration for the young men who are to win battles for Democracy in the clouds.

Scenes back of the lines in France brought more patriotism out, more came with pictures of the fraternalization of British and American jack tars, and as the sailor boys marched into church with the flags of the two nations at their heads, the strains of "God Save the King" almost brought the huge crowds to their feet. Jeff and Mutt were seen in "Doing Their Bit." The only piece of the magazine which did not have a war appeal was the picture of the New York "Giants," a selection so timely that it could not be avoided.

Mr. Rothapfel told the writer that he never allowed his theatre to be used for propaganda except for patriotism. "And I hit that with a smash," he said. And he does. Rothapfel is performing a service to the nation in his spurs to patriotism. If we had iron crosses and medals of the Legion of Honor and the like his breast should be heavy with them.

It's not the cheap sort of ballyhoo patriotism, either. It perfects unison of the picture and the music that stirs the better things in every heart. We'd hate to think how a friend of the Kaiser felt after sitting through a Rathapfel presentation.

You owe it as a duty to use your theatre in every way possible to aid the nation in making war with a full heart. You don't need cheap flag waving or buncombe, only a thoughtful selection of the pictures and giving them the heart-feeling with your music.

Rothapfel has done another thing most unusual in this week's bill—something that the average manager would never do. Both the opening and the closing pictures are scenes. And a comedy was dropped off the bill at the last minute to put in the second scenic, pictures of Yosemite National Park, so wonderful a picture was it. But there was another reason. There was a strong comedy element, furnished by the animated, title with squirrels and owls that brought chuckles from every one, and there was a trailer on the end of it, the artistic idea of what a big tree might be used for, starting with a many-storied flat building, including sawmill, tannery, etc., and finally ending in a wireless station. It made a big hit. The scene pictures themselves are remarkable and through using the changing light effects an artistic triumph was achieved. The other is a Pathe of "Big Bear Lake, California."

The musical program this week is one of the most remarkable in all the achievements of the Rialto and its great fifty-piece orchestra. The overture is Thanhauser. Most of you have heard this Wagner masterpiece, but few have ever heard it as it is being played at the Rialto with triumphantly pealing Pilgrim's chorus. The other orchestra number consists of selections from "Pinafore."

Mlle. Madeline D'Espinoy of the Opera Comique, Paris, and a finished artist, is heard in the Gavotte from "Manon," a glorification of youth, and the young French singer brings into her interpretation the very cry of gladness. The other vocal number is Albano, called "the king's baritone." This is his first appearance in America, and the manner in which he sang the prologue to "I Pagliacci" brought insistent calls from the audience. In fact he was interrupted in the midst of the number by the applause that refused to be kept in.

Clara Kimball Young in "Magda" is the feature, a review of which will appear under the heading of "Screen Examinations." Friday night we sat with Mr. Rothapfel, Dr. Reisenfeld and other members of the musical board of the Rialto and witnessed the selection of the music. The picture is started, a musician at the piano plays the airs suggested by Mr. Rothapfel, who stops the operator every few moments to make change in the music, to suggest effects here and there. And after one has seen the feature in this projection room, and after one has seen the feature as it is projected for the patrons of the Rialto, one then knows how much music and lights mean.

Here is a remarkable bill at the Rialto. With the exception of "Jeff and Mutt" and the effects of the scenic that we have mentioned, there isn't the slightest comedy in it. One might almost call the feature gloomy, were it not for the music. And yet, we believe no one left the Rialto without feeling sure that they had witnessed a perfect performance.

The secret is this: Balance and co-ordination are different things. One does not need to throw a comedy against a melodrama if one has so selected the music, filtered the lights and has won from picture and music and every element of presentation complete harmony. And it adds to it that the house is so splendidly managed that there is never the slightest confusion, that one feels always in the atmosphere of the artistic.

AT THE STRAND WEEK OF OCT. 7

MARGUERITE CLARK is the star in "Bab's Diary," one of the most delightful of comedies at the Strand theatre this week, the humor of which is carried largely through the quotations from the diary, written by Mary Roberts Rinehart.

The news weekly consists of pictures of the Red Cross parade, the "Giants" and "White Sox," a new "mattress life preserver" to save victims of the submarine, scenes in the Indian round-up at Pendleton, Ore., Secretary McAdoo openeing the Liberty Loan campaign at Cleveland, French soldiers teaching American troops trench construction at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., and Roosevelt at the great patriotic mass meeting at Minneapolis. All of these incidents are from Hearst-Pathe, while aided to this there is a splendid "woodcraft" picture from Paramount-Bray.

One of the best features that has been shown recently is the Strand special, "The Benefactor," telling the life story of Thomas A. Edison. There is a strong comedy element running through it that keep the scientific portion from becoming tiresome.

"Warblers of France" is a beautiful nature picture in colors.

Mutt and Jeff in "The Laundry" rounds out the bill in which comedy predominates.

The overture for the week is Tschaikowsky's "1812," and the organ solo, the coronation march from "Le Prophete." Henry de Caux, tenor, sings "The Flower Song" from "Carmen" magnificently, and Rosa Lind, the wonderful soprano, brought peals of applause with her rendition of Lacombe's "Spring Morning."

Charles H. Ryan, Manager, Garfield Theatre, Chicago

Young Chicago Manager Gets Advance Information

Charles H. Ryan, manager of the Garfield theater, 2844 Madison street, Chicago, is a great believer in advance knowledge of the pictures he intends to show and always makes it a point to know all about the films before he shows them.

Although only 24 years old he has been connected with pictures for the past eight years, coming up from the very bottom. He has managed the Garfield for the past five years.

Here are a few of his rules for success:

The first object of the manager should be to keep his house as attractive physically as possible.

Always learn about a picture before you show it. Attempting to run off a picture because there is a crowd before the doors is a mistake.

Have the doorman greet your patrons with a smiling "Good evening" and check their package until after the show.

Drill your ushers to be courteous and use the word "please" in all addresses to patrons.

Don't use bunk in your advertising, because it is a boomerang.

Bases Color of Lights on Character of Play

Managing Director D. L. Cornelius, of the Strand theatre, New Orleans, has adopted a novel manner for announcing to the transients the character of the picture in his theatres. He is a close student of psychology and believes that lighting effects have a marked influence upon audiences. Therefore he indicates the dominant mood of the feature which he may have on exhibition by the color of the lights in the lobby of the theatre.

Recently at the Globe theatre, under the direction of Manager Cornelius, House Manager Greenbladt installed hundreds of red lights when Louise Glaum appeared in "Idolaters." For a plain romance with love as the central theme, yellow lights are installed. For the "vamp" pictures blues predominate and for the eternal triangle, greens shine forth. Besides making a welcome change in the appearance of the front, the idea has an appeal for patronage.

Is This Your Theatre?

In this column the Exhibitors' Service Bureau will print comment from week to week on theatres actually visited, pointing out faults found and commendable features The name of the theatre will not be mentioned, but if it applies to you and you want improvement, write to this department.

LOCATED in the extreme uptown section of a city of some 350,000, Theatre D. has mainly a neighborhood appeal, but the management has sought to develop the automobile trade by showing special features that have not been exhibited at the bigger downtown houses.

This theatre had been under the management of various individuals, and all had failed. Finally Mr. X. took charge, and every one predicted that he would fail, just as the others had done. He had to borrow the money to buy the house, and he got this by taking a firm which owned another theatre into partnership with him. A year afterward he was able to buy out his partners, and is now the sole owner.

A visit to his theatre showed how he did it. In the case of most theatres we visit, one may by chance identify the manager without having to have him paged, but there wasn't the slightest doubt about who was the manager of this house. This theatre gives performances only in the evenings, the two shows starting at seven and nine. We reached the spot just as the audience was leaving the first show.

The manager was at the door handing our programs for the current week, together with a booklet on a special attraction that he was to have during the latter part of the week. He seemed to know most of his patrons by name, and it was remarkable to see that most of these had a remark to make—first. He spoke to every one that he knew, and to those that he did not know. There was a constant stream of questions rushing at him, as to when this or that attraction or star was to be seen at his house. He didn't have to consult a reference book to answer the questions. He KNEW.

This theatre shows one five-reel feature and two other reels, generally a two-reel comedy and changes each night.

Recently one of the downtown houses canceled the showing of the program of one of the best known producers, and because of two other houses closing there was no opening for this franchise. The manager of this neighborhood house finally was able to make arrangements so that he would have the first showing of these pictures. True, they were shown in several neighboring cities before he got them, but he was the first in his own city to get them. And he proceeded to advertise them in the daily newspapers. He could not use large space, but he simply called attention to the name of the picture and of the star and announced that it was the first time the city has an opportunity to see it. Of course some other neighborhood house was to show it the following day and the picture would be around the city for some weeks afterwards, but the exhibitor was able to attract the attention to the public owning automobiles and who were interested in that particular brand of pictures and in individual stars.

Yet this manager apparently has worked to a fine point the retention of his neighborhood business, but aside from advertising his attractions which should appeal to the whole city he did nothing more. In the first place, the sidewalk was lined with boards carrying one sheet advertising attractions coming the next day and days afterwards. These were not only unattractive, but they forced people coming in automobiles to drive beyond the theatre in order to alight. His theatre was next to the corner of a well-paved street and fronting on one of macadam, yet there was a great hole in the street between his house and the corner. Of course, the city should have made the repairs, but the theatre manager himself could have filled in the hole to make it passable for a few dollars. As it was, everyone that came to his theatre in an automobile at least got a physical jolt that made them remember the occasion.

This manager spent the greater part of his daylight hours in actually seeing pictures before he booked them. He was a man of good judgment and his programs were really excellent. With seven different bills a week he gave a film program that was readily worth the money he charged. He made the people welcome to his theatre, spoke to them when they entered and told them "good night" when they left. He notified them of coming offerings and kept their interest aroused.

Although he stepped into the theatre now and then to see that everything was moving smoothly and at least once during each performance visited the projection booth to see that all was going well, he devoted the greater part of the time to the front of the house. He asked his patrons now and then whether they had had comfortable seats, sometimes how they liked the performance and addressed various other questions that made the people feel that he had a real interest in them.

There was one serious fault to be found with the house. On entering, one had to go up four steps, yet the pitch of the interior was such that one felt almost as if one was about to fall when one walked down the aisles. Sufficient slant could have been obtained without the elevation in front, but the manager explained that the steps were there when he got control of the house and that he had left them there. Very little expense would have been entailed in their removal, and in the change in the house. It was a theatre that appealed especially to women and the tired business man, and though the manager has been very successful he would probably add to that success by causing his patrons as little effort as possible.

Absolute comfort is a great part of a theatre's success.

Is this your theatre?

Detroit Showmen "Plaster Posters" in Fight on Cheap Vaudeville

This is another of a series of articles by W. A. Bach, who is touring the principal exchanges of the Universal installing service bureaus. This article deals with conditions in Detroit. Mr. Bach is now in St. Louis and will write articles from that city.

BATTLING with cheap vaudeville and musical comedy that certainly satisfies that desire that looks for quantity rather than quality, the exhibitors along Munro avenue and the territory adjacent, in other words Detroit's "Bowery," seem to think that their most potent weapon is to plaster their front with a mass of poster paper and photos, which, besides costing them a mint of money, would certainly keep but the keenest of these fall breezes from penetrating the interior of their theatres.

In most cases there is absolutely no attempt to arrange or display this advertising matter, and usually it is best described by the word "mess." In a few cases the theatres have attempted cutting out the posters and remounting on background with lettered titles, but the result is worse than before, if it is possible.

Strangely, the interiors of these houses are at variance with their fronts, being quietly, tastefully decorated, having a very fair variety of music and excellent projection. It seems odd that the manager of at least one of these houses does not think of being different to his neighbor and instead of "plasterin'," take the one big idea of the picture he is showing, whether it be star, story or incident in the play, and make a startling, concentrated splurge on that one theme in such a manner that could not fail to create the "lineup" that I have yet failed to see at any of these houses.

Looking over the screen sections in the papers, both daily and weekly, one is struck by the fact that there are practically no original newsy stories about either plays or players. True, a few squibs are used, but it is only chopped stuff and cannot appeal to the public. I am told by both newspaper men and exhibitors that the newspapers will gladly use real press stories if the theatres that are advertising in their columns will supply them, and that the exchanges could put over a lot of material in this way—but it isn't done! The theatres each have long, condensed, stereotyped announcements, mostly without heading or breaks, about their attracttions that will not bring one-quarter the business a good, live press story and photos will produce.

The newspaper directory idea, so popular in Chicago and some other cities, in which even the smallest theatre has a chance to advertise and receive publicity value, has been tried and has failed so far. So that it seems the only means of publicity left to the smaller house lies in the lobby, programs, or house circulars.

But in the matter of programs, Detroit has some theatre men who are putting out house programs that are equal to any in the country and I am sure a whole lot better than most. Take, for instance, Kunsky's little house organ for his eight houses which is a model of what a house organ should be.

It gives the attractions for all the houses in a bright, breezy, attractive fashion that sells the goods, and in addition the little notes on plays and players are all that could be desired, and, judging by the mercantile advertising the little paper carries, I don't think it is costing Mr. Kunsky very much money. There are possibilities in house programs that most exhibitors do not realize, and if they want their eyes opened I would advise them to get a copy of the little paper described above.

Billboard advertising, the howitzer of film advertising, is put to good use in Detroit. Twenty-four sheet stands are used liberally by several of the big houses in conjunction with other forms of publicity and if results are to be the criterion, the fact that the most persistent and consistent of these big advertisers lines them up night after night must speak for itself.

But the paper used is mostly stock. Even greater effectiveness could be secured by using the striking lithographed paper supplied by the manufacturer on most big subjects, and these could be, if desired, intermingled with the usual block poster advertising the house.

Detroit has not felt the almost general increase in prices so much as some of her neighbors, as the ten cent sign and even an occasional nickel still flaunt their brazen invitation in the downtown sections. Of course this is true of the smaller house only, of which Detroit and its environs still has a goodly number.

Two individual incidents I want to mention, particularly. One, the case of a beautiful house on Woodward avenue, beautiful lobby, most tastefully decorated and the entire effect marred and negatived by a flapping, indifferently lettered and soiled canvas sign hanging squarely in the middle of the arched sidewalk canopy. Why? The second, a splendid idea in lobby display and attraction used by the theatre playing the "British Tanks," whereby an electric device, very simple in itself, a flash of flame is made to come from the mouth of the cannon in a picture forming the major portion of the display. The idea is simple, but it shows the quality of selling attractiveness that counts.

In conclusion, Detroit has and will enjoy a wonderful prosperity. She has been favored of all American cities, but there is bound to be a return to normal conditions, and the exhibitor who has been "selling" all the time will survive, while those who floated with the tide will find themselves out to sea.

Howell in Fifth Century Comedy

Alice Howell and her director, J. G. Blystone, are now hard at work on the production of the fifth of the Century Comedy series. The piece, which is a two-reeler like its predecessors, has not been named as yet; but the basis of the synopsis concerns the troubles of Alice, who takes the part of a forlorn country schoolteacher, and her hazardous exploits with a desperate band of bandits.

Ready Made Ad-Talks

Shirley Mason in Another Winner—
Delightful Comedy-Drama Well Treated

(Edison-Perfection Five Reel Production)

"How can I make everybody like me?"
"How can I make myself famous?"
"How can I marry a millionaire?"

These are the three questions which Charlotte Marlin in "The Apple Tree Girl" sets out to answer. The first she answers by being nice to everyone she meets, whether he or she be great or small. The second she answers by going in for sports and coming out national golf champion and the third—well the third is something of a stickler. It might appear quite easy for a pretty girl to marry a millionaire—perhaps it is—but never having been either a pretty girl or a millionaire we don't know whether it is or not. At any rate there comes a stumbling block in the path of Charlotte Marlin. The millionaire proposes and with a nod or a "yes" she can gratify her heart's desire. But Charlotte has, in the meantime, consulted her heart which has changed somewhat since the first and it says "no" and no it is with a comparatively poor doctor displacing the millionaire. Shirley Mason appears as Charlotte in this comedy-drama which is one of the most amusing and wholesome that the ——— theatre has offered for many a day. It is filled with pretty scenes and pretty thoughts and everyone will enjoy seeing it. Don't think because of "pretty thoughts" that it's preachy—foolishly preachy. It's not—in fact is just thoroughly entertaining. With Joyce Fair, Jessie Stevens and Paul Perez supporting Miss Mason it will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Norma Talmadge in the Crowning Glory of Her Career on Screen, "The Moth"

(Selznick Five Reel Production)

Norma Talmadge, who in the opinion of many dramatic critics and thousands of patrons of the motion picture theatre, is the most accomplished actress appearing on the screen to-day, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre in "The Moth," a five-part screen drama, exposing the trials of a young wife who marries a man who does not love her, and learns when it is too late. The story is adapted from the novel by William Dana Orcutt, and presents one of the best subjects for screen presentation ever enacted before a camera. Miss Talmadge is at her best. The new Selznick production in which she appears is the first of eight special features in which this screen star will be seen. If "The Moth" be an example of what is to follow, the management of the ——— theatre can promise his patrons that they will not go amiss on any one of them. "The Moth" tells the story of modern society—deals with life as it is actually lived by some of our rich, and shows how a young and beautiful girl, reared in luxury, who has nothing to occupy her young mind except pleasures, flirts with Fate once too often, and not until she has become the mother of children does she realize that her idea of life has been wrong, and that she has never known real happiness. The part of Lucy Gillam, which Miss Talmadge presents, calls for exceptional dramatic acting, and after seeing this artist of the screen in her late picture, "The Moth," you will wonder that the stern realities of this life can be portrayed with such feeling and naturalness as they are by Miss Talmadge in the role of Lucy Gillam.

Norma Talmadge will be seen in "The Moth" on ——— of ——— week at the ——— theatre in what is considered by critics the crowning glory of her career on the screen. Eugene O'Brien, who has been seen opposite Mary Pickford in some of her best productions, has a strong role in this production.

"Ghost House" Superb Comedy-Drama—
Jack Pickford and Louise Huff Co-Star

(Paramount Five Reel Production)

"The Ghost House" is a corking love story tinged with comedy and featuring that highly popular team, Jack Pickford and Louise Huff. You've read ghost stories, you've heard them told about the fireside, but to see one enacted on the screen is the best of thrills yet. Naturally there aren't any ghosts at all. Three strange parties elect to spend the night in the Ghost-House. All present think the others are ghosts. The fun and thrills are hardly to be described. Beulah Marie Dix, author of many of the most successful Lasky subjects conceived The Ghost-House" and has developed it with a skill that plants her securely among the foremost photoplay writers of the day. William De Mille transferred it to the screen. He has produced it most effectively. It is really marvelous to note the manner in which Mr. De Mille has used light to obtain weird and uncanny effects. But the best part of "The Ghost House" is that after every weird and uncanny bit comes a hearty laugh. And then there is the love story superbly enacted by the popular leads. In fact "The Ghost House" is well nigh, if not, actual perfection in the way of entertainment. It will be shown to patrons of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Franklyn Farnum's Latest Sure-Fire Farce, "Anything Once," Mixes Laughs and Thrills

(Bluebird Five Reel Production)

Franklyn Farnum, the smiling comedian who has often entertained patrons of the ——— theatre in Bluebird releases of the past appears again on the screen in "Anything Once." This is one of those comedies wherein the eastern hero takes a flier in the wild and woolly west. Naturally he turns out a success even in such a foreign environment but not before many a humorous situation has been uncovered. It is a real laugh producer from start to finish and Mr. Farnum fits his role splendidly, deriving the highest possible amount of fun from each humorous twist. The usual attractive Bluebird production prevails adding much to the beauty of the picture. Mr. Farnum has a new leading lady in the person of Claire Du Brey who has the part of a mysterious adventuress. Marjory Lawrence is an ingenue who will immediately attract all eyes and the rest of the cast contributes high grade work. The Bluebird-Farnum pictures are becoming very popular all over the country and patrons of the ——— theatre are urged not to miss this, the latest, shown on ——— of ——— week.

"Ashes of Hope," Story of the Dance Hall—
Belle Bennett, a New Star Is Featured

(Triangle Five Reel Production)

Primitive passions ruled in the days of '49—in the great and uncivilized west. Men and women acted on impulse and thought afterwards. "Ashes of Hope" is a picture depicting the great love of a dance hall girl for a stranger. She gives herself to him abiding in the faith that he will be square with her as she is with him. But the man proves a rotter. The queen of the dance hall plans a revenge but just as it is within her grasp there comes the refining and softening touch of mother love and she allows the man to return to his native land. Patrons of the ——— theatre will have an opportunity to witness this virile drama of the west before long. It is well acted by a cast headed by Belle Bennett, one of the newest Triangle stars who, it will readily be realized, has an exceedingly bright future before her. Jack Livingston, Jack Richardson and Josie Sedgwick, competent players every one, lend effective support to the star. "Ashes of Hope" has received a wonderful production and is, in fact, one of the best westerns that the ——— theatre has offered in some time. It will arrive on ——— of ——— week.

"Fibbers" Another of the Skinner Type—
Bryant Washburn Hero in Surprise Story

(Essanay Five Reel Production)

Bryant Washburn, hero of much delightful pictures as "Skinner's Dress Suit" and "Skinner's Baby" will again appear at the ——— theatre in another comedy-drama "The Fibbers." The Essanay Company, realizing the fact that Mr. Washburn struck his true stride in the two pictures mentioned above awarded him another vehicle of the same type, although widely different as to plot. Its likeness to its illustrious forerunners lies in the fact that it deals with real people leaving through equally real situations. The married couple, about which the story centers take an injured man into the shelter of their home and he is such an expense that they find themselves obliged to work harder than ever before. And success greets their renewed efforts. They return one evening to find their unwelcome guest gone and both express great satisfaction—but then, well then comes a real honest-to-goodness surprise ending. It wouldn't do to tell it you here, suffice it to say that it carries a punch and a big one. Mr. Washburn has opposite him Virginia Valli, who makes as real a figure out of the wife as he does out of the husband. "The Fibbers" is a picture for all classes, guaranteed to please. It will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"Spotted Lily" Full of Purest Pathos—
Ella Hall Scores in Latest Bluebird

(Bluebird Five Reel Production)

From the shell torn fields of Europe to the streets of New York is the journey undertaken by little Yvonne, a kindly old priest and a young violinist, Jean Duval, by name. Suddenly transplanted from their native land into the midst of the hurly-burly, the rush and the roar of New York, the three pilgrims find a distressingly blank future staring them in the face. The city is unkind to them, for before long the priest journeys onward and Yvonne and Jean are left to care for themselves. And as time goes on Duval proves a weakling. The shallow flattery of a Russian Countess causes him to desert his truer friend, Yvonne, and he is about to accept of the bounty of the Countess when his faithful companion from the other land steps in and takes a hand—saving him from an existence of dishonor. There is a touching pathos to this little story which has Ella Hall in the featured part, supported by Victor Kottman as Duval and Gretchen Lederer as the Countess. It will bring tears to your eyes, time and again, tears that you will not be ashamed of—and with the final happy ending you will be as glad as any child. Bluebird well upholds the standard set by its previous releases in this which goes under the title of "The Spotted Lily," and which will be shown to patrons of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Violet MacMillan Is Pretty Butterfly—
Clever Impersonation of Star Pleases

(Butterfly Five Reel Production)

"The Girl Who Won Out" has as its star Violet MacMillan, who has gained considerable fame through her impersonation of young girls. Here she appears as Nancy Grimm, who after the death of her mother is forced to accept the scant hospitality offered by the children's asylum. Her little sister, a part delightfully played by Little Barbara Conley, is taken from her and given to the charge of a wealthy couple who after a while neglect her. Nancy is farmed out to a poor family and is obliged to work from sun-up to sundown to earn her meagre board. Finally she decides to run away. She kidnaps her sister who is only too glad to make an escape from the wealthy family and then Nancy dressed as a boy proceeds to eke out a living for the two of them. How they are finally tracked by the child authorities and how the right young man steps in in time to save Nancy from going back to the poorhouse make a charming little story which patrons of the ——— theatre will have the opportunity of seeing on ——— of ——— week.

French Picture Offered by Pathe—
Emotional Acting by Emmy Lynn

(Pathe Five Reel Production)

"The Torture of Silence" is a Pathe feature procured from a French manufacturer. In the past foreign-made productions have been something to steer clear of, but since the European countries have been adopting the fine points of American producers in the manufacture of their pictures, these foreign productions contain an appeal that is practically universal in its scope. Emmy Lynn, star of "The Torture of Silence" is one of the noted artists of the European stage. In portraying deep emotion she has few equals and no superiors. As one watches her depict the sorrow of the wife tortured by the jealousies of her husband, he can almost feel the depth to which the woman's soul is torn. She contributes one of the sincerest pieces of acting that has yet been seen on the ——— screen. The story has to do with a certain indiscretion of the wife's committed when her husband was so wrapped up making a fortune that he had little time to give her. In later years he discovers it, denounces her and deprives her of the child, until she will tell him with whom her previous affair was conducted. This she refuses to do because of a vow. The manner in which this tense situation is finally unraveled speaks highly for the skill of the French writer. "The Torture of Silence" really holds the interest from opening scene until closing scene. It will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Mary Miles Minter in Typical Minter Role Seen in "Her Country's Call"

(Mutual Five Reel Production)

Mary Miles Minter will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre in "Her Country's Call," a photodrama in five parts, written by Charles Dazey and produced under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham. Miss Minter in this, her late picture, presents a typical Minter part. She is the little, unsophisticated mountain girl, whose only vision of life is that framed by the high peaks on all sides of her lonely little home. Her dad, Jim Slocum, is a fatherly old man, who loves his daughter, and who in return is loved with all the affection of innocent girlhood. For some unknown reason Jim Slocum despises all soldiers, and the flag arouses no patriotism within him. Jess inquires the reason why and her dad tells her that fifteen years before he had been driven out of camp for selling liquor to the soldiers. He tells her that he will have revenge. Jess meets a Captain Neville, fishing in the mountain. Her dad is trailed by a seeret service man, and, when he is fired upon, little Jess is hit by a bullet. She is cared for at the home of the captain by his aunt. Because the town girls will not play with her, she starts back for the little home in the mountains. She saves a border town from being raided by a band of ruffians, and later her dad confesses that he is not her dad, but that in revenge he had kidnapped her from her father, who is a Colonel Tremaine. She finds her father, and a husband and her happiness is complete.

Mary Miles Minter in "Her Country's Call," to be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Carlyle Blackwell and All Star Brady Cast in "The Burglar"—Gripping Drama

(World Five Reel Production)

Do you remember Augustus Thomas's stage version of "The Burglar"? Can't you imagine the excitement that is impliedly promised by the mere mention of the title, "The Burglar"? The World-Pictures, under the general direction of William A. Brady, have produced Mr. Thomas's great work in pictures with Carlye Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley and little Madge Evans in the leading roles. Little Madge Evans was recently featured in a World production, and the critics were unanimous in the opinion that she, by her clever work in the production, was entitled to a place in the front ranks of child stars. Mr. Blackwell needs no introduction. He has been seen in hundreds of successful screen dramas, and, without one exception, has always pleased. Miss Greeley, although not so well known, has played in leading feminine parts for some time. She is pretty, and in her work in "The Burglar" presents some strong bits of dramatic acting. "The Burglar" tells the story of a young fellow at college, who likes a good time and neglects his studies. He gets into serious trouble, and is obliged to leave home. He becomes a wanderer, and tries to live down his past. He meets a girl whom he loves and marries. They live happily until one of his old college chums who knows of the crime for which he Lewis (Carlyle Blackwell) left his home years before threatens exposure unless Lewis gives him the combination to the vaults of the bank at which he is cashier. Events so shape themselves as to reveal that Lewis has been laboring under a misapprehension. The man whom he thought he had murdered was murdered by another. But he learns too late.

"The Burglar," a gripping story with action every minute, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Frank Keenan, Alma Hanlon, Robert Edeson —Three Stars in "The Public Defender"

(Harry Raver Five Reel Production)

It is seldom that you are given the opportunity to see four screen stars in the same picture. It is reasonable to assume that a story adapted to and presented on the screen having four of its principal character roles impersonated by recognized stars of both screen and stage is well worth seeing. In a powerful drama titled "The Public Defender," written by Mayer C. Goldman and Frank W. Harris, both members of the New York bar; the eminent actor, Frank Keenan; the winsome little star of the screen, Alma Hanlon; the hero of many successes on stage and screen, Robert Edeson, and John Sainpolis—all four known to the millions, are seen together in action. They present in pictures a story that all will find of great interest, not alone because of the entertaining value, but from which we will derive subject for thought—deep thought. It is an appeal by two well-known attorneys-at-law for justice to the man or woman who for financial reasons is unable to obtain the necessary assistance when he or she is brought before the tribunal of justice to answer for a crime which he or she has not committed, but at whom circumstantial evidence points her threatening finger. "The Public Defender" discusses in pictures a subject which oftentimes seriously affects the rights and liberties of the American people. It takes the part of the poor man who is cast into prison, and who because he has no money, does not receive justice. It is an appeal for a public defender, and in its appeal it presents one of the most powerful dramas ever enacted on the screen.

"The Public Defender," with four popular screen stars impersonating strong roles—Frank Keenan, Alma Hanlon, Robert Edeson and John Sainpolis—will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"A Man's Law"—Story of the Canadian Woods—Irving Cummings Featured

(Overland Film Five Reel Production)

A more red-blooded, human story was never told on the screen or within the covers of a book of fiction than the one that is told in pictures when "A Man's Law," with Irving Cummings and Ruth Sinclair in the leading roles, is thrown on the screen. The story tells of the great North woods and some of the most beautiful exterior scenes ever snapped by a camera are shown. Most of the action takes place in the open. You will be reminded of some of the works of Jack London when you see this strong, powerful, virile play of the Canadian woods unfurl its story on the screen before you. With Mr. Cummings and Miss Sinclair in the supporting cast are Arthur Morrison and Roy Applegate, who give some of the best bits of character acting ever prepresented. There is everything about this picture that holds the attention, grips with the firmness of a band of steel, for it reveals man in his true nature, takes him for what he really is and lets Nature follow her own course. The climax of "A Man's Law" is a "corker." In it is staged a fight scene between two men of the North woods that could not have been improved upon for naturalness and down-right earnestness on the part of the participants. It is a fight—a real fight.

"A Man's Law," with Irving Cummings in the feature male role and Ruth Sinclair carrying feminine honors, will be seen on the screen of the ——— on ———of ——— week.

Theda Bara Presents the Title Role in Dumas' Popular Novel, "Camille," on Screen

(Fox Seven Reel Production)

Theda Bara in "Camille." The most famous of screen vampires is to be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre in one of the most widely read works of Alexandre Dumas, the great French novelist. The work was adapted to the screen by Adrian Johnson. The picture was produced by William Fox under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. You will remember that as Camille Sarah Bernhardt made her most pronounced success on the American stage. "Camille" has been presented on the stage and in opera. Many of the most successful and most popular actresses of the speaking stage have impersonated the title role. In writing his story the French novelist followed the life history of an actual character in the social whirl of Paris. The story is as familiar to most of us as are some of the historic events occurring in the history of our own country. Camille, the principal character, is a young and beautiful French girl, who is sought by every man in Paris. She revels in the gay life and forgets what the future might bring. She scorns the advances of men who truly love her, preferring to lead a life of freedom. But she has taken the "pace that kills," and when a comparatively young woman finds herself in the grip of consumption. She bravely faces the end and dies a victim of her own choice. Miss Bara presents this role in a masterful way.

Scores Big Success in Four Years' Service

A. S. Goldsmith, manager of the Broadway Photoplay theatre, at Broadway and 103d street, is one of the men who entered the business four years ago a novice and who has come to be known as one of the most successful managers in the metropolitan area. Although still in his twenties, Mr. Goldsmith has devoted every moment of his time since he entered the business to studying the betterment of his theatre.

The Broadway Photoplay is one of the few theatres in the country that operates its program on the split-week basis. He has made great success with this because he reviews each one of his pictures before he books it and selects just what he thinks his patrons will desire.

Spokane Exhibitor Shows Himself in Trailer

A very unusual photoplay, or at least it has every semblance of being a genuine five-reel subject when it is first shot on the screen, has been completed at the Thomas H. Ince studios, and will serve as a trailer for the subject shown at the Liberty theatre, Spokane, by Manager Ralph Ruffner, the week previous to October 22. Recently Ruffner spent several days in Los Angeles, and while there Bert Lennon of the Thomas H. Ince publicity department had the film made. The titles are finished in the regular Ince style and contain the following:

The Liberty Theatre presents
Ralph Ruffner in "A scene from the Front,"
An Ince Junior Production.
Place: Thomas H. Ince Studios, Los Angeles.
Cast: The Boy Wonder, Charles Ray, and The Wonder Boy, Ralph Ruffner.

Scenes made show Ruffner going about the studio and meeting Charles Ray, who is a favorite in Spokane. They talk over picture matters and Ruffner asks when he will be back at the Liberty, instructing Charley to tell the audience, which is a close-up, and it is very easy to read his lips when he says: "The week of October 22."

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

Frank Campeau Re-engaged by Douglas Fairbanks

Frank Campeau, who has the part of "30-30" Madden in "The Man from Painted Post," the current Artcraft release, haes been re-engaged by Douglas Fairbanks to appear in the next production under the direction of John Emerson. In heavy dramatic roles Frank has but few rivals, and because of his ability was selected for the new cast, as contrast to the Fairbanks smile and light comedy characterization.

On the speaking stage Campeau was known as "the villain with the eyes of fire." In addition to creating the character of Trampus in "The Virginian," he played important parts in a number of the Augustus Thomas, A. H. Woods and Charles Frohman productions.

It is very likely that Campeau will be permanently identified with the Douglas Fairbanks-Artcraft photoplays.

Triangle-Keystone director, William Beaudine, has finished the first comedy under his direction at the Triangle-Keystone studios and has started on another which will feature Peggy Pearce, Paddy McGuire, Joseph Belmont and Fritz Schade. The new story calls for considerable "water stuff" and the immense Keystone plunge has been fitted for the opening scenes.

Tom Mix Becomes Star in William Fox Dramas

Has for the Past Ten Months Been Starring in Comedies on the Fox Program—Western Stories to Be His Vehicles

No More Laughter for Thomas (Formerly Tom) Mix. He Has Been Withdrawn from Fox Comedies to Play Leads in Fox Dramas

WILLIAM FOX has announced that Tom Mix, one of the best known cowboy artists in motion pictures, is the latest star of the Fox Exclusive Feature Series. The entry of Mix into the five and six-reel class of subjects is expected to be greeted with warm approval by the many admirers of his screen work. For the past ten months he has appeared in comedies on the Fox Program, and has made quite a name and reputation in that sphere.

Tom Mix's popularity as a cowboy assures for him almost certain success in this newest move. The type of drama in which he will appear will be largely Western, it is announced, and will afford Mix ample opportunity to display the daredevil "stunts" which have gained him the title of one of the most fearless of screen players. Tom's picture work is merely a chapter from the adventurous story of his life. Born on the Texan plains he early manifested his roving spirit. He enlisted when the Spanish-American War began, and served for some time as Chief of Scouts in Cuba. Thereafter, he worked in a similar capacity in the Philippines, and carried on the task of organizing the natives there into American army units.

At the time of the Boxer uprising in China, Tom was there, attached to the Ninth U. S. Infantry. He was wounded at the Battle of Tien-tsin, so severely that upon his return to the United States a few months later, he had to spend several months in a hospital.

Later he resigned from the army and joined the Texas Rangers. He was leader of the band who hunted down and captured the notorious Shont brothers, a group of men engaged in running horses across the Mexican border. After that Mix became Deputy Marshal in that state. Then he heard of a meeting of cowboys who contemplated going into motion picture work. Tom joined them, and immediately became their leader.

Capellani Signed to Direct Metro Features

Is Third Well-Known Director to Be Engaged by Metro Within Week—First Production Begins Very Shortly

Albert Capellani, Now with Metro

ALBERT CAPELLANI, the French director, has been engaged by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, to produce super-productions with the stars under the Metro banner, it was announced last week. He is the third well-known director to be signed by Metro within a week, the others being Frank Reicher, formerly of Lasky, and William S. Davis, recently of Fox.

Capellani was trained as a director in the old Pathe Company of Paris, a pioneer in the art. He was with this concern twelve years, or practically during the entire development of the motion picture, from the days of the three-hundred-foot comedies to the ten-reel spectacle.

He came to America about two years ago, after serving the first year of the war as an officer in the French army. He was relieved from duty through illness contracted at the battle of Soissons, and as war conditions made it impossible for him to continue his profession in France, he brought his family to America.

It was not long before Albert Capellani won recognition in this country as a master of screencraft. His French production of Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" was acknowledged to be one of the greatest motion picture masterpieces. As director for Clara Kimball Young, he produced "The Common Law" for Selznick-Pictures; "Camille," "Trilby," and others for World-Pictures.

This director is very popular with the players. His manner in the studio is one of infinite congeniality and patient courtesy. Never has he been known to raise his voice in anger against one of the players, and yet the results he has obtained speak for themselves as examples of the photo-dramatic art. With facilities for producing big features at his disposal, together with the most talented stars, Mr. Capellani feels that his affiliation with Metro Pictures Corporation will result in the making of the greatest pictures of his already notable career.

Director Capellani is now resting for two weeks at Atlantic City. On his return he will commence his first Metro picture with a star who is to be announced shortly by Maxwell Karger, supervisor of productions.

Brenon Recruits Large Cast for New Feature

Herbert Brenon announced last week from his offices that the characters for his new production, "Empty Pockets," from the novel of Rupert Hughes, are being gathered together from the ranks of the Jewish actors and actresses from the East Side as well as from among the stars who shine brightest on Broadway.

Bert Lytell, as already announced, and who made his screen debut in "The Lone Wolf," will appear in "Empty Pockets," and Barbara Castleton will have the role of Muriel Schuyler. Mr. Brenon has now added to his list Ketty Galanta as Maryla, Malcolm Williams as Perry Merrithew, Susan Willia as Red Ida, Henry Leone as Angelo Angelilla, Ben Grahma, Thorton Baston, Frank Nelson, Joseph Chailles, Germaine Bourville, Inex Shannon, Peggy Betts, Mr. Ackman, Mr. Rothstein, Nathan Marcus, Ethel Kaufman, Peggy Shaw, Mrs. Mandel and Mrs. Rosen.

Mr. Brenon, recovering from an operation for appendicitis, intends to resume his work within the next few days.

Triangle Adds G. P. Hamilton as Director

G. P. Hamilton, stage and screen veteran, with over a score of years' experience as performer, producer and director, has been engaged by the Triangle Film Corporation as a director, and has been added to the Culver City studios. At one time Hamilton was general manager of the St. Louis Motion Picture Company, prior to which he was production manager of the American Film Company and superintendent of the Essanay studios and factories in Chicago. He also served five years with Biograph in New York and Los Angeles.

According to latest announcements, Hamilton's star and company have not been selected, but it is said he plans to begin work on his first Triangle picture in the near future.

Goldwyn Fires First Gun in Big Advertising Campaign

Is the Aim of Officials to Introduce Goldwyn Pictures to All American People in Line with Policy to Back Up Exhibitors—Six Stars to Be Further Popularized

GOLDWYN Pictures, now securely launched throughout the country, is beginning a new march of progress with the advent of winter, and indications are that before intended activities are called to a halt Goldwyn productions and stars will be known from coast to coast, not alone in so far as exhibitors are concerned but among motion-picture fans no matter what section they may chance to be.

In order to bring this about Goldwyn has decided to launch a great advertising campaign to back up exhibitors everywhere who are playing, or are about to play, the Goldwyn productions. The first step in the campaign will be to place the Goldwyn message, which is intended to reach the majority of the reading public, in the Saturday Evening Post, beginning October 13.

Goldfish Indorses Step

Despite the fact that by the contracts and responses of the public Goldwyn has already proved the tremendous drawing power of its distinctive stars and the splendid productions thus far announced, Samuel Goldfish felt that there was still one big step to be taken to focus the attention of the nation's population on the theatres in which these productions will be seen in all communities. The Saturday Evening Post campaign is therefore the direct development and outcome of this feeling.

This campaign is said to be but the beginning of a vast plan of introduction and further popularization of the six stars thus far announced under the Goldwyn imprint —Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy, Mary Garden, Jane Cowl, Mabel Normand and Maxine Elliott, with other stars of equal importance to come.

Campaign Is Also Advertised

To unify this campaign and not only take in the theatre-patronizing public but the exhibitors in every town and village where there is a picture theatre, Goldwyn advertises its Saturday Evening Post advertising in the motion picture trade journals. This campaign covers an extended period of time, the second of its announcements appearing on October 27.

In conceiving and carrying out a national campaign Goldwyn follows the sane and careful policy which has marked the career of the company from the beginning, with emphasis laid on the fact that this advertising was not undertaken or promised in advance to encourage exhibitors to book the Goldwyn productions, but is carried out at great cost after exhibitors have signed as evidence of the company's intention of adding to the appeal and drawing power of its productions.

Selling Mainly to Public

In explaining the campaign Samuel Goldfish, president of the Goldwyn organizations, said: "Goldwyn has been very careful and reticent about this campaign in advance of its actual appearance in print. We have not wanted to create the impression that we were selling our pictures to exhibitors as the result of an advertising campaign. We have already sold our pictures to the exhibitors on their intrinsic merits; because of the strength of our stars and our stories and the elements which have been incorporated into the pictures.

"Already as a result of a year's effort we have made these productions known and appreciated by the American public. What we are now doing by this campaign is to tell the American public that Goldwyn pictures actually on view in theatres everywhere give proof of the superiorities of Goldwyn production."

Six Vita Companies Start Work During Week

Completion of These Productions Will Fill Vitagraph Release List to Middle of February—Several New Players Added

SIX companies, each headed by one or more well known stars, were started on new productions last week by Albert E. Smith, president of the Greater Vitagraph Company, who announces that the completion of these pictures will fill the Vitagraph release list to about the middle of February.

By the addition of a number of well-known players to the Vitagraph lists, Mr. Smith has brought Vitagraph up to a point in production better than it has known in many months. He also is sticking firmly to his "best authors" policy, as demonstrated by the fact that four out of ths six authors represented in the list of plays on work just begun are world known writers. They include F. Phillips Oppenheim, Earl Derr Biggers, Robert W. Chambers and Cyrus Townsend Brady.

Earle Williams, directed by Paul Scardon, was chosen for the stellar role in "The Hillman," the first story by E. Phillips Oppenheim to be put into production by Vitagraph. Mr. Williams is supported in the play by Miriam Miles, Grace Darmond, Denton Vane, Julio Swayne Gordon, Templar Saxe and Robert Gaillard.

Harry Morey, who recently returned from a month's vacation, is playing the leading role in "His Own People," written by William Addison Lathrop and directed by William P. S. Earle.

Alice Joyce, whose last picture was "The Fettered Woman," an adaptation from the Robert W. Chambers novel, "Anne's Bridge" is to be seen in another Chambers story, "Between Friends." Marc MacDermott will be co-starred with her, it being the plan of Mr. Smith to make a combination of these two stars for a series of productions.

Tom Terris is directing them in this feature, which is said to be one of the most powerful stories Mr. Chambers ever has written.

Corinne Griffith, Evart Overton and Ned Finley are to appear in "Heredity," a novel by Rex Taylor. John Robertson, who has directed some of the season's most successful photoplays, is in charge of the production. Edward Earle, Betty Howe and Eulalie Jensen are being directed by Wesley Ruggles in "The Agony Column," the story by Earl Derr Biggers. In obtaining the rights to "The Agony Column," Mr. Smith feels that he caught the legitimate stage producers napping. It is said that certain managers sit up late into the night watching stage material and get to it first. In this instance it would appear that the Vitagraph chief sat up later than the others.

Edward Earle and Betty Howe will be remembered for their work in "For France," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature which has proved one of the popular program releases of the fall season.

Mildred Manning, Wallace MacDonald and "Daddy" Charles Kent are the principal players in "An Investment in Petticoats," a story by Cyrus Townsend Brady, which is being produced under the direction of Ashley Miller. This is Mr. Miller's third picture with Vitagraph, he having produced "The princess of Park Row" and "Next Door to Nancy" in both of which Miss Manning and Mr. MacDonald were featured.

Wallace Reid Scheduled in November Paramount

Baring German intrigue in America, portraying Hun plots to injure this country and its Allies, "The Thing We Love," which will be released in November by Paramount, with Wallace Reid as the star, supported by a splendid cast, should be a timely picture, besides possessing much promised merit and innumerable thrilling scenes and situations.

Wallace Reid has started work on "Nan of Music Mountain," from Frank Spearman's novel, and Ann Little has arrived on the West coast to support the start in this production. George Melford is director. Following the completion of the picture, Mr. Reid will come East to work in "The Source" with its locale in the Maine Woods.

For "The Thing We Love," which will be the next Wallace Reid picture released by Paramount, the start has the role of a red-blooded young American, who, with the aid of his sweetheart is able to frustrate a vile plot to wreck a great munition plant. The scenario was founded upon a story by H. B. and M. G. Daniel, and the picture was directed by Lou-Tellegen. Harvey Thew wrote the scenario. He is responsible for a number of successful Paramount productions, including "The Big Sister," "The Kiss" and "The Years of the Locust."

Light Studio Number Three at Universal City

Work has been begun upon the construction of another electric light studio at Universal City. When this building is completed there will be three similar studios at the film capital.

Unlike the others the new structure will be built entirely of wood, and there will be 125,000 feet of lumber in the building. Its hundred-foot trusses have been designed to carry heavy loads and experiments made with them indicate that automobiles can be suspended from the trusses without their weight affecting them in the least. The new electric light studio will be one hundred feet wide and three hundred feet long, just one hundred feet shorter than the largest studio where the directors work at night and in inclement weather.

Two New Paramount Subjects for George Beban

A definite selection of the two additional productions in which George Beban will appear for Paramount has been made. Of these the first is "The Land of the Free," based upon a dramatic playlet written by William C. De Mille and presented with remarkable success in New York several seasons ago. For the second production the story of the Canadian Northwest, "Jules of the Strong Heart," has been chosen.

"The Land of the Free" is one of those humanly touching episodes that in real life frequency befall immigrants arriving on the shores of America. The true pathos of the honest-hearted Italian laborer who finds it impossible to bring his little family into the land of the free because of his economic shortcomings will be faithfully portrayed by Mr. Beban.

"Jules of the Strong Heart" while entirely different in character is also said to be admirably suited to the actor's peculiar talents.

Powerful supporting casts have been chosen for each of the new productions and Mr. Beban is now at work in the studios at Hollywood. Further announcements of the personnel of the casts and the release dates of the two new subjects are expected shortly.

"From Bad to Worse" Produced by Jaxon Films

In the fourth series of six one-reel comedies produced by the Jaxon Film Corporation for distribution by General Film Company, the first subject is "From Bad to Worse." Pokes and Jabs have just been released from prison. The former determines to stick to the straight and narrow path and starts a hunt for a wife in order that he may meet the qualifications for a job which he sees advertised. Jabs returns to his pals and they frame up another big job, which happens to be the robbing of the warden's home. From there on they are visited by a long series of amusing disas-

Pathe Studio Facilities Greatly Enlarged

Increase Caused by Greater Production Necessitated by Pathe Plays, Commanding Big Resources—Three New Plants Taken Over

THE big increase in production of Pathe features necessitated by the announcement of Pathe Plays, commanding the enormous resources of the company, means an enlargement of studio facilities, which makes Pathe one of the biggest producers of high class pictures.

In addition to the four studios used by the Astra Film Corporation in Jersey City and Fort Lee, and the Rolin Studio in Los Angeles, three new production plants have been taken over in whole or in part for the making of Pathe pictures. They are the former Sanger Studio, 134th street and Park avenue, New York, the Norma Talmadge Studio in 48th street, New York, and the Kalem Studio in Los Angeles.

Coupled with the factories at Jersey City and Bound Brook this makes Pathe a producer on a scale that shows the strength of an organization built on solid rock, and backed by unlimited capital in its desire to give exhibitors quality and drawing power without "breaking their backs" in so doing.

Owing to the reception accorded to the first of the series of Pathe Plays, Mrs. Vernon Castle in "Stranded in Arcady," to be released October 14, particular interest attaches to the statement made by J. A. Berst, that this box-office star has been accorded the distinction of having another of her pictures chosen as the second of the Pathe Plays. This is a five-reel feature produced by Astra, under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, and it marks Antonio Moreno's first appearance opposite Mrs. Castle.

It is further stated that the other new stars already signed for Pathe Plays, Fannie Warde, Frank Keenan, Bessie Love and Bryant Washburn, are making final arrangements to begin work at Pathe studios each surrounded by a producing organization equal in every way to the splendid one gathered for the making of Mrs. Castle's picture. The second of these, "The Mark of Cain," characterized as one of the best pictures of its kind ever produced, is scheduled for release November 4. It is adapted from Carolyn Wells' novel and has this thrilling situation: The man whom Mrs. Castle loves is arrested for murder. The counsel for the defense is an influential lawyer named in the murdered man's will as the one whom the young girl should marry. The heroine is determined to prove the innocence of the hero and an amazing twist at the end is developed in thrilling scenes, showing a Coroner's inquest, when it is discovered that the lawyer was the murderer.

In addition to Mrs. Castle and Antonio Moreno, the cast of "The Mark of Cain," described as a murder mystery story of thrills and fast action, by George Fitzmaurice, includes John Sainpolis as the heavy and J. H. Gilmour in an important role.

Three Authors Added to Universal Forces

During the past fortnight Universal has added three authors of considerable note to the scenario department on the coast. They are Charles Kenyon, J. Edward Hungerford, and Leslie T. Peacocke.

Charles Kenyon, who has recently completed several photoplays of note for Paramount, is the author of "Kindling," the play in which Margaret Illington created a furor on Broadway some seasons ago.

For the past ten years J. Edward Hungerford has been one of the best known magazine writers in the country, and has also had books published and feature photoplays produced during that time.

Captain Leslie T. Peacocke is already well known to Universal patrons, having been connected with the organization twice in the past. He is probably best known as the author of "Neptune's Daughter," the first great Annette Kellermann spectacle.

Laemmle's Cartoon Plan Meets With Approval

Telegrams from Leaders in Film Industry, Governors of States, Senators and Others Show Wide Interest in Universal News Novelty

CARL LAEMMLE'S plan of co-operation with fifty newspapers, recently announced, whereby the three best cartoons published each week in the dailies concerned will be recreated on the screens of the theatres using Universal service as a feature of Current Events, is evidently arousing the interest of notable personages, according to developments during the past week. Already the plan seems to have taken such a hold that it is likely it will become one of the news novelties of the year, and the resulting publicity and patronage will undoubtedly make the arrangement a practical success.

Within the past week Mr. Laemmle has received several telegrams commending his plan, causing him to declare that no other recent move on the part of Universal, excepting the sending of the million signatures letter of cheer to Pershing in France by Bluebird, has aroused the same interest on the part of men high in public esteem.

Among the telegrams received by Mr. Laemmle are the following: "Note with interest your article on cartoons on screens. This is an excellent move and I congratulate you on its consummation, Rothapfel."

"Accept my congratulations on your new step in screen progress. William A. Brady."

"Ideas are the moving force of the world. Their quiet dissemination by means of the press and the screen co-operating is something worthy of praise, so best wishes for success of plan. Henry W. Keyes, Governor of New Hampshire."

"The press is now the tribune of the people. You are making the screen the tribune of the press. Henry L. Myers, United States Senator.'

"Carl Laemmle, president Universal Film Mfg. Co. Together the newspaper press and the motion picture screen can bring to bear an influence for good that is incalculable. James D. Phelan, United States Senator."

"The current thought of the hour is pithily expressed by the newspaper cartoon and in showing the best ones on the screen you have blazed a new trail. John K. Shields, United States Senator."

"Congratulations, linking press and screen will link North and South, East and West. Emerson C. Harrington, Governor of Maryland."

"To consider every public question from every point of view by means of screening newspaper cartoons is an idea of such magnitude as to challenge the interest of all. Congratulations. Reed Smoot, United States Senator."

"Interest of all thinking men challenged by the plan to publish on the screens before literally millions the newspaper cartoons that have proved effective. May I wish success and extend my warmest felicitations. Champ Clark, Speaker of the House."

"The screen has borrowed most powerful weapon of the press. I know you will wield it effectively. Chas. Curtis, United States Senator."

"The newspaper cartoon and the motion picture screen are two of the most powerful engines in our day in generating and influencing public opinion. Congratulations on joining them. Ed. S. Johnson, United United States Senator."

Williams Reappointed in Ohio

William R. Williams has been reappointed by Governor James M. Cox, of Ohio, as a member of the Ohio Board of Censorship, in Columbus. The other members are Mrs. Maude Murray Miller and Charles Williams. The members of the same name are not related.

Cast Strong Point in Goldwyn's "Auction Block"

Goldwyn is making the cast for "The Auction Block," a picturization of Rex Beach's novel which is shortly to be released, an unusually strong one that the players may be rated in a class with the story. Both the story and players have been pronounced by Goldwyn as among the best, and a typical Goldwyn production is expected.

First and foremost is Rubye De Remer, who plays the role of Lorelei Knight, the country girl whose parents put her on the auction block, for sale to the highest bidder. Miss De Remer is virtually a newcomer in motion pictures.

Another important feminine role is in the hands of Florence Deshon, David Belasco's production of "Seven Chances." Miss Deshon is new to the movies.

Tom Powers, who plays Mr. Beach's juvenile hero, Bob Wharton, appeared in "Mr. Lazarus" and "Mile-a-Minute-Kendall." He was in the first Vitagraph company to be sent to the coast when that concern made its first pictures in Los Angeles.

The role of John Merkle is played by Alec Francis, and other players are Florence Johns, Dorothy Wheeler, Walter Hitchcock, Ned Burton, Charles Graham, George Cooper, Francis Joyner, Bernard Randall and Peter Lang.

Bluebird Star-Cycle to Be Widely Advertised

Managing Director Carl Laemmle, of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., has arranged for a campaign of billboard advertising to announce Bluebird's "Star-Cycle" in every State in the Union. The towns have all been scheduled, the contract let and between October 15 and November 1, the work of "posting" more than 500 cities will be carried on.

William de Leftwich Dodge has designed a dignified and at the same time ornate combination of art and portraiture to attract the passerby and make familiar the features of Mae Murray, Ruth Clifford, Dorothy Phillips, Carmel Myers, Violet Mersereau and Franklyn Farnum, who constitute the membership of Bluebird's "Star-Cycle."

The six facial representations will hang in as many medallions, within a border of effective coloring, with very little typematter to detract from the emphasis that is intended to apply to the individual pictures. In this way Bluebird believes that co-operation with the exhibitors will be effectively obtained, and to that end the selection of cities has been carefully made.

Julia Sanderson in Another Empire Feature

The Empire All-Star Corporation has announced that Julia Sanderson is to appear in another picture for them. The new play selected for her is shrouded in much mystery, and the title has not yet been announced, the director unnamed and the leading man not yet selected. All that is certain concerning the production is the announcement that Miss Sanderson will star in it, and that the release date is November 12.

Quintuple Exposure in William Fox Film

Those who have studied photography or have gone into it seriously can appreciate the significance of the announcement that in "Conscience," Gladys Brockwell's new William Fox production, there is one scene which required quintuple exposure.

Because of the difficulties to be surmounted, even triple exposure, is exceedingly rare in motion pictures. This is probably the first time that as many as five different exposures were made for a single scene. The scene in point shows Miss Brockwell herself in the Court of Conscience surrounded by Avarice, Lust, Ambition and Vanity, each of whom she impersonates. Credit for the achievement goes to Bertram Bracken, the director, and Charles Kaufman, the cameraman.

Japanese Consul Calls on Marguerite Clark

The Hon. Masanao Hanihara, Consul-General of Japan, stationed at San Francisco, Cal., paid his respects to Marguerite Clark, the Paramount star, while she was in the midst of a scene for the third "Bab" picture, at the studio on Fifty-sixth street, during the recent visit of the Japanese Commission to New York.

Mr. Hanihara was here with the Japanese Commission, but found time to renew an acquaintance with Miss Clark which began in Washington, D. C., several years ago, when the little lady was on the legitimate stage.

Commonwealth Chooses Story for Charlotte

The Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, whose engagement of Charlotte, the ice skater, to star in motion pictures was announced in the last issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, has selected the screen drama in which the widely-known artist of the ice will appear. It is from the pen of Bob Lee, the critic, writer and playwright. Production work was begun on the picture simultaneously with the selection of the story, and is said now to be well under way. Exciting scenes in time of war are promised, with spies and aliens forming the villain side of the story.

Jack Meredith has been engaged for the role of the young inventor. Charlotte will appear as the young woman who thwarts the machinations of the spies. Oscar W. Eagle, formerly with Liebler and Company and David Belasco, is the producer, having as his assistant Cortlandt J. Van Deusen. The picture is to be released in October.

Clarine Seymour Signed for Toto Comedies

Clarine Seymour has been placed under contract for Pathe's Toto comedies, it was announced last week. She has already started work in these pictures in leading roles, and Direcetor General Hal. E. Roach is confident she will become popular to a marked degree.

The "Toto" comedies will be so important on the Pathe program of the near future that much attention was paid to the question as to who should be the leading woman.

American Promises New Line of Comedy-Drama

President Samuel S. Hutchinson Has New and Extensive Plans for Margarita Fischer—Greatly Pleased with Scenarios Selected

AN entirely new line of comedy-drama in film production is planned and promised by the American Film Company, with whom Margarita Fischer recently resigned a contract for the express purpose for the coming year. President Samuel S. Hutchinson has expressed himself as highly pleased with the scenarios selected for the star, and anticipated great results.

"Miss Fischer is considered one of the best comedy-drama artistes in the screen world, in her line," said Mr. Hutchinson. "She has won a remarkable popularity and standing and we regard her as one of the best of the established screen stars. She began work for the American Film Company on September 10, on a scenario written especially for her, called "A Daughter of Joan." It is something new in film literature, being a comedy with a melodramatic punch.

"We feel that this picture will give her full scope for her distinctive ability and we are sparing no expense in the production. It keeps away pretty well from any straight war mention, tragedy of any variety, heavy themes or propaganda. The American Film Company will adhere strictly to its present policy of producing only screen dramas of exceptional character and cheerful atmosphere. Miss Fischer, therefore, will star in pictures that are delightful in unexpected plot, with plenty of stirring atmosphere and wholesome fun and punch.

"Our studio plans for the Winter will tend to keep each star definitely within a certain orbit—the distinctive lines in which has already won marked success and popularity. This will in no way limit them to any accusation of a sameness of subject of treatment. Our staff of writers now include only those trained in the task of writing and selecting stories of varied interests, which will enable each star to specialize without becoming monotonous."

Denver Child Appears in Metro Barrymore Feature

Little Maxine Elliott Hicks has been engaged to play the part of "Felicia," the victim of child labor conditions, in Ethel Barrymore's forthcoming Metro picture, an adaptation of Sidney McCall's novel, "Red Horse Hill," which is being directed by Frank Reicher. The young player is said to be a great favorite of Judge Ben Lindsey, of the Juvenile Court of Denver, Colorado, the widely known champion of working children.

In the forthcoming Metro production, Maxine plays an exacting child role, which gives her fine opportunities for the exhibition of her talent.

Heyes and Benham Appear with Emmy Wehlen

Two prominent leading men, Herbert Heyes and Harry Benham, will appear in the support of Emmy Wehlen, the Metro star, in her forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "The Outsider." "The Outsider" is a screen version of Louis Joseph Vance's novel, "Nobody," which has been adapted for Miss Wehlen's use by Charles A. Taylor. William C. Dowlan is directing "The Outsider," assisted by Benjamin S. Kutler.

Laemmle Takes Charge of Bluebird Photoplays

Will Not Alone Continue to Supervise Productions, but Will See to Distributing, Advertising and General Forwarding of Interests

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., who has always personally supervised the production end of the Bluebird program, makes the announcement, through Bluebird's press department, that he will in the future have active charge of all Bluebird departments. As managing director, Mr. Laemmle will not alone continue his supervision of productions at Universal City, but will be active in the distribution, advertising and general forwarding of Bluebird interests. Heretofore his other film interests have prevented his more active participation in Bluebird affairs, but from now onward he will serve actively in forwarding the program.

The increased activities in Bluebird affairs, which Mr. Laemmle now assumes, will involve his full participation in the most important advances the series has made since its establishment; marking a broadening of policy that has for some time been contemplated, and the introduction of innovations still to be announced. Every matter of policy, distribution, production and advertising, in all essential details, will, in future, have the managing director's experienced and personal attention.

"Bluebirds of the past have fulfilled our every expectation," says Mr. Laemmle in this authorized announcement. "It is to Bluebirds of the future that I will now devote myself in an active and personal manner. My interests in Bluebird have been controlling from the outset, but the multiplicity of kindred assets have kept me so well occupied that I could not apply myself to anything apart from the details of Bluebird productions. The preparation of our attractions for the screen has always been under my supervision, but I am now assuming additional charge of every other detail of Bluebird affairs. The arrangements I have perfected for the forwarding of my other moving picture interests gives me the opportunity I have eagerly sought—to closely devote myself to Bluebird's every department.

"The new theatrical season is under way, our maturing plans are fast adjusting themselves and this seems to be the very time for me to act upon the earnest promptings of our stock-holders and become managing director of Bluebird's interests. Of first importance to exhibitors and the general supporting public that has made Bluebird an abundantly successful program will be the announcement of Bluebird's "Star-Cycle," in which six talented players will star at the head of selected organizations arriving in stipulated succession.

Mr. Laemmle continues: "Simultaneously Bluebird enlarges its original scope to encompass not alone the dogma, 'The Play's the Thing,' but goes further to enlist a star in every production. That we may fully exploit our attractions to the mutual advantage of Bluebird and the exhibitor there will be inaugurated on October 15 a campaign of national advertising that will employ billposting in all of the more prominent cities in every State from coast to coast. The schedule for this advertising has been prepared; the contract for posting has been awarded in every town on the list and there will be Bluebirds flying in climates and localities where the bird of happiness has never previously been a-wing during similar seasons.

"Of Bluebird's six stars, four of them have been developed within the program during the past twenty months. Two of them are actresses of prominence, one of them having gained renown as a star of other feature offerings before joining Bluebird's flock. Dorothy Phillips, Violet Mersereau, Ruth Clifford and Franklyn Farnum are names that have long been familiar to and agreeably associated with Blubird's past productions. Carmel Myers becomes a Bluebird star after an unusually brilliant but brief screen career, while Mae Murray brings to Bluebird with her association as our star a great following of enthusiastically loyal theatregoers who have admired her artistry by reason of her previous achievements as a star on both stage and screen."

Minus Slap-stick Make-up, This is Alice Howell, Starring in Uproarious Century Comedies

Donna Drew Has Star Role in Butterfly Play

Donna Drew is the star of "'49-'17," the Butterfly picture scheduled for release October 15. This is a film version of William Wallace Cook's novel, "The Old West Per Contract," which attracted so much attention when it appeared in the Argosy Magazine some time ago. Ruth Ann Baldwin wrote the scenario and directed the production, which is noteworthy for its vigor and straight-from-the-shoulder action, and represents the high-water mark of her achievement for the Butterfly program.

Invited Guests See Barriscale-Paralta Film

A capacity audience filled Æolian Hall Monday evening of last week as the guests of Carl Anderson, president, and the Paralta organization, to witness a special projection of Bessie Barriscale's second play, "Madam Who."

Prior to the run of this new play, two reels were exhibited, showing scenes in and about the Paralta Studios at Hollywood, Cal. This picture proved a great novelty to this audience, as probably not ten of those present had any idea of what a motion picture production plant looks like.

"Reaching for the Moon" Is New Fairbanks Film

Walter E. Greene, president of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, last week announced that the title of the new Douglas Fairbanks picture will be "Reaching for the Moon," and that work on this photoplay is now well under way in California at the Lasky Studio. In fact, it was for this production that the entire Fairbanks producing organization crossed the continent recently in order to get New York scenes. After two days here the entire organization again returned to California to produce the balance of the picture.

Eugene Ormonde, well known for his recent work in Famous Players pictures, arrived in Los Angeles shortly after the return of the Fairbanks troupe, to join this company. Mr. Ormonde started work immediately in "Reaching for the Moon."

Ingraham to Direct Fischer

Lloyd Ingraham will direct Margarita Fischer, newly acquired screen star for the American Film Company. Mr. Ingraham has recently completed a series of three productions, featuring Mary Miles Minter, who will be directed now by Henry King.

Miss Fischer will first be presented as an American screen star, in a timely five-reel feature dealing with modern questions, and called "A Daughter of Joan." It is a comedy drama and was written by Beatrice Van der Pluym and William Parker, and adapted for the screen by Chester B. Clapp. Jack Mower will continue as her leading man.

Elsie Ferguson's Second Artcraft Nearly Ready

The production of Elsie Ferguson's second Artcraft picture, "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," is nearing completion at the Famous Players' Fort Lee Studio. The photoplay is an adaptation by Charles Maigne from the book by Mary S. Watts and presents Miss Ferguson in the role of a street waif of the New York slums.

Staged under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, who also produced Miss Ferguson's initial cinema, "Barbary Sheep," the new photoplay is expected to achieve greater success among film patrons than even the Robert Hichens subject, due to the increased knowledge of the art the star has gained since her work in her first production. "The Rise of Jennie Cushing" will be released by Artcraft the middle of next month.

Yorke Gets Waters as Assistant Director

John Waters has been engaged by Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke Film Corporation, as his assistant director for Harold Lockwood's next Metro feature, "Love Me for Myself Alone," as well as for productions which will follow it.

For the past year Mr. Waters has been associated with "Doc" Willat of Technicolor, and previous to that was assistant director to Wray Physioc at the Biograph, in the production of two and three-reel features. He has also been identified with Reliance, Rex and other companies, both in the East and West.

Olga Grey Again with Triangle

Olga Grey, once a Triangle siren, is back on the Triangle lot, anxious to win new laurels in a field where she has already attracted considerable attention. She has been cast for the role of the adventuress in Director Raymond Wells's new story, "Fanatics." William V. Mong, who recently took a leave of absence from the Triangle playing forces to direct "Wild Sumac," also has an important role in this play.

Harry O. Hoyt Moves

In an announcement last week, Harry O. Hoyt informed film circles that he is now located in new quarters, having moved October 1. The new offices are at 127 West Fortieth street.

Oil Wells Gush in Charles Ray's Second Paramount

CHARLES RAY'S second Paramount picture, "His Mother's Boy," which follows "His Father's Son," released October 22, will have a splendid background and all necessary adjuncts to make the settings and atmosphere for the feature among the best, while at the same time the most natural, he has yet had. Immense oil producing properties, with the wells in operation, will be filmed by the cameraman.

The Ince star, in the second production, which is a picturization of Rupert Hughes' story, "When Life is Marked Down," the screen version having been written by Ella Stuart Carson, has the role of a youth who has been raised with more than ordinary care and is finally put on his mettle, when he proves that he is a real man after all.

Victor L. Schertzinger is the director, and has devoted much time to obtaining the real atmosphere for the oil field scenes, which form a large part of the actual story. The magnitude of the fields, the immense derricks, and all the workings of the great industry are pictured.

In the supporting cast chosen for Mr. Ray in this picture will appear Doris Lee, a new leading woman of the Ince forces.

"The Son of His Father," first of the Ray pictures produced by Thomas H. Ince for Paramount, is said to set a new mark in the work of this young star. He appears as a youth, who is given six months in which to make a hundred thousand dollars from five thousand, or else be placed in almost a menial position in his father's railroad organization. How he makes good and proves that he is made of the same stern stuff as his dad, forms the story. Viola Vale supports Mr. Ray in this picture, which was filmed from the story by Ridgwell Cullum.

Select Makes Rapid Progress in Two Months

Its Exchanges, in Nineteen Cities, Will Distribute All Clara Kimball Young Subjects Made by Actress's Own Company

ALTHOUGH Select Pictures Corporation has been in operation for less than two months considerable progress has been made by President Lewis J. Selznick and General Manager Arthur S. Kane in establishing the new organization.

Having taken over the home offices of the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises in New York City, the company has already fully equipped branches in operation in nineteen cities of the United States, embracing the various centers of distribution for the motion picture industry. Exchange managers have been appointed to each of these branches, as well as a sales manager and a special representative, with headquarters in New York.

Contracts have been signed calling for the distribution of the pictures made by Clara Kimball Young and her own company, the Norma Talmadge pictures presented by Joseph M. Schenck, the Constance Talmadge pictures presented by Lewis J. Selznick, and Alice Brady, a recently signed Select star, in productions to be presented by the Select company itself.

The first of Miss Young's pictures is "Magda," from the famous drama of the same name. In this production Clara Kimball Young was directed by Emile Chautard. The picture is completed, and distribution of the picture started. Miss Young's second picture, "Shirley Kaye," is well under way.

The first of the Norma Talmadge pictures, "The Moth," was released a week ago. Miss Talmadge has also finished her second picture, "The Secret of the Storm Country," which is a screen version of Grace Millar White's memorable story.

Constance Talmadge has also finished her first Select picture, a screen presentation of Cosmo Hamilton's novel, "Scandal," which has been running serially in the Green Book magazine.

Alice Brady's first Select picture has just been started at the Paragon Studio, in Fort Lee. It is "Her Silent Sacrifice," picturized from the play "The Red Mouse," by Henry J. W. Dam, which had a successful Broadway run a few years ago. Miss Brady is being directed by Edward Jose.

It has been arranged that each of these four stars will produce a series of eight productions during the coming twelve months, and all of these Star Series pictures will be distributed by Select.

"A Bedroom Blunder" is the Somewhat Puzzling Title of a Paramount-Sennett Comedy in Which Mary Thurman is Seen

In addition, Select Pictures has arranged to distribute a number of single productions. These include "The Wild Girl," the first picture to be made by vaudeville's famous star, Eva Tanguay, which will be released during the next few weeks; the stupendous film drama "Lest We Forget," built around the sinking of the Lusitania, and other international episodes, which will present Rita Jolivet as the star and which will be released during November; and the drama of food control and price regulation, "The Public Be Damned," now being shown.

Among the nationally known exhibitors and theatres which have been provided with the pictures of all Select stars for the coming year under these contracts are the following:

New York and vicinity, Marcus Loew chain of theatres; Philadelphia, Stanley V. Mastbaum's Stanley theatre; Boston, Marcus Loew's Orpheum, St. James and Columbia theatres; Chicago, Sig Faller's Bijou Dream theatre, on State street, opposite the Palmer House; H. C. Petrova Takes Scenes at Glen Cove, L. I.

Madame Olga Petrova and the cast of the first picture now being made by the Petrova Picture Company have been spending the greater part of this week taking many exteriors on the estate of Mrs. George Pratt at Glen Cove, Long Island. Several of the scenes of this scenario, which was written by Mme. Petrova herself, the continuity being by Mrs. Emma B. Clifton, are laid in the Kingdom of Belmark, where the love scenes between the Crown Prince (Thomas Holding) and the American girl, who later becomes his morgantic wife (Petrova), takes place in the Royal Gardens.

Abramson Film Advocates Permanent Peace

Ivan Abramson's "Sins of Ambition" steps forth with the solution which probably will be worth while trying as a preventative of war after the present one is over.

While "Sins of Ambition" is nowise a military or diplomatic intrigue play, certain features of the play written and directed by Ivan Abramson touch on international situations. The body of the story is an intense drama seeking to show that that which would solve family trouble would solve the troubles of a city, state, nation, yea, the world, bearing out the established fact that the family is but a unit of the nation. This is as much as thus far has been given out concerning the play, which judging from the words of an official of the Ivan Film Company will be one of the big productions of the year.

Alice Mann to Play Opposite King Baggott in Comedy

Alice Mann, who for the past season has been playing opposite Roscoe Arbuckle as his leading comedienne, has left the comedian's company to join the Universal forces in the East.

Miss Mann will play opposite King Baggott, who has recently joined the Universal company, and will work in a series of one-reel comedies, to be produced at the Fort Lee studios under the direction of Frank Griffin. The first production will be commenced this week.

The little comedienne has been seen, to advantage, in some of the best Arbuckle comedies to be produced since he joined the Paramount forces. Arbuckle has recently gone to the Coast for the winter season and Miss Mann did not think it advisable to leave the East. With Mr. Baggott and Miss Mann working in comedies, the public should be presented with some A-1 one-reel "fun-makers."

Nazimova and Company Go to New Orleans

Madame Nazimova, who recently contracted with Metro to appear in Super-productions, has gathered her company together and departed with them, via special train, for the Sunny South, with New Orleans as the destination. There the exteriors of her initial Metro picture, an adaptation of Mabel Wagnalls' "A Rose of a Thousand Years," will be filmed.

In the company which will support Mme. Nazimova in this feature are Charles Bryant, leading man; Frank Currier, as the Prior; Bigelow Cooper as De Roche, the heavy; John Sturgeon as Fra Augustin, Albert Hall as Pierre, and Philip Sanford as Mestaire, the inn-keeper. A number of players will be engaged in the southern city for the ensemble scenes.

With Director Baker are Charles J. Hunt, assistant director; Dwight Begeman, Charles Devin, and other assistants. Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Metro studio in New York, under whose personal supervision the production is being made, has sent Edward J. Shulter, Metro's technical director and a large corps of assistants to erect the sets.

Goldwyn Announces Its Second Four Releases

Mae Marsh, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy and Maxine Elliott Are the Stars of the Features — Stories Declared Unusual

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION, fresh from its successes with the initial productions released by that organization, has announced its second four releases for the exhibitors throughout the country. As was the case in the first Goldwyn features, the four that are forthcoming contain the names of well known stars, authors and stories, the first named including Mae Marsh, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy and Maxine Elliott.

The schedule announced for the features are: Mae Marsh in "Sunshine Alley," November 4; Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg," November 18; Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married," December 2, and Maxine Elliott in "The Eternal Magdalene," December 16. The authors of the four are Mary Rider, Porter Emerson Browne, Edgar Selwyn and Robert McLaughlin.

"Sunshine Alley" is said to give Mae Marsh a role unlike anything she has ever had. The role is as plaintive and charming as her most recent role of Polly in "Polly of the Circus." In "Sunshine Alley" Robert Harron, Miss Marsh's team-mate under Griffith, is again her leading man.

"Joan of Plattsburg" is Mabel Normand's first Goldwyn Picture and it brings this comedienne back to the screen after an absence of more than a year. Her picture is a comedy with a patriotic touch, and thousands of soldiers at the Plattsburg, N. Y., camp take an active part in the picture. First announced, a few weeks ago, as "Joan of Flatbush," the title has now been changed at the suggestion of Miss Normand herself. In the cast with Miss Normand are Robert Elliott, Wm. Frederic, Joseph Smiley, John W. Dillion, Isabel Vernon and Louis M. Sturey.

"Nearly Married," bringing Madge Kennedy before the screen public for the second time, is Edgar Selwyn's farce comedy which had run in the Gaiety theatre and was then seen throughout America. This picture is being directed by Chester Withey and Miss Kennedy is supported by Frank Thomas, Mark Smith, Alma Tell, Richard Barthelmess and Hedda Hopper.

"The Eternal Magdalene," from Robert McLaughlin's story gives Miss Elliott a good opportunity to attract the attention of American audiences. The direction of this picture was in the hands of Arthur Hopkins, termed "the socialist of the American theatre." Incidentally, "The Eternal Magdalene" on being viewed by the censors in Pennsylvania and the city of Chicago succeeded in winning their temporary disapproval, through Goldwyn insistently denies all of the points they make against this great morality play of the screen.

Goldwyn has a surprise in store for its ninth release and this unnamed picture is expected to win high favor with both exhibitors and the public.

New Kellermann Film Now Well Under Way

The first part of "Queen of the Sea," William Fox's sub-sea spectacle, has practically been completed at Bar Harbor, Maine. Only a few scenes remain to be filmed, and these Annette Kellermann, star of the picture, will direct personally. The big company which has been at the Maine summer resort for several months working in "Queen of the Sea," has returned to New York City preparatory to screening the second section of the great marine drama.

Montagne and Thompson Finish Another Serial

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, was so pleased with the picturization of "The Fighting Trail" made by Edward J. Montagne and Garfield Thompson, that he immediately assigned these two writers to put in scenario form Vitagraph's newest serial, "Vengeance and the Woman." The script was finished this week in record time, and after being O. K.'d by Mr. Smith was hurried to the West, where William Duncan, director and star of "The Fighting Trail" will produce it.

Triangle Production Moves at Steady Pace

Variety of Themes Keeps Enlarged Directorial Staff Busy on Elaborate Sets—Olive Thomas Production Nearly Completed

WITH nearly a half score of directors at work on new pictures and five waiting to begin early work on new stories, production records at the Triangle Film Corporation's Culver City Studio are threatened with a new high water mark.

Seven new screen dramas were finished last week, including "The Firefly of Tough Luck," "The Stainless Barrier," "Fighting Back," "Doing Her Bit," "The Fuel of Life," "The Guardian of El Dorado" and "Easy Money." Three of these are western dramas.

Director Lynn Reynolds, well known in the picture world for his feats with the camera, is working on "Up or Down?" in which George Hernandez is being featured. Many scenes for the picture were located in the vicinity of Santa Barbara, which boasts of the largest cattle ranches in California.

Rapid progress is being made on Olive Thomas's new picture, "Indiscreet Corinne," which is being directed by Jack Dillon. In this comedy drama Miss Thomas will appear as a pampered young society girl seeking adventure in the guise of a masked cafe dancer who has always regretted her lack of a past.

"Regeneration," E. Mason Hopper's latest creation is heralded as an intense drama of New York life. Alma Ruebens is featured in this picture. Her costumes are said to be a revelation in fashions.

Director Thomas Heffron, who recently completed "The Stainless Barrier," a romance of the South, featuring Irene Hunt, is now directing William Desmond in his newest picture, "Gentility." In this story a young Irish lad, a blacksmith in a little village in old Erin, suddenly finds himself rich through the death of an uncle in America.

"Fanatics," in which J. Barney Sherry will be seen in the leading role, is rapidly taking shape under the direction of Raymond Wells. The apartment of an adventuress, furnished with rare tapestries, Oriental antiques and teak wood masterpieces, will contribute rich atmosphere to this story. The Triangle property room has been stripped of its Oriental antiques and teak wood furniture to give this elaborate set an effect rivaling the storied splendor of a room in Midas's palace.

Director William Gittens and his company, including Monte Blue, master swimmer and horseman, and Claire MacDowell, are at work in the San Diego harbor district on a water picture whose working title is "Everlasting Mercy." In this story of the sea Director Gittens plans some feats of daring in the water, such as a knife fight with a shark, which promise to bring thrills from Triangle patrons.

Directors who will soon begin work on new stories include Cliff Smith, Jack Conway, Walter Edwards, Ferris Hartman and G. P. Hamilton.

Gorgeous Raiment in Tanguay Subject

WHEN Eva Tanguay makes her appearance on the screen in "The Wild Girl"—which Select Pictures will release shortly— picture fans throughout the country will see the vaudeville star in all the costumes which she has worn during her many years of success as a headliner. Included in these are some of the eccentric and beautiful costumes worn when the actress sang "I Don't Care" from sea to sea.

In "The Wild Girl" Eva Tanguay is presented by Harry Weber. The scenario is from the story by George Rosener and the picture was directed by Howard Estabrook. It is a Selznick picture and will be distributed by Select Pictures Corporation.

No pains have been spared to make the little vaudeville queen's first appearance on the screen a notable one, and it was in order that the movie fans could visualize those creations in dress that helped to make Eva Tanguay famous that the costume review was arranged. In it Miss Tanguay is shown in a variety of creations, each of which at one time or another has made her the talk of Broadway. Among them is the famous peacock dress with its headpiece of towering blue-green feathers, the gorgeous pearl costume, scant but lovely, the swagger sailor boy's suit, the jewel gown and the daring tinsel bathing suit.

"The Wild Girl" is the story of a little southern heiress left by her dying father to the care of a band of wandering gypsies. Owing to the immense wealth which she is due to inherit, her childhood is singularly free from restraint, the gypsy chief realizing her inevitable value to him and the tribe. In time, forced to an undesirable marriage, she runs away, and the succeeding events which work out the tangle of her life make a dramatic and consistent story. As Firefly, unlettered, childishly appealing and hoydenish at the same time, Miss Tanguay has been given a role at once congenial and in keeping with her peculiar gifts.

Virginia Pearson Winding Up Her Vacation

Virginia Pearson, the William Fox star, who has been taking a brief vacation away from the camera, will begin in a few days a new production for William Fox, it was announced last week.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Newspapers to Co-operate with Paramount

THROUGH a new department established by Edward A. MacManus, head of Paramount's serial activities, newspaper co-operation with exhibitors, of distinct value in promoting a serial, is assured.

For the "Who Is Number One?" campaign in the newspaper Earl Gulick has been made a special traveling representative, and his specific duties are to tour the United States and make arrangements with newspapers for special service and to see that behind every exhibitor showing "Who Is Number One?" the Paramount serial, is all the strength, all the co-operation of the newspapers running Anna Katherine Green's story and printing Paramount's "Who Is Number One" advertising.

Mr. Gulick recently returned from a trans-continental tour, visiting Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Cleveland, Toledo, Columbus, Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Portland, Spokane, Des Moines, Omaha, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, and other cities. In each he arranged for the publication of the complete Anna Katharine Green story in the newspapers. In many cities he fould that the newspaper had a rule against printing motion picture serial stories. In every instance this rule was broken for Paramount and the newspaper bought the story because it was written by Anna Katharine Green and because the fact that Paramount produced it guaranteed an unusual picture. In every city he visited, Mr. Gulick made special arrangements for exhibitor co-operation, so that theatres showing the Paramount serial will have every possible aid from the newspapers. Mr. Gulick will keep in personal touch with cities throughout the country, concentrating his efforts on helping the exhibitor to get the maximum amount of publicity.

Because of this advertising campaign that Paramount is putting behind "Who Is Number One?" exhibitors throughout the country, Mr. Gulick found, were ready to sign the moment they were handed a contract.

Gladys Varden Comes Near to Breaking Record

Gladys Varden, the L-Ko comedienne, has had during the past five months prominent part in nine of the two-reel features provided by Universal under the production supervision of J. G. Blystone. This, as near as can be ascertained, comes near to constituting a record, and is also said to account for the steady improvement in Miss Varden's handling of characterizations since she joined Blystone's band of fun makers.

Brenon Business Offices Moved to His Studio

It was made known last week that the business offices of Herbert Brenon, which, previous to the director-producer's break with Lewis J. Selznick, had been maintained in the Godfrey Building, have been moved to the Brenon Studio on Hudson Heights, where his staff will be housed.

Universal Releases Promise Drama and Comedy

Gale Henry and William Franey in Burlesque of "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" but One of Many Good Features

UNIVERSAL releases for the week of October 15 are announced as deftly proportioned in the matter of drama and comedy, and that the features for the week will be varied enough to provide entertainment for the whole family and for any taste.

Heading the regular schedule for the week will be "The Taming of Lucy," in which Belle Bennett stars. The picture is a Gold Seal drama, written by Edna Rowell Schley and Giles Warren, and produced by Charles Swickard. It presents the theme of the unwilling bride, married to the alleged caveman, whose reputation for rough virility acts as a bar to happiness. When the big test comes, however, the real man shines through. There are said to be some unusual angles to this touch-and-go drama, which seems guaranteed to give a surprise at the climax. Val Paul, Betty Schade and Morris Foster are prominent in Miss Bennett's support.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran will appear Tuesday, October 16 in a Nestor comedy, entitled "Wild and Woolly Women," written by Fred Palmer and produced by Roy Clements. Edith Roberts takes the featured feminine role. There are some bathing scenes, in which the boys surprise the girls, sans certain sections of the wardrobe, but in the ensuing mix-up, the girls get the drop on the boys and force them to take to the water, thoroughly squelched.

The L-Ko comedy to be released Wednesday, October 17, bears the title, "Vamping Reuben's Millions." It was directed by Dick Smith under the supervision of J. G. Blystone. Bob McKenzie, Eva Novak, Eddie Barry and Catherine Young are the principal funmakers. The 94th issue of the Universal Animated Weekly will be released on the same day.

Gale Henry and William Franey are the stars of the feature for Thursday, October 18, which is declared an uproarious burlesque on "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," entitled "The Cross-Eyed Submarine." The scenario is the work of Jack Cunningham. W. W. Beaudine is responsible for the direction. Lillian Peacock and Milburn Moranti have parts suited to their respective styles of humor, and the many mechanical novelties introduced in the course of "Prince Ducker's" ceaseless quest through the caverns of the deep for his kidnaped daughter are expected to provide much merriment. Dave Morris and Gladys Tennyson will be featured in a Joker comedy known as "The Magic Jass-Bo" released coincidental with "The Cross-Eyed Submarine." Alfred Santell and A. F. Statter are responsible for the direction and authorship of this version of the art of slapstick.

On Friday, October 19, Evelyn Selbie and Harry Griffith will be shown in a Victor comedy of English Cockney life, entitled "When Liz Let Loose," written by E. Magnus Ingleton and picturized and produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin. The 41st number of the Screen Magazine, containing several exclusive features of semi-news interest, will also be shown at the same time.

"The Temple of Terror," a Bison drama featuring Eileen Sedgwick and Fred Church, will be released Saturday, October 20. This is one of a series of short thrillers with wild animals prominent in the action. Gale Henry and William Franey will also be seen in a Joker comedy by R. A. Dillon and W. W. Beaudine, known as "Who Done It?" The mistakes of a jealous husband provide several hearty laughs in this exhilirating farce.

The week will also mark the closing episode of "The Gray Ghost," and the opening episode of "The Red Ace," Universal's new outdoor mystery serial.

O'Brien Directs Olive Tell in "Unforeseen"

Olive Tell will make her first appearance as a star under the direction of John B. O'Brien in "The Unforeseen," written by Robert Marshall, author of "The Second in Command," "The Royal Family," and others.

The picture is to be released October 22 on the Mutual program.

Metro West Coast Studio at Hollywood in Full Swing

B. A. ROLFE, western manager for Metro, who selected Charlie Chaplin's former studio at Hollywood, Cal., in which to make Metro productions, is swinging into his stride under the California sunshine, with the result that production work at the studio is now well under way. Mr. Rolfe selected this studio after studying from every angle production on the West Coast.

The studios comprise five acres of ground, with adjoining land available if required. There is at present one stage, 150 by 70 feet, which is to be enlarged, making it one of the largest stages around Los Angeles. The contract has already been let to make this mammoth stage glass-enclosed.

A spacious scene dock and property room adjoin the stage. Other buildings include a fully equipped carpenter shop, paint shop, and sculptoring department, a modern laboratory, office building, dressing room building, and a building to be devoted exclusively to the directors, their assistants, and the scenario department.

C. W. Thomas, who has been identified with Metro for some time, has been made studio manager. J. E. Newman, who has been associated as technical director with several coast companies, has been engaged in the same capacity at this studio. Daniel Hogan, formerly at the New York studio of Metro, is head of the property department.

Frances Guyhan and H. P. Keeler have joined the scenario department. Miss Guyhan was until recently a member of the Balboa scenario department. Mr. Keeler has been identified with Ince-Triangle productions for the past two years. Both of these writers are at work on stories for Viola Dana and Edith Storey.

C. P. Butler, auditor of the Metro Pictures Corporation, is acting as auditor and purchasing agent at the Hollywood studio. He will remain until he has installed the Metro system in every department, and then will return to the New York offices.

Lee Children Begin New Wm. Fox Feature

Jane and Katherine Lee, the William Fox kiddies, who recently completed a new comedy-drama, have begun work on a new production. Kenean Buel is directing the feature.

Chicago Says Kind Words for Motion Picture Industry

CHICAGO, the second city of the United States, has paused long enough in her daily routine of business and pleasure to take official notice of the motion picture industry as a great and growing business and necessity.

The Chicago Commerce, official bulletin of the Chicago Association of Commerce, remarks in a recent issue: "The Chicagoans must never lose sight of the relations of the film industry to this great industrial city. One of the film magnates living in Chicago is Samuel S. Hutchinson, who believes that in the next five years there will be a gathering of film production and distribution in this city that will thin out the business somewhat which New York now controls, and effect something more like a balance of power. In other words, Chicago in a few years will be the logical point for film distribution.

"Already the American Film Company produces forty-eight features annually. Five companies are employed constantly in the making of pictures. The negatives of these productions and other allied concerns, are shipped into Chicago, where laboratories turn them into positive prints at the rate of 1,500,000 feet per week. Then the complete film is shipped to the four corners of the earth.

"Recently, Richard R. Nehls, manager of this company, signed the largest contract for serial and feature plates for Russia, Norway, Sweden and Denmark, ever entered into. The agreement calls for the export of 60,000 feet of positive film per week, the money represented being over $200,000. Besides this, there go out of Chicago weekly to China and Japan 10,000 feet of serial and feature films, while the same company also has contracts for large amounts with Spain and Portugal."

Constance Talmadge Begins Work on "Honeymooners"

Constance Talmadge has begun work on another subject for Select Pictures. This is an original story called "The Honeymooners" and was written by Lloyd Sheldon. The scenario has been prepared by Eve Unsell, and Charles Giblyn will direct the picture.

Unlike Miss Talmadge's first feature, "Scandal," which was built on a powerful dramatic theme, "The Honeymooners" is pure comedy drama, and will afford the charming star opportunity for a display of her brilliant comedy gifts. Miss Talmadge's rare penchant for comedy interpretation came to light during the filming of "Scandal" and Charles Giblyn, her director, at once set about providing her with a suitable vehicle for new triumphs.

Miss Talmadge, her director and company left last week for Niagara Falls, where the greater part of the work on "The Honeymooners" will be staged, and will be gone for several weeks.

Meanwhile prints are being prepared with all possible despatch on Miss Talmadge's first picture, "Scandal," which is announced for early release.

Carlyle Blackwell at Work on His 400th Screen Play

CARLYLE BLACKWELL, star of World-Pictures, Brady-made, is at work upon his 400th screen play, in each of which he has had the principal male role.

To commemorate the occasion, which is unique in cinema history, the World Film Corporation has adopted measures to provide a souvenir for every feminine member of each assemblage that witnesses this particular picture in all theatres where it is shown. The publicity department of World-Pictures rises to remark that theatrical managers consider a 400th performance of a play a milestone worthy of very special mark, so why should not the coming of a 400th screen play, with the same star at its head, be of even greater interest to the public? It is a sure thing, adds the publicity man, that no other actor of the stage or screen has ever been the star of anything like this number of plays.

Mr. Blackwell has been a screen player for seven years, and is entering his eighth. The first film drama in which he appeared was the Vitagraph version of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," a feature production considered immense at that early period. He remained with Vitagraph for nine months, appearing in pictures of one and two reels apiece. He then joined Kalem for a term, and afterward had a long engagement with Paramount-Lasky-Famous Players, spending a part of his time in New York and the rest in California. In December he will have been for two years with World-Pictures, Brady-made, which confines itself to the production of features, each of five reels or more.

The name of the photodrama to the feminine patrons of which special souvenirs are to be given will be announced shortly. The reason for the delay is that the play is being prepared under a working title which serves merely to identify it in the process of production as against the other six now, as always, in the making at the World studio.

A permanent name may not be decided upon until the drama is fully completed. Mr. Brady does not permit his output to be finally titled until all the members of his staff have had a chance to make suggestions based upon viewing the finished film.

Borzage Returns to Triangle

Frank Borzage, formerly one of the best known leading men on the Triangle acting staff, has returned to the fold after an absence of nearly two months, and is scheduled to direct several new pictures for Triangle. It is announced that his star and company will be selected in the near future. Borzage wielded the mega phone over William Desmond in Triangle's "Flying Colors."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

L-Ko Increasing All Its Forces to Supply Comedy Demand

EXHIBITORS and manufacturers have found that the condition of public mind created by the war has provoked a demand for comedies that is daily increasing. Universal exchanges, through which L-Kos are circulated, have left this trend of public inclination and in response to the changing trend of the times President Julius Stern and General Director J. G. Blystone have decided to increase their forces and turn out more merrymakers to keep "the folks at home" in better spirits as the tension increases.

Among the new directors who have been taken on at L-Ko's Studios in Hollywood, Cal., may be mentioned Robert Kerr, formerly associated with Mack Sennett, in Keystone who brings with him his principal comedian, Bobbie Dunn, also an ex-Keystoner. Then there is James Davis, who brings a record of numerous comedy successes, and Frank Howard Clark, who has for a long time been editor-in-chief of L-Ko's scenario department, all of whom are well known in filmdom.

These new directors will augment the old stand-bys of L-Ko—Vin Moore, Dick Smith and Archie Mayo. Phil Dunham, who alternates between leading comedies and directing them, will also continue behind the megaphone from time to time. Noel Smith, who has directed scores of L-Kos has joined the colors and his departure made necessary the employment of a new director for Gladys Varden's company.

The list of leading ladies and comedians remains unchanged, future L-Kos assuring the appearances of Miss Varden, Lucille Hutton, Eva Novak and Myrtle Sterling who will have the backing of Al Forbes, Phil Dunham, Walter Stevens, Bert Roach, Bob McKenzie, Chester Ryckman, Hughie Mack and Eddie Barry, together with a large force of assistant players.

Director Harvey to Stage New Serial with Eddie Polo

ONE of the most widely known directors of photoplay serials—the man who staged "Who Pays," "Neal of the Navy," "The Grip of Evil" and "The Neglected Wife" for the Pathe program—has been engaged by the Universal to film a new serial which will soon be started at Universal City. His name is Harry Harvey, and he has been directing motion picture serials and other features for the past four years.

Harvey was staging screen pictures before motion picture film was invented, producing many of the little scenes which were run in the old Mutoscope penny-in-the-slot machines. He and D. W. Griffith once worked together for the old Biograph, and he was one of the first directors of the Lubin Company. He also produced all of Gaumont's trick stuff made in this country, operating the camera as well. He is thoroughly familiar with laboratory work, and is a master at tinting and toning.

The cast for the new serial which Harvey will produce has not been announced, but it is known that Eddie Polo, one of the stars of "The Gray Ghost," who also played featured roles in "Liberty" and "The Broken Coin," will be one of the headliners of the new production for which great success is predicted.

Harvey Gates, author of "Hell Morgan's Girl," and many other successes, is preparing the scenario.

While gathering age has robbed us of early illusions, Jack Pickford and Louise Huff are giving us some of the very best notions of the impulsive, idealistic love of youth. This typical scene is from their most recent Paramount play, "The Ghost House"

Barriscale and West Begin Work on Paralta Feature

BESSIE BARRISCALE and Raymond B. West have begun work on the filming of her latest Paralta play, "Within the Cup," written by Monte M. Katterjohn, which will follow the release of "Madam Who" and "Rose o' Paradise."

Miss Barriscale will act the role of "Thisbe Lorraine," an erratic young literary woman and artist, who attempts to make a career for herself. The opening scenes are laid in the Latin quarter, in Paris, and change to old Greenwich village in New York City, the Bohemian centre of American artistic and literary life.

For several weeks Paralta has had scenic artists seeking locations and making sketches in Greenwich village under the guidance of artists and writers, who make their homes in this unique little separate world of art and letters established within the greatest city in America.

The exteriors and interiors will be exactly duplicated at the Paralta Studios in Hollywood, where atmospheric locations are now reproduced with the greatest fidelity to exactness and detail. Latin quarter scenes in Paris will also be shown constructed from models and photographs sent from that city by an American artist who was commissioned to procure them.

Miss Barriscale has been giving a great deal of study to her part in this play, which will call into service the widest range of histrionic ability. Monte Katterjohn has endeavored to give her the most striking characterization she has ever had the opportunity to present on the screen. Raymond B. West says he is determined to eclipse his best work in this production. Robert Brunton is placing every resource of the Paralta Studios at Mr. West's command.

President Carl Anderson has advised the Paralta Studio forces by wire to disregard anything and everything except the proposition of turning out a great picture, for he expects that each successive picture in each star series, as it is produced, will prove greater and better than that which preceded it.

Vita's Bobby Connelly Series Indorsed by Review Board

THE Bobby Connelly series, produced by Greater Vitagraph, have been indorsed by the National Board of Review and the National Committee for Better Films, in co-operation with Marcus Loew, as the ideal feature for the entertainment of children, according to a statement by N. T. Granlund, of the Loew Enterprises, Inc. He declares that the pictures were recommended to Mr. Loew by the National Board, and the former has made them the feature of the Saturday morning matinees for youngsters in New Rochelle, N. Y.

In a letter to Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Greater Vitagraph distributing organization, Mr. Granlund wrote: "The prominent part of our special Saturday morning performances for children inaugurated in our New Rochelle theatre, which are being conducted under the auspices of the National Committee for Better Films and the National Board of Review, is your Bobby Connelly series. The first one made such a big hit that we are going to run one every other Saturday."

The letter was sent in conjunction with a request that little Bobby Connelly, the eight-year-old star of the Bobby series, be permitted to appear at the Loew theatre in New Rochelle and meet the kiddies of the town. Owing to the fact that Bobby is going to school mornings and making pictures during his afternoons, a rule has been established that he would not make any personal appearances during the next few months, but Mr. Irwin, desiring to co-operate with the National Board of Review, made special arrangements for this occasion, and the little star, accompanied by his mother, motored to New Rochelle.

In addition to the New Rochelle house, Marcus Loew also is featuring the Bobby pictures at his New York theatre.

Albert E. Smith, the president of Greater Vitagraph, is personally supervising the production of these little one-reel stories and recently made the statement that he intended that they should be as perfect in story and direction as the biggest picture turned out by Vitagraph. He also stated that reports from the company's branches throughout the country were most gratifying as showing that exhibitors appreciated the effort to put forth a high-class series of "Kid" features.

Goldwyn Names Two Directors for Mary Garden Feature

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION has announced that two directors have been chosen to take charge of Mary Garden's first screen play, "Thais." They are Hugo Ballin and Frank Crane.

Mr. Ballin is the widely known artist who joined Goldwyn at the outset of its career, and whose work shows in "Baby Mine," and other coming releases. In addition to his directoral share in various Goldwyn pictures, Mr. Ballin has designed settings for the large proportion of the productions.

Mr. Crane is a well-known director, whose most recent work has been the direction of Mrs. Vernon Castle for the Pathe organization. Mr. Crane's experience also includes work for the World, Universal, Thanhouser and Lubin companies.

These two men will collaborate in the making of "Thais," Mr. Ballin giving more attention to the artistic phases of the picture, beginning with the settings and ending with the composition of the figures in the scenes, while Mr. Crane will handle the technical direction.

The problem of finding an actor to play the leading part opposite Miss Garden has been solved by the securing of Hamilton Revelle for the role of the monk, Paphnucius. His screen career has been varied.

Crauford Kent, a long-time favorite with motion picture audiences, and last seen on the screen in support of George M. Cohan in "Broadway Jones," has also been engaged for a prominent role.

The role of Nicius, the former lover of Thais, is to be intrusted to Charles Trowbridge, who, following his appearances in "Excuse Me" and "Daddie Long-Legs," appeared in World productions and took a prominent part in Maxine Elliott's second Goldwyn picture, "The Eternal Magdalene," shortly to be released.

Among others chosen for the long cast of "Thais" are Lionel Adams, who will play Cynius; Alice Chapin, for the part of the Mother Superior, and Margaret Townsend for a nun.

Dorothy Bernard Returns to Wm. Fox Productions

DOROTHY BERNARD has returned to the William Fox forces, and is occupied before the camera in the Eastern studio at Fort Lee, N. J., it was announced from the Fox offices last week. The production in which she is now engaged, in a principal role, is "Les Miserables," the feature in which William Farnum is to star. Jewel Carmen is also in the cast, and Frank Lloyd is directing.

Miss Bernard's last production for William Fox was "Sporting Blood," which was made by Bertram Bracken, now directing Gladys Brockwell in California.

Eleven pictures stand to Miss Bernard's credit. In some of these she was featured. Her screen record for Fox Film Corporation includes "A Soldier's Oath," "Fighting Blood," "The Bondman," "A Man of Sorrow," "The Broken Law," "The Little Gypsy," "The Song of Hate," "Dr. Rameau," "Princess Romanoff," "Sins of Men" and "Sporting Blood."

As the list shows Miss Bernard was first affiliated with William Farnum, with whom she is now cast once more. She has been in motion pictures for several years.

German Spy System Exposed in "Lest We Forget"

International problems and the affronts which finally led the United States into the war, among them the Lusitania sinking, is dealt with in "Lest We Forget," featuring Rita Jolivet, and set for release through Select Pictures. Its opening scenes deal with the German invasion of Belgium and northern France and the bombardment and complete destruction of the little French village of Bois le Rose. An exposition of the German spy system is part of the plot. Leonce Perret directed.

Rex Ingram Joins Paralta to Direct Walthall Picture

REX INGRAM, the well-known photoplay director, who has been responsible for many Bluebird successes, has been engaged by Robert Brunton, director of productions at the Paralta studios in Hollywood, Cal., to direct the making of "His Robe of Honor," in which Henry B. Walthall will make his debut as an independent star-manager, under the executive direction of Paralta Plays, Inc. Mr. Ingram, while one of the young directors, is looked upon as one of the most capable men on the Western coast.

It was during his studies at Yale that he became interested in motion pictures and after finishing his course he went to work for the Edison Company and later played juvenile parts with Vitagraph. During this time he had devoted much of his time to writing for the screen and at last he left the Vitagraph company to accept a position in the scenario of the Fox organization, where he wrote stories which were produced by such stars as Betty Nansen, William Farnum and Robert Mantell. He was with James and Clara Kimball Young and then went with the Universal Film Company, where his work in producing Bluebird photoplays attracted comment. Among the pictures he has directed are "The Great Problem," "Broken Fetters," "Yellow and White," "The Chalice of Sorrow," "The Pulse of Life," "Reward of the Faithless" and "Black Orchids."

In securing the service of Rex Ingram as a director, the Paralta organization boasts of another man of exceptional worth who will be added to their galaxy of directors which now consists of Reginald Barker, Raymond B. West, Oscar Apfel, Emmett Flynn and Wallace Worsley, all of whom are working under the eye of Robert Brunton, who is the manager of the productions being produced at the Paralta studios.

Pathe Releases New Castle Feature October 14

"Stranded in Arcady" Is the First of Big New Pathe Plays and Was Produced by Astra—Good Cast Is Feature

OCTOBER 14 has been announced as the release date selected by Pathe for "Stranded in Arcady," starring Mrs. Vernon Castle. The feature is the first of the big new Pathe Plays, from the novel of Francis Lynde, produced by Astra Film Corporation, directed by Frank Crane and scenarioized by Philip Bartholomae.

The picture is said to have all the elements of popular appeal. It is a fast moving story of the great outdoors dealing with the adventures of a young couple in the North Woods. It contains many thrilling stunts including a jump from a high cliff into the river below and the rescue of the hero by the heroine in the perilous waters of rock-infested rapids.

Mrs. Vernon Castle is given the chance to wear beautiful clothes and accomplish amazing feats. Her success in the serial "Patria" brought about her engagement as a star of Pathe plays, and her work in the first of them is said to be such as to augur big success for those to come.

It is understood the immense financial resources of Pathe are being used to the fullest extent in making these Pathe plays very strong as box office attractions. The company hopes to make them the new standard by which feature pictures shall be judged.

In selecting the story for Mrs. Castle's first photoplay, Astra chose the novel, "Stranded in Arcady," by Francis Lynde. The Astra Corporation, which has produced a number of the biggest successes of the past year, was chosen as the producer and the direction was placed in the hands of Frank Crane, widely known as the man under whose supervision "As Ye Sow," "The Man Who Stood Still" and "The Stolen Voice," were produced. Philip Bartholomae is author of "Over Night," "Very Good, Eddie," "Little Miss Brown" and other big legitimate stage successes. His personal attention to the Castle scenario shows the "punch," clever twist and dramatic developments that characterize his plays.

The story has a very strong love interest and the plot deals with the scheme of an adventurer to maroon a young man and a young girl who are strangers, in the wilds together in the hope that they will marry and thus forfeit an inheritance of which neither is aware. A particularly interesting feature of this picture is the fact that Mrs. Castle's role is that of a young girl who teaches society how to dance, to this extent paralleling the story of her own life. The picture works up to a thrilling climax, when the young people realize that they must get to Montreal before noon on a certain date or see a large inheritance go to the grasping secretary of the man who left it to them.

Metro's Successor to "The Slacker" Patriotic

Metro's special production de luxe, "Draft 258," which is described as a successor to Metro's "The Slacker," is said to take up the patriotic trend where the latter feature left off, and will shortly be released to vie for honors among the ranks of the patriotic pictures of the day. There is little doubt, according to Metro, that the feature will duplicate the box-office success of "The Slacker."

"Draft 258" was directed by William Christy Cabanne, who also wrote the story in collaboration with June Mathis, and deals with the situation after the inauguration of the draft system. It recognizes the fact that many men who have failed to enlist and who have been called in the draft have tried to claim exemption when they have no moral right to it.

Mabel Taliaferro, who has built up a wide popularity for herself in Metro wonderplays, has the star role in the picture. As Mary Alden, the girl patriot, who arouses all around her to a high pitch of devotion to the nation, she is said to have opportunity for some of the best work of her career.

"Night in New York" for Russell

William Russell will be presented in a new role in his forthcoming feature, "A Night in New York," written by Charles Turner Dazey and Frank Dazey and adapted for the screen by Chester B. Clapp. Russell will be presented as a station agent at Hohokus, Maine, whose one desire in life is to go to New York. He gets there—and right there the story hops to it.

Francelia Billington, as Gwendolyn Van Loon, has the leading feminine role. She is a beautiful society girl, daughter of a wealthy government official at whose house the Hohokus station agent finds himself all mixed up because of mistaken identities.

Carl Stockdale, Edward Peil and Alfred Ferguson have important parts and Harvey Clark has again been assigned the role of screen father to William Russell.

Next Four Police Reporter Subjects Announced

The new series of "Grant, Police Reporter," one-reel features produced by Kalem for distribution by General Film Company, are said to be the best work yet turned out on this subject. The four current releases beginning October 18 are: "The Mystery of Room 422," "A Deal in Bonds," "The Sign of the Scarf" and "The Man with the Limp." Robert Wells Ritchie, the author of the thirty odd plots composing the popular series, declared these four stories to be his best work of the kind. Their merit makes them of extraordinary interest to exhibitors who are looking for short, snappy detective dramas.

Chaplin in "The Adventurer" to Be Seen Oct. 22

"The Adventurer," next of the Chaplin-Mutual specials, will be released October 22.

This announcement was made by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation upon receipt of a telegram from Los Angeles announcing that the film, completed after weeks of delay, was on its way to the Mutual's executive offices in Chicago.

"The Adventurer" has met with innumerable adventures in the course of its completion. Just as the final scenes were about to be shot Mr. Chaplin was taken ill. He was well enough to appear in the studio for only a few days when Edna Purviance, his leading woman, was forced to go to the hospital for two weeks.

After the last scenes were finished and Mr. Chaplin began his task of cutting the 20,000 feet to 2,000, it was found that certain of the scenes, destined to remain in the film, were not done to the satisfaction of the comedian and he ordered retakes.

Syd Chaplin, the comedian's brother, who had been in the East, arrived at Los Angeles to help in the final cutting of the production.

Helen Spencer, a well-known comedienne, has been added to the roster of the King-Bee Films Corporation and will assist Billy West in the making of King-Bee Comedies. Miss Spencer was featured in all the Vitagraph O. Henry comedies.

Margery Wilson in Triangle Drama October 14

Appears in Second Release of Week, Following Western Drama with Roy Stewart in Star Role—Comedies Also Promised

IN Triangle's program for the week of October 14 two dramas stand forth as being fully up to the excellence of Triangle standards, and in them are starred two artists who have done much to make the productions of this company popular in the various cities of the country. The features are "One Shot Ross," in which Roy Stewart brings about the triumph of justice over lawless brigandry, and "Wild Sumac," in which Margery Wilson cavorts as a gypsy of the huge forests in the Canadian Northwest. To fill out the program Triangle has provided two one-reel subjects, and a feature.

Surrounded by the genuine article in cowboys, Roy Stewart in "One Shot Ross" undertakes to clean up a Western settlement infamous for its wild disregard of law and order. His direct methods of dealing with offenders earn him the title of "One Shot," and as the vigilante of the community, he comes in for a deal of admiration and necessary bloodshed. But when his unerring aim of authority brings sorrow to a little child, he decides to pull stakes for a camp where eternal vigilance is not the price of safety. The hold-up of the outward-bound stage brings him under the shelter of the Sheridan roof, and sows the seed of a pretty romance in which the gunman uses his skill to avenge a father's murder and rid the earth of a villainous rival. Supporting Stewart in this new drama are Josie Sedgwick, as Mary Sheridan, and Jack Richardson, whose "bad man" characterization gives the familiar "gambler of the screen" an opportunity to desert his faro table for a time.

In the second release of the week, "Wild Sumac," a picture which William V. Mong directed while on leave of absence from the Culver City playing forces, Margery Wilson has an unusual opportunity to adapt her personality to the character of a fair young gypsy of the big woods, untamed and unguided, who is charged with a murder of which she is innocent. The long arm of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police figures prominently in this story as the half-breed boatlegger is brought to justice and the girl Sumac's true identity revealed. Her thrilling rescue from a burning pyre and a realistic man-battle rivaling in its intensity of emotion the fight scene in "The Flame of the Yukon" are high points in the wistful love story. Jack Cunningham prepared the scenario from the story by Elaine Sterne.

On the Triangle Komedy program for this week are "Their Love Lesson" and "A Prairie Heiress," both one-reelers. The Keystone feature, "Pearls and Perils," concerns a maze of trouble started over a string of pearls, the original and bogus jewels going the rounds of an exclusive millinery shop and its "vamp" model with lightning rapidity.

Blotter Advertises Billy West

N. H. Spitzer is executing a new idea for program advertising. He is having a blotter made with an artistic advertisement of Billy West in King-Bee comedies, placed in the upper part of the blotter, with liberal space left for the exhibitor to print his daily program on. Having a commercial value, it is a foregone conclusion that the movie fan will take it home or to the office for further use.

Two Stage Stars in Mutuals for Oct. 15

Ann Murdock Appears in "The Beautiful Adventure" and Juliette Day Comes to the Screen in "The Calendar Girl"

TWO stars of the speaking stage, each in her second Mutual production, are listed on Mutual's schedule of releases for the week of October 15. Ann Murdock appears in "The Beautiful Adventure," a picturization of the Charles Frohman stage success, and Juliette Day, star in "Upstairs and Down," and other Broadway hits, comes to the screen in "The Calendar Girl," a five-reel comedy drama.

"The Beautiful Adventure" is from the story by Robert de Fler, G. A. de Caillavert and Ettienne Ray. The little French heroine, runs away on the morning set for her wedding to the man of her parents' choice, with the man she loves, fleeing to her grandmother's home in the country, where grandmother naturally accepts them as bride and groom. There ensued the beautiful adventure. It was scenarioized by Joseph F. Poland and directed by Dell Henderson, who was responsible for "Reputation," starring Edna Goodrich and "Outcast," the first of Miss Murdock's Mutual pictures.

"In Deep Water," the fifth chapter of "The Lost Express," Helen Holmes's latest Mutual-Signal Photonovel, is released October 15. Heavy bookings have been reported on the new serial.

Chapter V includes some new stunts which Director J. P. McGowan devised for his daredevil star to stage.

There are two comedies on the Mutual schedule for the week. Billie Rhodes appears in the third of her new series of Strand-Mutual one-reelers, "For Sweet Charity." She is supported by Jay Belasco and a capable cast. George Ovey appears in "Jerry's Jam," another of the highly laughable one-reel productions in which the humorous George Ovey appears as Jerry. "For Sweet Charity" is released October 16 and "Jerry's Jam" on October 18.

"Reel Life," Mutual's one-reel film magazine, is released October 18. It contains the following subjects: "A Colonial Church in South Carolina," "When Dishwashing is a Pleasure," "The Banana Industry," "A Primitive Jeweler." and an animated drawing from life, entitled "An Optical Illusion"; "Mutual Weekly," the Mutual-Gaumont news reel, is released October 17. It carries pictures of the latest news events up to the time the film is shipped.

Wolfville Breaks into Films Via Vita Route

In "Dead Shot Barker" the first of a series of five-reel features to be made by Greater Vitagraph under the personal supervision of President Albert E. Smith, Wolfville, the town Alfred Henry Lewis wrote so much about in his stories, is visualized for the first time. The initial production concerning Wolfville is scheduled for release on October 15.

Regarding the Wolfville productions, Mr. Smith said last week: "I feel that in putting Wolfville on the screen we are not only providing a splendid entertainment, but we are also providing the American people with an historical record and paying a deserved tribute to one of the country's literary geniuses. And right now, when the American people are waking to a realization of the debt they owe men like Poe, O. Henry, etc., I should like to pay tribute to the memory of Alfred Henry Lewis as one of the group of great writers this country has produced.

A second Wolfville story, called "The Tenderfoot," has already been completed by Vitagraph, and has a place on the calendar for the last week in November.

Triangle Changes Program for October 28

The Triangle Distributing Corporation has announced the release of "The Man Hater," featuring Winifred Allen, for the week of October 28. "Doing Her Bit," the patriotic drama originally scheduled for this date, has been temporarily removed from the schedule.

"The Stainless Barrier" will be the release for the second half of the week, as previously announced.

As revised, the Triangle feature program for the latter half of October is as follows: October 21, "The Firefly of Tough Luck" with Alma Ruebens and "Cassidy" with Dick Rosson; October 28 "The Man Hater" with Winifred Allen, and "The Stainless Barrier" with Irene Hunt and Jack Livingston.

Cast in Part She Played in Stage Success

Ann Murdock appears in "The Beautiful Adventure," the second of her Charles Frohman plays in pictures on the Mutual schedule of October 15.

"The Beautiful Adventure" is the play in which Ann Murdock stepped to stardom overnight. Charles Frohman produced "The Beautiful Adventure" at the Lyceum Theatre in New York, in September, 1914, with Miss Murdock as leading lady. The piece made an immediate and pronounced hit. Before the end of the New York run Miss Murdock was surprised and delighted to see her name blazing in letters of fire on the electric sign in front of the house.

The production was staged at the studios of the Empire All Star Corporation, which is producing the Charles Frohman plays in pictures for Mutual release, at Glendale, L. I. It was directed by Del Henderson, stage manager of the original production at the Lyceum Theatre.

Goldsmith Uses Split-Week Program

Few managers can boast of the success that has come to Mr. A. S. Goldsmith, who manages the Broadway Photoplay Theatre at Broadway and 103rd street, New York. His association with the moving picture business dates back to the year of 1913, when he entered the game as a novice. His rise in these four years to the managership of one of Gotham's finest picture houses is due to his persistent efforts along correct lines of showmanship. His theatre is perhaps the only one in the country which operates its program on a split-week basis. It is a six hundred seat house. When he first started to inaugurate the split-week program many exhibitors scoffed at the idea. But Mr. Goldsmith felt that it was a big step in the right direction. He reviews every picture before it is shown at his theatre and plays only high-class subjects.

Jay Belasco a Fighter in "For Sweet Charity"

Billie Rhodes meets the "male of the species" in his own haunts in "For Sweet Charity," her forthcoming Mutual Strand comedy, scheduled for release on October 16, and before she completes her efforts to raise $100 for the Red Cross she loses most of her respect for all of mankind—except one.

Jay Belasco, who supports Miss Rhodes in the one reel comedies, proves himself a fighter of more than amateur qualifications in the picture. Jay is called upon to thrash his fellow tenants in an office building for their unwelcome advances.

Essanay Chaplins Get Across Well

Inquiries are coming in rapidly, so General Film announces, for the series of Essanay Chaplins. These pictures were made when Charlie Chaplin was gaining in popularity and worked under that great incentive. The new prints are made from re-edited negatives.

The first release, "The Champion," booked well all over the country, it is stated. The next picture will be "A Jitney Elopement."

Fox-Kellermann Film Released on Rental Basis

Will Give Exhibitors Throughout the Land Chance to Show "A Daughter of the Gods"—Feature Is Very Widely Known

WILLIAM FOX has decided to release his big Annette Kellermann sea picture, "A Daughter of the Gods," to the motion picture theatres throughout the country on a rental basis, according to an announcement made from the Fox offices last week. The date upon which the photoplay will begin engagements on this basis has been announced as December 2.

This big production, whose box-office value has been demonstrated in legitimate theatres all over this country, as well as abroad, at a scale of prices ranging from $1.00 to 25 cents, has not played anywhere at a lower scale. The Kellermann picture will be for general release through the Fox Film Corporation Exchanges, and is now available for booking. It will be released in eight reels.

"A Daughter of the Gods," with Miss Kellermann is admittedly one of the best advertised pictures now available for booking by the exhibitor. The picture has been publicized as probably no other film production, and the result is everywhere evident. Practically everyone, in every town, large or small, knows something of "A Daughter of the Gods." They have read of it in magazines and newspapers—they have seen it billed all over the country when it played the legitimate theatres for long runs at top prices—and they have seen in almost every magazine pictures of the star and the production.

The very nature of the picture, coupled with the aquatic activities of Miss Kellermann, and the advertising they have received, will undoubtedly count substantially when it is offered in the motion picture theatres.

Farrar Film, "The Woman God Forgot," Ready Oct. 22

AN announcement from Walter E. Greene, President of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, sets the date of release for the Geraldine Farrar film, "The Woman God Forgot," as October 22. A greater triumph than experienced even with "Joan the Woman" is predicted by the producers for the new Farrar cinema spectacle, and a special exploitation campaign is being prepared by exhibitors throughout the country, who have already booked this picture.

In announcing the release of the first Farrar-Artcraft subject, Mr. Greene said: "In the photodramas in which Geraldine Farrar has appeared, she has established herself as the leading emotional actress of the film. Her first appearance, 'Carmen,' and her more recent production, 'Joan the Woman,' have been the sensations of the photodramatic world.

"Jeanie Macpherson, who wrote the story of 'Joan the Woman,' is also responsible for the authorship of 'The Woman God Forgot,' and also for Mary Pickford's recent productions, 'The Little American' and 'A Romance of the Redwoods.'

"For her theme in 'The Woman God Forgot' Miss Macpherson has taken the story of a princess who sells her country for the man she loves. The whole story is taken from a chapter in the early history of America, telling how the Spanish invaded Mexico and of their conquest of Montezuma. She falls in love with a handsome young Spaniard, which role is played by the ever-popular star, Wallace Reid.

"The production is one of the most elaborate and beautiful ever made by Cecil B. De Mille. The work of this director is too well known to require comment. Noted as the creator of artistic effects, his last work is considered his best.

"The reproduction of the famous Aztec pyramid of Teocalli, as seen in 'The Woman God Forgot,' is the largest setting ever built for a photodrama, the pyramid being nearly 200 feet in height and an exact reproduction in every detail of the famous temple to the Aztec gods. More than a thousand men took part in the thrilling battle scenes, and the effects of the first few cannon with gunpowder are graphically shown."

General Is to Distribute American War News Weekly

AN announcement of the week bearing more than passing interest is that coming from the offices of General Film to the effect that it will act as exclusive distributor for the "American War News Weekly," one-reel subjects dealing with military and naval activities of the United States. The new arrangement began with the twenty-fifth number of the American News Weekly dated October 5.

This war news weekly, produced by the Cinema News Syndicate, has been well received and the ambitious plans for the continuation of the feature on an even more important scale promise well.

The American News Weekly is edited from the work of some thirty camerapondents in this country and Europe, who are doing good work in providing a high-grade graphic weekly of patriotic and topical interest. The activities of the fighting forces, important events in the preparedness movement, patriotic demonstrations and many other events dealing with America's participation in the war are shown each week in this series. As the time approaches when the first overseas army will soon be in the trenches, this graphic weekly is beginning to attract even more attention, and the weekly releases are being followed keenly by the public. Illustrated titles and carefully tinted film add to the drawing power of these subjects. Capt. Robert E. Reynolds, well known in army circles, is the editing director of the American War News Weekly.

A series of new exhibitors' helps has been prepared by General Film. These include twenty slides for advertising purposes, two stock posters and a weekly one-sheet, printed in red, white and blue, in which the four leading subjects are headlined.

Bluebirds Are to Be Fixtures at Broadway Theatre

Another Broadway house will display the Bluebird program when, October 2, Ruth Clifford will present Rupert Julian's production of "The Savage," with Monroe Salisbury featured as leading man. The arrangement Bluebird has made with Stanley Mastbaum, manager of the Broadway, calls for a series of prereleases, to continue for an extended term. In this way Bluebird's "Star-Cycle" is to be introduced to Broadway.

Heretofore Bluebirds have been regularly displayed in the Longacre Square district almost exclusively at Marcus Loew's New York theatre, where they have been a consistent item in Manager's Loew's daily changed program; and will so continue. The Rialto has also shown several Bluebirds, personallly selected by Manager Rothapfel, soon after he established his open booking rule. The introduction of Bluebirds at the Broadway comes simultaneously with the inauguration of Bluebird's "Star-Cycle" policy with the Rupert Julian feature.

Managing Director Laemmle has made the Broadway theatre arrangement for the purpose of launching Bluebird's "Star-Cycle" under the most favorable circumstances—for there's no denying the great factor in the success of any amusement enterprise a Broadway showing brings to bear. The Rupert Julian Bluebirds are intended to represent the best of Bluebird production and the combination of Ruth Clifford, as star; Monroe Salisbury, as leading man and Mr. Julian, the director, will be made an essential detail of the "Star-Cycle." These particular Bluebirds are intended to take the place of the Lois Weber productions that ended when Miss Weber began producing features upon her own responsibility.

The plan of Bluebird's "Star-Cycle" will bring Mae Murray, Dorothy Phillips, Violet Mersereau, Ruth Clifford and Franklyn Farnum to the Broadway, in regular sequence, every six weeks, affording a weekly change of program and specific dates for individual appearances.

New Bryant Washburn Comedy-Drama October 15

"The Fibbers," Bryant Washburn's new comedy-drama made by Essanay, will be released by that company on October 15 on the Perfection Pictures Program, it has been announced. Trade showings of the five-part picture have been in progress this week at George Kleine's branch offices.

"The Fibbers" is announced as another typical Washburn production, presenting the star in the same subtly humorous type of characterization as his Skinner pictures. Virginia Valli, who has been seen with Mr. Washburn in numerous of his former productions, also enacted the feminine role in "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship."

Geo. A. Seigmann Will Direct Carmel Myers

When Carmel Myers finishes her second Bluebird, created by Harry Solter from Larry Evans' story, "One Clear Call," she will pass under the direction of George A. Siegmann, who last week arrived at Universal City, Cal., to take up his new duties. Miss Myers will make her first appearance as a Bluebird star, November 5, in "The Lash of Power," and six weeks later will present Director Solter's second production, "One Clear Call."

Miss Myers will have as her first vehicle under George A. Siegmann's direction, a picturization of Frank R. Adams' novel, "Molly and I," one of the "best sellers" of 1916. Her leading man will continue to be Kenneth Harlan, but Director Siegmann will assemble a new supporting company from his choice of players in the stock forces at Universal City.

Hart Film from Artcraft on Oct. 15

"The Narrow Trail," the first William S. Hart picture released by Thomas H. Ince through Artcraft, will be ready for bookings on October 15. The well known characterizer of Western roles is the author of the scenario.

As leading lady to the star there appears Sylvia Bremer, the Australian actress, who recently made such pronounced successes in Ince pictures. Others in the cast are Milton Ross, Robert Kortman and, of course, "Fritz."

Kate Price Featured in "Week End Shopping"

Kate Price is featured in the first of the fourth series of Sparkle comedies introduced this month by General Film Company for the Jaxon Film Corporation. Her co-star, Billy Ruge, appears with her first in "Week End Shopping," a one-reel subject. Kate and Billy visit a department store for the purpose of fitting Billy out in some new store clothes. Billy's inclination to flirt, which is almost a disease with him, brings about one mix-up after another until it earns for him the soundest spanking of his life. "Week-End Shopping" is said to promise well for the new series of six subjects as box-office attractions.

Goldwyn to Distribute New War Feature

"The Freedom of the World," said to be one of the biggest productions ever made as an outgrowth of the war, has been announced for distribution through the Goldwyn organization.

Under a contract between Ira M. Lowry and his associates, the producers of this picture, and Goldwyn, the latter obtains the exclusive rights for world-wide distribution of the drama.

"The Freedom of the World" was months in the making and has as its star E. K. Lincoln, supported by Barbara Castleton and Romaine Fielding.

Goldwyn is shipping trade prints of "The Freedom of the World" to all of its branches for screenings for exhibitors and will be ready to release the picture for showings quickly.

Russian Art Films Feature of Pathe Program

Described as the Initial Drama of a Series Which Marks New Era in Photoplays—Mollie King in New Episode of "Seven Pearls"

ONE of the more important features of Pathe's program for October 21 is the first of the Russian Art Films to be released by this company, and described as the initial drama of a series which marks a new era in photoplays.

This picture, produced for Pathe in the new democracy in six reels, is said to represent the pinnacle of motion picture art. It is adapted from the story by Rushkin, and its cast includes Mozukin, without a doubt the greatest actor in Russia. "The Painted Doll" is declared to be a wonderfully dramatic photoplay superbly produced. Made here, it would cost about $70,000 without allowing for the high salaries paid to stars in this country.

Mollie King stars in the 6th episode of the "Seven Pearls" entitled "The Abandoned Mine" with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary produced in two reels by Astra. More thrills than ever mark this episode. An explosion frees Ilma and Harry and knocks Perry insensible. It is clear that the man is out of his head. They all three join forces and take refuge in a counterfeiter's den. Ilma and Harry are captured and sentenced to death but Perry is allowed to wander about. The leader of the band is about to shoot Harry in spite of Ilma's screams, when Perry enters with a can of nitroglycerine and suddenly throws the can at the gang. An explosion follows. Perry lies motionless, Ilma and Harry are insensible as a rescue party starts to save them, brought to the spot through an ingenious method employed by Harry to attract attention.

Pearl White stars in the 16th episode of "The Fatal Ring," produced in two reels by Astra. This episode has two very big thrills.

There is on this program a two-reel Lonesome Luke Comedy produced by Rolin and entitled "Lonesome Luke from London to Laramie." This is said to be another "knock-out" with Harry Pollard as "Lord Algernon," Harold Lloyd as "Lonesome Luke," his valet, Bud Jameyson as "Brindle Pup," and Bebe Daniels as "Betty Pup," his daughter.

A split reel Pathe-Colored scenic and educational is "A Corner of the Morvan," showing scenes of that picturesque France which has not been despoiled by barbarians, and "The Wild Duck" part of series released under the main title "Our Game Birds."

There are also an International cartoon and scenic split reel and Hearst-Pathe News No. 86 and No. 87.

Victor Moore Releases "High Cost" Comedy

Victor Moore releases on Oct. 8 Thomas J. Gray's latest comedy, "The Cow Jumped Over the Moon." Though given a fairy tale title, the comedy is based on the high cost of living.

Vic gets the butcher bill, and the total of it nearly knocks him off his feet. He decides then and there to put an end to the high prices. He starts out to purchase a cow and on the way he picks up a circular with a drawing of a cow, with directions of how to dissect her in the most economic way. He arrives at a farm house and buys a cow, and starts homeward with her. En route he has no end of trouble, but eventually gets her home. The next morning, at breakfast, he is without cream for his coffee, and he figures here is where he beats the milkman. Out he goes to the cow, and knowing nothing about milking a cow, he thinks he'll "crank her." After much trying he finds the cow is "dry." The finish finds Vic without his cow and out the money he paid for it.

Essanay Far Ahead of Its Release Schedule

Complete Program of Subjects Up to First of Year Is Now Ready—New Taylor Holmes Feature Announced

ACCORDING to an announcement made last week by Esanay, exhibitors will find a veritable gold mine of Essanay productions in store for them at the beginning of the winter season. Owing to the fact that Essanay is far ahead of its schedule, a complete program of subjects up to the first of the year is now ready.

Heading this list is Taylor Holmes in his second motion picture production, "Fools for Luck," which is the current Essanay release. In this feature, which has made quite as solid an impression upon exhibitors and the public as "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," Mr. Holmes has Helen Ferguson, a recent "find," in the role opposite him.

"The Fibbers," the next October release, is a comedy-drama, based on married life, starring Bryant Washburn and Virginia Valli. The story was written by James W. Adams.

Little Mary McAlister, Essanay's six-year-old star, will appear next in "Young Mother Hubbard," a travesty on the old nursery story, written especially for the tiny actress by Charles Mortimer Peck.

Mr. Holmes will make his third screen appearance in "Two-Bit Seats," the action of which was adapted from the American magazine story of the same title, by Gladys E. Johnson. Marguerite Clayton appears in the leading feminine role. The picture deals with a young spendthrift, who can't afford midnight suppers, and a girl who refuse to mulct him, but encourages thrift. The spendthrift reforms, then they call a minister.

There is said to be plenty of action in "The Kill-joy," in which Little Miss McAlister stars, playing the only feminine role of the picture. The script was written by Charles Mortimer Peck. It deals with a child who is the idol of a rough and tumble Western mining camp.

"The Small Town Guy," Mr. Holmes's fourth picture, is taken from the Munsey magazine story, "The Picture of Innocence," by Freman Tilden. Mr. Holmes depicts the role of the small town hotel clerk who unconciously becomes the tool of bunco men, and Miss Ferguson plays the part of the sweetheart, who rescues him.

Jack Gardner and Miss Ferguson play the leading roles in "Gift of Gab."

"Sadie Goes to Heaven," another Little Mary McAlister picture, is taken from the story of the same title appearing in Good Housekeeping Magazine. It was written by Dana Burnet.

In addition, new prints of the original Essanay comedies that made Charlie Chaplin famous, will be released monthly. These include "A Jitney Elopement," "A Night in the Show," "By the Sea," and all the others on which the comedian made his reputation. New Fables by George Ade, the Hoosier humorist, are being released each week. These pictures are released through the General Film Company.

A picture in which Mary MacLane will play the vampire in one of her own works, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," will be ready for release soon. It will have a screen time of 65 minutes.

Beginning December 1, twelve educational and scenic subjects, with screen time of 15 minutes each, will be released. Also a series of 15-minutes "slapstick" comedies will be ready shortly.

Housewives League Endorses "Public Be Damned"

The National Housewives League, an organization of vast influence throughout the country, through its president, Mrs. Julian Health, has endorsed the film drama, "The Public Be Damned."

In her letter to Arthur S. Kane, general manager of the Select Pictures Corporation, Mrs. Heath characterizes the play as most opportune and destined to be of assistance in adjusting the present food control situations.

King to Direct Minter

Henry King will supervise the Mary Miles Minter productions henceforth. He has started work on her newest one, "The Mate of the Sally Ann." Henry Albert Phillips wrote the new play, which is the fourth for Miss Minter under her new two-year contract.

Vitagraph Selects Reissues for Release in November

AMONG the November programs for Favorite Film Features, under which name Greater Vitagraph is reissuing selected pictures from its library, there will be one of the O'Garry pictures in which Edith Storey and Ned Finley, supported by strong casts, made such a strong impression. The first one of the O'Garrys to be reissued will be "Strength of Men," an Alaskan subject. The lightings in this feature, it will be recalled, were exceptionally good and, with the insertion of present-day titles, it is declared this two-reel story will stand the test of comparison with short length pictures now being offered to exhibitors.

A noteworthy fact about the Favorite Film Features is the excellence of the stories they tell. Sent forth as one and two-reel subjects, and made before five-reel features became the standard of the trade, these Vitagraph productions are crowded with action from start to finish.

Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph is giving his personal attention to the preparation of the Favorite Film Features and none is permitted to leave the studio unless it is mechanically and technically perfect. This means that all new prints are being shipped, the films are thoroughly re-edited, present-day titles inserted and the action made as smooth as those features which are being produced under the most up-to-date methods of picture making.

"Favorite Film Features," said Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the distributing organization of Greater Vitagraph, "now occupy just as important a place on our program as any other unit of our product and we are satisfied that they are filling a long-felt want of exhibitors. They receive the same amount of care in their preparation before shipment as our biggest features and the fact that thousands of exhibitors now are using them as regular parts of their programs convinces us that the exhibitors appreciate them."

Schedule of William Fox October Releases Changed

WILLIAM FOX releases originally scheduled for October have been set back one week each through a change made in the monthly schedule affecting the Fox Special Features. The revised order of releases places the feature, "A Rich Man's Plaything," for the week of October 30 instead of "Conscience."

Following is the new schedule: September 30, Valeska Suratt in "A Rich Man's Plaything"; October 7, Gladys Brockwell in "Conscience"; October 14, Virginia Pearson in "Thou Shalt Not Steal"; October 21, June Caprice in "Miss U.S.A"; October 28, George Walsh in "This Is the Life."

Two Standard pictures will be issued. These are "When a Man Sees Red" (October 7), William Farnum's melodramatic vehicle; and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," the second of the Fox Kiddies productions which William Fox presented at the Globe theatre in New York.

That's the punchy way this big three reeler begins, and the swift pace never slackens for a moment. Missing defense plans and a secretive individual known as "H. I. Lawrence J. Darmour Is Appointed Lieutenant

Gets Commission in Signal Corps of Officers' Reserve Section of United States Army—Expects to Join General Pershing

WITH a French name and a fighting Irish nature, Larry simply couldn't keep out of the fray any longer. So now it's First Lieutenant Lawrence J. Darmour, of the Signal Section of the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Larry has long been the assistant editor of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, and has a multitude of friends in the motion picture industry, who will be glad to learn of his commission. He accompanied the Ford Peace Expedition when it went to Europe, but admits that his next trip abroad will be more to his fancy.

Darmour has been assigned to duty on the staff of General Pershing. Because of his experience with the motion picture camera, it is expected that a part of his duties will be the photographing of enemy positions from aeroplanes; to perfect himself in this work he has been practicing for sometime with the millionaire aviators who are quietly pursuing their air studies on Long Island.

After an experience he had recently, Larry feels that he has nothing more to fear. With his camera secured by wires—a motion picture camera is an expensive instrument and must be protected—he had soared to a dizzy altitude in company with two aviators. He forgot that his life was probably as valuable as the camera and neglected to strap himself to the plane. Having focused on another air machine which had come within lens range, he was busily cranking away with one hand, and holding to an upright with the other. The propellers of the two air machines were stirring currents in opposite directions, and something got the matter with the air. An air pocket, or some such thing, formed. Larry's machine took a quick drop, and the aviator was forced to "loop the loop" before it could be righted. The wires holding the camera were broken by the fall, but Larry says that only centripetal force, the luck of the Irish, or some other scientific thing of which he doesn't know the name, saved him, but he's still alive and able to tell the story.

Gaumont Reel Life Features "Dining on Wheels" Next

"DINING ON WHEELS," or "How the American Traveler Is Fed," is the featured subject in Reel Life No. 78, which will be released on Thursday, Oct. 22. This feature is said to show accurately the great care and thought which the railways use in looking after the comfort of the public. This subject not only pictures how you are fed at eighty miles an hour, but takes you behind the scenes and shows you how the cooks and waiters are trained in special schools.

There are other subjects in Reel Life No. 78 which Gaumont thinks deserve more than passing mention. A Colorado enthusiast has financed twenty expeditions to the top of the Continental Divide, to obtain the eggs of "The Rocky Mountain Jay," which lays only in the winter. Enos A. Mills, the distinguished author-naturalist, is one of the characters in this scenic-scientific subject, which was photographed at the crest of the continent. A remarkable example of double-exposure photography in "Then and Now; or, How High Living Cost Wins the Race," gives a comparison of today and when grandfather was a boy.

The Gaumont-Mutual Weekly No. 147 is released on Wednesday, October 24, but as this news-reel is made up only of the latest news events of importance, it is not possible to forecast what topics will be shown.

Educational Features in Bray Pictographs

An interesting as well as entertaining and amusing series of features is said to be embraced in the eighty-eighth release of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, "the magazine-on-the-screen." The distant island of New Zealand is background for a number of scenes which include the lumbering industry and wood-chopping contests. The contests among the wood-choppers are almost a national institution, the speed attained at times being almost miraculous.

Eltinge F. Warner, one of the best known sportsmen in the United States, planned a deer hunt in the Carolinas for the benefit of one of the Pictograph camera men with the result that the eighty-eighth release of Paramount-Bray Pictographs will contain one of the most exciting hunt pictures ever shown.

The Bray Studios, Inc., producers of the Paramount-Bray Pictograuhs, have completed a series of motion pictures showing the work done by the New York State Food Supply Commission in its efforts to assist the Government in the tremendous task of conserving the food supply.

Educational Subject Released Every Other Week

The Selig World Library series, in its future releases, being distributed by General Film, promises to add to the reputation these subjects have already established among exhibitors.

Three subjects are promised for October in accordance with the new plan of issuing one of these single-reel features every other week. Release dates for the month are Oct. 3, 17 and 31.

Number 20 of the Selig World Library presents four features, including a good view of highly amusing Japanese cabaret performers at Tokyo. Next the camera shifts to Jerusalem, the Holy City. Other subjects are "The Cocoanut Industry in the Philippine Islands" and "Ostrich vs. Chicken as a Food Producer." The latter subject illustrates the various uses to which this big bird can be put as a meat substitute. For one thing, fifteen of its eggs equal 450 hen's eggs and are equally nutritious.

THE DRIVE FOR DEMOCRACY

Almost half of the Universal Animated Weekly, No. 92, is given over to scenes showing with what widespread enthusiasm our second Liberty Bond sale is being initiated. Secretary McAdoo, Mayor Mitchel, some very pretty young ladies, and the famous Tris Speaker, take part in the opening ceremonies of this national call to duty.

Gentlemen quite as well known to the American public as the above notables are the American League champions. The cameraman presents them as a group, and then, for good measure, adds a half-dozen close-ups of individual players.

Boston and New York have recently had some circuses not down on the regular amusement schedule. We don't suppose the Fruit Company who distributed some thousands of bunches of bananas adjudged too ripe for reshipment thought of the performance in quite that light, but the small boys who lined up and "snitched" bananas from the heavily-laden recipients seemed to judge it rare fun. New York's divertissement was something in the nature of a hippodrome affair, when Lena, late of the jungle, marched into Times Square bearing a phoongraph for the men in the Signal Corps Depot. As the editor explains, Lena's trunk was "full of wigwags," and her vocal accompaniment to Arthur Field's song was a "huge chorus" in itself.

NEW YORK NO PLACE FOR CARELESSNESS

Four hundred thousand automobiles in New York State alone, and one-third of the number in New York City! Is it any wonder that Secretary of State Hugo demands a severe test for driver's license, and that Police Commissioner Woods sternly enforces the traffic regulations of the busiest city in the United States? These Safety First pictures (Universal Screen Magazine, No. 43) give us a startling idea of what would happen to driver and pedestrian if the rules were relaxed. A written examination (no easy matter for the foreign chauffeurs) is followed by a rigid road test where the applicant's knowledge and resource are thoroughly tried out. Not even the sharpest warning, however, serves with some men, and we are shown the dire result of over-confidence or worse.

There seems no limit to the power man can evoke from nature. His latest wonder machine is a terrifically powerful electric transformer, capable of producing a current of 2,000,000 volts. The fireworks that this monster produces are startling in the extreme.

Despite the newest devices of wigwag and wireless, the gentle carrier pigeon is still a valued messenger on the battle front. Here are pictures taken in and behind the trenches of France, with the undaunted birds fulfilling their duty as efficiently as the latest invention of Marconi or Edison.

Wood's Troup of Trained Dogs add a comedy note to a reel of serious import.

TENNESSEE DOES HER BIT

Lumbering has usually been associated with the pine forests of Maine or the great Northwest. But Tennessee contributes her quota in furnishing hardwood. In the Pathe-International film, "From Tree to Mill," we have a well-taken picture of just the right length, showing the labor incident to transforming a forest giant into a set of planed planks. When the two-handled saw has done its work, the logs, end to end in a long chain, are "snaked" through the woods, conveyed by overhead trolley and steam derrick to flat car, and so by switchback over the Smoky Mountains to the mill pond, whence an endless belt carries them into the mill. The subject is picturesque as well as interesting.

"Happy Hooligan" (on reel with above) discovers what a really busy life can be led by an invalid with a mania for exercise. "Happy" decides there are easier jobs than attending such a human dynamo.

PRESENTS AND FORCEPS FOR RECRUITS

The famous Selig Zoo must be feeling like a one-ring circus when it contemplates the collection forming on the other side of the water. The latest addition to the American Noah's Ark in France is a small brown bear consigned to Captain Hudson for delivery to General Pershing (Mutual Weekly, No. 144). This favored beastie, before leaving the hands of his fair attendants, is given a swin and a bottle of milk. We wonder how he will fare "out there!"

If Pershing's boys are as busy as the young engineers of Boston, there won't be much time for playing with bruin. These candidates for hard work are learning, notebook in hand, how to lay gun foundations by studying the driving of concrete piles in actual construction work.

Field dentistry used to be a much-dreaded operation. The victim sat in the open, enduring not only the tortures of the instrument, which the Weekly feelingly portrays, but the more or less commiserating remarks of his friends. Now, thanks to the invention of Dr. D. W. Hollister, he is ushered into a traveling ambulance and enjoys the luxury of suffering in private.

Seattle is giving her departing recruits more than tears and flag waving. Each of the young men received a basket of goodies, which doubtless meant more to him than even the flowers the girls showered on him as he marched away.

The boys started on their way, Seattle said au revoir to Edward Hauck, who departed in a motor cycle, with wife and baby in the side car, and is now on his way across the Continent.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

MAGIC CASEMENTS

Keats looked out of his "magic casement" on "faery lands forlorn," but Mr. Brind, in his new Educational Series of insect and aquatic life, discovers a much more cheerful prospect through the magic lens. In "Beautiful Goldfish" we are introduced to a new type of aristocrat, whose name seems most fitting when we learn that certain choice individuals are valued at several hundred dollars each. Generations of breeding have transformed the plain fish which first appears on the screen into the gorgeous prize-winners with fins and tails like veils of chiffon and heads maned like a lion's.

"My Friend the Ant" takes us to and into his nest on the edge of the woods, where he assists in lugging a huge timber (a match stick, no less!) and in killing a struggling monster of a caterpillar. He conducts us through the underground rooms reserved for the eggs and larvæ, and introduces us to his herd of "ant cows" or aphides. He stops to lunch on a beetle and a butterfly, but meets trouble at the hands of an invader from a neighboring nest. Our friend, of course, mobilizes himself into a Home Defense guard and fights bravely, but it left badly wounded on the field. Help, however, is at hand. Messengers carry word of his plight to the queen ant, and she at once hurries to the scene. The lucky cameraman was able to catch a veritable bit of Red Cross first aid, as the Queen strokes and licks the wounded warrior, who is soon restored to health and his wonted activity.

Pictures such as these, when added to the usual program of drama, add a touch of novelty and relief which audiences of the best type of picture house are quick to appreciate. Other of Mr. Brind's releases will be noticed in a subsequent issue.

LIVING BY BREAD AND DANCING

"Camp cooking" is all very well—for camping parties. But your Uncle Samuel is not taking chances on burned bacon and so-called flapjacks when it comes to feeding his big new army. So, as there are not enough professional cooks to go round, Uncle Sam is having batches of them trained. The Paramount-Bray Pictograph, No. 87, shows us what happens at Pratt Institute, where the Higher Education of Army Cooks is being undertaken by a graduate woman cook. Here our boys in khaki learn the mysteries of dough, of piecrust, and of the seemingly simple toast. They learn how to divide twenty gallons of pudding into just so many exactly even portions, and what scientific dishwashing really involves. Withal they seem to preserve their youth and good nature.

Those clever pupils of Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn are never satisfied unless they are expressing themselves in new and startling rhythms and poses, and the Bray Studios obliges with a cameraman to register their interesting and beautiful exhibitions of the plastic art.

Goodrich Dirt, the Lunch Detective, will not go hungry as long as his ready wit and faithful hound stand him in good stead.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

"Ashes of My Heart" for Castleton

Harry Berg, who recently entered the independent field as a producer, is busily engaged in selecting stories for the plays in which he is to star Barbara Castleton. He is putting particular care upon this branch of the work, feeling, as he does, that a story of particular merit is necessary to the success of a picture on the open market. In a recent interview he said:

"The producer's problem in this field of work is a particularly difficult one. In the first place, he must select a story that is adaptable to his star; one that is a fit vehicle for her talents. On the other hand, he must find a story that will 'stand on its own feet,' which is above the ordinary program picture, and which may be circulated as a territorial feature.

"One of the best stories that I have found for these releases is 'Ashes of My Heart,' by Edith Blinn. This book was one of the most popular novels of last season. The story is one that will afford Miss Castleton ample opportunity to display her versatility. The problem which it presents is the old one of heredity versus environment. A girl, born of a gambler father and a mother addicted to the use of drugs, as a baby is placed in the sheltered seclusion of a convent, and reared for eighteen years without the knowledge of her parentage. What would she do upon suddenly finding herself entirely her own mistress? Will she follow her heritage of instinct for dissipation, bequeathed to her by her parents, or will the strict training of the convent be sufficient to hold those instincts in check? This is the problem that Miss Blinn presents and solves, and in the process has evolved a story which will make a most remarkable picture.

"I have not yet decided what the first release will be. Several stories are under consideration, and an announcement will be made shortly

Shackman Praises Overland Releases

A. L. Shackman, manager of the Eighty-first Street theatre, of New York, who has been showing the "Official Pictures of the Russian Revolution" and "Behind the Russian Battle Lines" during the past week, is most enthusiastic about the new pictures. In a recent interview, in his office, he highly commended both the New Russia and the Overland Film companies on their selection.

"I have never exhibited a picture," said Mr. Shackman, "which has been better received or more satisfactory, and it has been one of the very rare occasions in my connection with the film industry when my patrons have come to the box-office after the show to express their congratulations on the performance."

Brenon Maps Out Campaign While in Hospital

Is in Constant Telephone Communication with His Studio at Hudson Heights—Writing to Many Exhibitors of Country

FROM a bed in the Post Graduate Hospital Herbert Brenon has been busily engaged in mapping out his producing campaign for the next few months.

It is characteristic of the producer that he is not wasting a single moment of his enforced rest, following an operation for appendicitis. Almost from the moment of the operation he has been in telephone connection with his Studio at Hudson Heights, N. J., where everything has been prepared to complete Rupert Hughes' mystery romance, "Empty Pockets," as speedily as possible when the producer returns to work.

Despite—or possibly because of—Mr. Brenon's restless desire to get back to work, his convalescence has been rapid. In fact, the director felt so well last week that he was persuaded from leaving the hospital with difficulty. Mr. Brenon has mapped out his forthcoming productions of Hall Caine's novel, "The Woman Thou Gavest me," and he is naturally anxious to get back in harness again. He is still undetermined upon the star who will play the big feminine character role, a part running the whole emotional gamut.

Edward Knoblock's "Kismet," with Otis Skinner making his screen debut, awaits the completion of the Hall Caine visualization. Mr. Brenon has promised to make the coming year—his first as an absolutely independent producer—the biggest of his career. No mere operation for appendicitis can stop him.

Mr. Brenon has adopted a policy of getting into direct and personal touch with exhibitors throughout the country by means of letters. The director is keeping up a big correspondence from his hospital cot. In fact, some of the most cheering letters Mr. Brenon has received during his convalescence were business communications from theatre managers throughout the country anent the way "The Lone Wolf" is being received. Mr. Brenon believes that this personal study of the needs and desires of exhibitors will be a vital factor in the progress of his producing corporation during the coming year.

Many letters have been coming from exhibitors regarding the capture of Otis Skinner and "Kismet" for the screen, proving the great popularity of Mr. Skinner in "the provinces." "Skinner and 'Kismet' will be the biggest bet of the year," wrote one theatre manager. "It will be a super-feature really deserving the name."

Another aid in the director's convalescence has been the success of "The Fall of the Romanoffs," Mr. Brenon's last production, at the Broadway theatre. The historical picture-drama has been doing absolutely capacity business since its premiere. It will run a third week at the Broadway and then move to a bigger theatre.

William I. Sherrill

Consolidated to Distribute for Ivan in South

William Oldknow, of Consolidated Exchange, Atlanta, Ga., has concluded arrangements whereby the exchange becomes the distributing center for Ivan Film productions in the Southern districts. Mr. Oldknow has theatres in New Orleans, Dallas, Oklahoma City and El Paso.

Beginning with "Married in Name Only," all Ivan productions will be handled by Consolidated Exchange in the territory described.

Ohio Film Distributors, Inc., has purchased "Married in Name Only" and reports big business.

Royster Sales Manager for Southern Features

Nat L. Royster announced last week that he has severed his connections with the All-Star Features Company, of Jacksonville, Fla., and has accepted the position of sales manager for the Southern Features Company, of Knoxville, Tenn.

The Southern Features Company covers North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee, and is at present featuring Ivan Abramson's "Enlighten Thy Daughter." W. E. Drummond is general manager of the company.

Hoffman Makes Plain His "Warning to the Industry"

He Elucidates Views on Curtailment in Production Costs, Misunderstood by Editor of Film Newspaper, Who Supposed Foursquare President Advocated "Cheap Pictures"

M. H. HOFFMAN, president of the Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange, has taken issue with the statements recently promulgated by a contemporary film publication. Two articles, a news story in which Mr. Hoffman was quoted extensively, and an editorial wherein the editor took issue with some of Mr. Hoffman's views, called forth a reply from the president of the Foursquare Exchange, in the shape of a letter addressed to the editor of that publication. In this communication, which appears below, Mr. Hoffman has explained in detail the reasons on which he has based his conclusions regarding the conditions of the industry. His letter is as follows:

"YOUR broad policy of giving space to beliefs in which you did not concur is to be admired, because it is such attitude on the part of so authoritative a publication that stimulates the progress of the industry it represents.

"Hovever, there appears to be a misunderstanding, or a misinterpretation, of those portions of my interview with which you disagreed. I desire, therefore, to endeavor to correct the erroneous impression created because you and I really agree concerning the substance of my interview.

"First, my 'warning to the industry' was not an appeal for cheap pictures—as you intimate. When I urged curtailment of extravagance in costs of picture production and distribution the thought farthest from my mind was to gain such ends at the expense of what you designate as 'better pictures.'

"My warning was against extravagance; and I repeat it.

"You say, in your editorial, 'A picture costing $50,000 to $100,000 is entitled to higher rentals than one costing from $5,000 to $10,000.'

"Certainly there is no room for argument on this point. Especially when we both know that a Hoffman-Foursquare picture, to justify the brand, must cost nearer the higher mark you mention than the lower.

"But when you speak of pictures 'costing $100,000' you array yourself alongside my appeal for the checking of dangerous extravagance. Because, even in these days of reckless waste of production expenditure, the majority of 'better pictures' are made for less than $50,000.

"This being an indisputable fact, let us consider your stand for 'higher rentals.'

"Don't you believe that, with the continued prosperity of producer and distributor depending solely upon the ability of the exhibitor to commercially live, that business wisdom (if nothing else) suggests the lowest rentals for 'better pictures' which can be figured?

"Where is the justification, may I ask, for rentals of $3,500 a week, or even $1,000—even for the isolated $100,000 picture?

"Your reference to the moderate charge to the public of such entertainment as that provided by the Strand and Rialto theatres was, doubtless, intended as pointing out an exceptional instance. For, of course, you and I are equally aware that all the Rialtos and Strands throughout the land cater only to a fraction of the millions of motion picture patrons.

"We are not considering such theatres because—with their wonderful programs of music and other features—they are not wholly dependent upon the picture itself. Strictly speaking, they fall outside the motion picture houses which the masses habitually patronize.

"The function of the motion picture is to serve the masses. This means its natural outlet must continue to be through the neighborhood theatre. Such theatres, being in the vast majority, and depending primarily upon the picture (and not elaborate entertainment accessories, for which they are not equipped and are unable to afford) cannot with safety be asked to pay, in rentals, for extravagance practiced by the unwise producer and distributor.

"By all means, let us continue to make better pictures. The exhibitors, both large and small, must have them. And the one thing which insures such pictures to the rank and file of exhibitors is a cessation of production prodigality; of flirting with frenzied finance, so that just rentals, not unjust rentals, may prevail.

"Volume of distribution at reasonable rentals, for which I have continuously fought in preference to limited distribution at needlessly high rentals, will solve the problem. That, and proper economy in production cost—which makes reasonable rentals possible.

"Deny the average exhibitor rentals which he can afford to pay and you automatically compel him to close the doors of his house. He may be progressive, yet what good does his progressiveness do him if the capacity of his theatre will not yield receipts permitting excessive rentals?

"As for the vaudeville end of the question: here again we must consider what confronts us. You speak editorially of '$1 and $2 vaudeville.' One-dollar top, yes; but where are the $2 seats? And remember, please, that Loew, Keith and Proctor, the Orpheum, Pantages and other splendid houses (not to mention those of moderate pretensions) have plenty of 25-cent chairs.

"So, you see, the danger of drifting patronage from motion picture houses to vaudeville is not remote. Put, for only a short time, the better pictures beyond the reach of the average exhibitor and observe the result.

"That is why I plead for reasonable picture rentals for better pictures. Tilt the price in the direction it has gone and the vaudeville manager discovers that an all-vaudeville bill costs less than one in which the picture has previously figured. Nor is it likely to be, as you express it, a 'matter of policy rather than cost.' Cost is the basis of vaudeville managerial estimate, and always will be.

"The nub of the whole thing is this: Having established bookings, retain them. A customer, once lost, is harder to regain than to get the first time. Volume of rentals, at reasonable prices, is the life-blood of the industry. And this is possible only when the exhibitor be considered by going to the fountain-head by applying modern methods as practised by great businesses, which insist that costs of what is produced and distributed shall not be greater than the 'traffic will bear.'"

Dr. Crane Advocates Public Defenders

Among the most ardent advocates of the plan to establish Public Defenders in every municipality which contains a public prosecutor, as outlined in Harry Raver's screen production of "The Public Defender," is Dr. Frank Crane, the well-known editorial writer of the New York Globe.

Dr. Crane is strong for the movement and has written of its progress frequently. Recently in a two column article on the subject he said in part: "If we have a public prosecuting attorney why not a public defender? Is it not as much the business of the state to protect the innocent as it is to convict the guilty? One of the best results of establishing the office of public defender is that it will help to remove the feeling entertained by so many people that the courts are only for the wealthy. This feeling is unfortunately but too well grounded."

Since Dr. Crane first started to write on the establishment of the public defender as an aid to securing real justice for the poor as well as the rich, over nineteen officials of this character have been appointed throughout the United States.

Lubin Opens Branch in Winnipeg

Bert Lubin, recently appointed general manager for Western Canada by Globe Films, Ltd., has opened a branch office in Winnipeg, in the Phœnix Block Building. Mr. Lubin, who will supervise all of the activities of his company in the western territory, has installed R. Rose as manager of the Winnipeg branch.

Lubin will make his own headquarters at Calgary, Canada, and has left for that point to arrange for the establishment of the main offices, through which channels all territorial and exhibition arrangements for Globe Film productions will be handled, embracing the western part of the Dominion.

The company which Lubin represents is rapidly extending the scope of its activities throughout Canada and already numbers among its clients several of the largest theatres of the country. In addition to "The Warrior" starring Maciste, the Italian screen star, and "Redemption" with Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, Globe Films, Ltd., have recently acquired two Metro specials, "The Slacker" with Emily Stevens and "The Call of Her People," featuring Ethel Barrymore.

A contract closed by Mr. Lubin last week whereby the Lyceum theatre of Winnipeg will exhibit the above mentioned screen spectacles, giving each feature a week's run, marks the initial showing of Globe Films in Canada.

As previously announced "The Warrior" will tour the various Canadian provinces as a road show, playing only the biggest theatres and the Lyceum is the first house on the itinerary marked out covering the western territory. Special musical and stage settings will accompany the picture and a crew, consisting of manager, advance man, electrician and operators have been engaged in order to give the spectacle a presentation in keeping with its magnitude.

Southwestern Art Dramas Buys Two Features

The Southwestern Art Dramas, Inc., of which F. M. Sanford is president and manager, has purchased "The Deemster" for Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana, and "The Crisis" for the states of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

In a statement last week Mr. Sanford declared that the two features are conceded by exhibitors in the territory bought to be among the best productions of the past season. Southwestern Art Dramas is being kept busy with inquiries, and an unusually large business is anticipated following the release of the attractions this month.

Woods Buys Interest in Brenon Production

Al H. Woods has purchased from the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation a half interest in Herbert Brenon's feature, "The Fall of the Romanoffs," with Iliodor, which has been running at the Broadway theatre. At the close of its engagement at the Broadway the picture will be shown at another theatre in the Broadway district, it is announced, before it is booked throughout the country.

"Triumph of Venus" from Hesser in November

"THE TRIUMPH OF VENUS," a mythological spectacle dealing with the gods and goddesses of ancient Greece, will be released in November by the Victory Film Manufacturing Company, 107 West Forty-seventh street, New York, of which Edwin Bower Hesser is managing director. Speaking of the production, he said:

"The entire action of the story is laid about five thousand years ago, in the early era of mythology. The ancient Grecian period has supplied a foundation for some of the world's greatest literature, and has endless film possibilities, if a director will take the trouble to seek them out. I have rewritten "The Triumph of Venus" three times in the last few years—it has always been my hope to make an elaborate production of the theme—and greater possibilities have shown themselves with deeper study of the subject and further chances of development.

"The result is a film with not only spectacular qualities, but heart interest, suspense and thrill, while I feel confident that from the standpoint of sheer beauty in settings and photography it will set a new standard.

"It took weeks of work to find an ideal cast. Featured as Venus is Betty Lee, the Southern girl who has won operatic fame, and her leading man is William Sherwood. Phyllis Beveridge as Diana, Grace Hamel as Nea and Hassan Mussalli as Pannas play the other principal parts. Several hundred players, all selected for classic type, appear in the picture. The costuming is absolutely of the period, and most of the picture was filmed in the White Mountains. The cinematographer was Otto Brautigam."

"Struggle Everlasting" Near Completion, Rapf Says

HARRY RAPF announces Florence Reed in the second starring screen vehicle in which she has appeared under his direction. The title of the new screen piece is "The Struggle Everlasting," after the stage success of that name written by Edwin Milton Royle, who has a score of legitimate successes to his credit. "The Struggle Everlasting" is being adapted to the screen by Bennet Musson, who has accumulated like renown as a screen author.

Miss Reed's association with the new Rapf project will in no wise interfere with her playing in the forthcoming "Chu Chin Chow" stage spectacle at the Manhattan Opera House, in which she plays a leading part. In fortifying herself for the ordeal of rhearsing one part and enacting another in a motion picture studio, Miss Reed is practically "living" at the Biograph Studio, in the Bronx, where "The Struggle Everlasting" is undergoing completion for release on the open market plan. Between scenes at the studio she retires from the camera line and perfects her part in "Chu Chin Chow," and her dressing room at the studio is a fully equipped living room, with a bed on one side and typewriter on the other.

Miss Reed and her company have just returned from a strenuous two weeks of outdoor acting at Seal Harbor, Me. James Kirkwood is the director and the company of players consists of Milton Sills, Irving Cummings, E. J. Radcliff, Edwin Hoyt, Albert Hall, Wellington Plater, Fred. C. Jones. The role provided for Miss Reed is that of "Body," which as the name suggests, is allegorical, the play dealing with the control of mind over body.

Gertrude Cameron Star of "Honeymooners"

Gertrude Cameron, formally leading woman with Pathe Freres, where she played opposite Crane Wilbur for some time, has now joined the Peter Pan Film Corporation, where she will appear as Peggy Dare in "The Honeymooners."

She is one of the most beautiful actresses on the screen, and upon the occasion of her marriage a couple of years ago was heralded throughout the country as "The Battleship Bride," because of the fact that she was married on the battleship New York by special permission of Secretary Daniels. At that time her picture appeared on the front page of every big newspaper in the country and she was declared one of the most patriotic girls in the United States. This will be her first appearance on the screen since her marriage. She left New York a few weeks ago for Honolulu, where she is now working on this new release.

After remaining in Honolulu for a month or so, or until the first release is finished, Miss Cameron will continue her journey to Japan, China, India, Egypt and Australia, where new releases will be made. In other words, she will have made a trip around the world before the series is completed, and the time consumed will be about two years.

Becker to Release "Who's Your Neighbor?" Now

S. Rankin Drew's "Who's Your Neighbor?" which was shown to the trade press immediately upon its completion this summer, but which was held back by Herman Becker, general manager of Master Drama Features, Inc., because he thought it best at that time to hold the film until winter before releasing it, will be distributed on the state rights basis beginning at once, through orders of Mr. Becker. The latter has reached the conclusion that amusement conditions as a whole have never been better, and that it would be a waste of time to keep the big picture off the market longer.

Accompanying this announcement was the statement that the picture had been sold for Washington, Oregon, California, Arizona, Nevada, Montana, Utah, New Mexico, Colorado, Idaho, Wyoming and Northern New Jersey.

Herbert Lubin Operated On

Herbert Lubin of General Enterprises, Incorporated, was removed from his home on Saturday last to the Stern Hospital at 365 West End Avenue, New York, suffering from an acute case of appendicitis. An immediate operation was necessary owing to the advanced stage of the disease. This was performed by Doctor William Engel, a noted surgeon, and a bulletin issued following the operation stated that Mr. Lubin had passed successfully through the ordeal and was resting easily.

Globe, Toronto, Buys Two Metros

Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, prominent film executives who have acted as intermediary in several important contractual arrangements during the past few weeks, announced on Monday the successful conclusion of negotiations between Phil Kauffman of Globe Films, Ltd., of Toronto, Canada, and Richard A. Rowland of Metro Pictures, whereby Mr. Kauffman's company becomes the Canadian owners, "The Slacker" and "The Call of Her People."

Edward J. Fisher, Secretary Washington Theatre Managers' Association, Seattle, Wash.

Joseph Muller, First Vice-President Washington Theatre Managers' Association, Seattle, Wash.

Unger to Handle Foursquare Films in Canada

M. H. Hoffman and J. J. Unger have arranged for the distribution of the entire Hoffman-Foursquare product in Canada through the Metro Films Service, whose principal exchanges are situated in Montreal and Toronto.

"This arrangement," said Mr. Hoffman, "could not be more satisfactory if I had installed entire staffs in both Toronto and Montreal exchanges. For Mr. Unger's organization is so well equipped to serve Hoffman-Foursquare Canadian patrons that I would add nothing to what he has, and is preparing to include, in both his exchanges in order to handle our product in the same way we would handle it if we had no affiliations whatsoever."

The first picture to be distributed in Canada will be "The Bar Sinister," "The Sin Woman," "Madame Sherry," "Silent Witness," and "The Fringe of Society."

Much Interest Shown in "Public Defender"

HARRY RAVER has received many offers for his screen production, "The Public Defender," since it was shown early last week at the Hotel Astor. Inquiries as to the method of distribution to be employed have been coming into the Raver offices daily since the premiere in the form of letters, telegrams and, in two instances, cablegrams.

Mr. Raver has all of these propositions under consideration and will shortly make an announcement with respect to how "The Public Defender" will reach the theatregoing public. While the picture is scarcely a week out of the laboratory, over two hundred requests from civic betterment leagues and kindred organizations have been received asking that it be shown in their towns and cities.

These organizations feel that "The Public Defender," according to what they state in their letters, will do a great deal to create a better understanding of the movement which has resulted in the establishment of twenty odd public defenders in the United States. In addition to the idealism of "The Public Defender," it is said to be a particularly entertaining drama of real life as well. Its cast is of the all-star variety, containing Alma Hanlon, Frank Keenan, Robert Edeson and other players of equal repute and drawing powers.

"Junkman" Van Loan Now an Actor

The first publicity man to combine acting with his duties is H. H. Van Loan, who left a few weeks ago for a trip around the world for the Peter Pan Film Corporation, and, who from the latest reports, has reached Honolulu.

The "Junkman," as he is more familiarly known, has enjoyed quite a few adventures during the past two or three years. He has accomplished many things for the sake of publicity for the various firms he has been connected with, but has never posed before a moving picture camera. Only a few months ago, while publicity director for the Universal, he was captured down in the Bahamas, where he was taken for a German spy. It looked pretty gloomy for him until the American Consul came to his rescue and hinted that the United States was very much in need of his presence just then.

It was Van Loan also who put Sarah Bernhardt's artificial limb in the lime-light, at the time the Bluebird company released "Jeanne Dore" in which the great French tragedienne made her screen debut. In fact about the only thing left for him to do was to step in front of the camera and see how it feels to be one of the people he has been writing about, and his many friends, including such well-known scribes as Peter Milne, Ben Grimm, Jack Edwards, James Beecroft, Leslie Mason, Robert Welsh, Charles Condon and innumerable other typewriter lizards, will be much interested in seeing just what kind of a "ham" Van Loan makes of himself.

Accompanying him on his trip, which will include practically every country in the world, are Gertrude Cameron, the famous "Battleship Bride," who is to play the leading role in a series to be known as "The Honeymooners"; Peggy Aldrich, who is also a movie actress and William Aldrich, an expert cameraman, who says he will put the world on film before he returns.

The scenario, which is being written by Van Loan, is a series of one-reelers, each one complete, which will carry the audience entirely around the globe before the final reel is reached. In addition to being unique it will be, it is said, the longest serial ever put out by any film company, as it promises to run 100 weeks.

Klotz Sells to Griever

Joseph S. Klotz, of Klotz and Streimer, during his visit to Chicago closed a contract for "Whither Thou Goest" with Mr. Griever for the states of Illinois, Indiana and southern Wisconsin. Klotz is now at Minneapolis screening "Whither Thou Goest" to prospective buyers for that territory.

Robards Makes Changes in Titling

Willis Robards, who recently brought East the suffrage propaganda picture, "Mothers of Men," has been making changes in the arrangement and titling of the picture, and now has it practically ready for the market.

A short time ago, under arrangements made by his representative, H. J. Shepard, of Shepard and Van Loan, Mr. Robards held a private showing for representatives of the National Woman's Party and the Woman Suffrage Party, in order to get their opinion as to the accurate details of the picture. The two committees were very favorably impressed, and congratulated him upon his work. However, there were several details, most of which lay in the titling, which they felt could be improved.

Mr. Robards accounts for this as owing to the fact that he obtained all his data for his picture from suffragists in the Western States, and that the point of view differs on various questions in various parts of the country.

General Enterprises, Inc., Makes Progress in Foreign Market

The recently established foreign department of General Enterprises, Inc., under the supervision of M. R. Fink, expert market analyst, is making rapid strides in the disposal of the several features which it has undertaken to handle for distribution outside of the United States.

Mr. Fink reports the sale this week of the five-part screen version of "Excuse Me," the Henry W. Savage, Inc., stage of a few years ago, which created a furor during its run at the Gayety theatre in New York. Through the transaction in question, the General Film Company, Ltd., of Canada, become the owners of the Dominion rights to the film.

"Shame" Trade Show Next Week

With his first special production for the open market, "Shame," in the final stages of cutting and titling, John W. Noble announces that Zene Keefe will be seen in the leading role of Mary McDermott, supported by the following players: Niles Welch as Dr. Donald Strong, Jr., Jack Dunn as Dr. Donald Strong, Sr., Lionel Belmore as Farmer Peters, Paul Doucet as Gieuseppi, Joyce Fair as Patricia Smythe and Bell Boone as Gladys Morton.

Jules Burnstein who is taking care of the business arrangements for the new feature hopes to announce its initial showing next week.

Author Aids in Producing Rapf Film

Edwin Milton Royle, the playwright, in the screen version of whose allegorical production, "The Struggle Everlasting," Florence Reed is appearing for Harry Rapf, is at the studio daily, working with Miss Reed and co-operating with Bennett Musson, who is adapting the piece. James Kirkwood is directing the production.

Miss Reed is supported by Milton Sills, Irving Cummings, E. J. Radcliffe, Edwin Hoyt, Albert Hall, Wellington Plater and Fred C. Jones.

Winter Outlook Good, Says Becker, Manager of Master Dramas

"S. RANKIN DREW'S 'Who's Your Neighbor?' was shown to the press immediately upon its completion this summer," says Herman Becker, general manager of Master Drama Features, Inc., who owns the world rights, "but in view of what we thought would be a slight depression through war conditions, I decided to hold the film for territorial sale until winter. But I guessed wrong. Amusement conditions as a whole have never been so good as right now and it would be a mere waste of time to keep a big picture any longer off the market.

"I have a right to speak of 'amusement conditions as a whole.' My interests are not only picture ones but I produce for vaudeville also. The latter connection showed me just what the theatres are doing. A demand for my acts set in. 'Time' suddenly seemed easy to fill, and it was easy to fill for the houses felt a freshened public patronage, due no doubt to the desire of the people to bear their war burdens better.

"Reports from my acts showed that in every district played, the theatres were being better patronized. I believe that the English showed the same reaction to entertainment after they went into the war, but that the theatres did no markedly better business until a full year after the outbreak of the war. Here it has been different, for the public showed the desire of theatrical relaxation almost immediately. So actuated by the facts on hand Mr. Becker has already opened the winter sales campaign of 'Who's Your Neighbor?' and in his sales literature phrases from the MOTION PICTURE NEWS criticism are prominently quoted."

Already Washington, Oregon, California, Arizona, Nevada, Montana, Utah, New Mexico, Colorado, Idaho, Wyoming, north Jersey, have been closed and deals are pending on New York, southern New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Mexico, Porto Rico and several South American countries. The American popularity of the picture is indicated in the endorsement of Robert W. Hebberd.

Among the advertisement aids Mr. Becker lays stress upon are four-color one, three, six and twenty-four sheet lithos by Otis; two styles of window cards and half sheets, eight by ten lobby display photos, twenty to a set; four subjects, twenty-two by twenty-eight, hand colored; thirty subjects, eleven by fourteen, and display frames to match in imitation of genuine Florentine marble; announcement slides and three by ten banners in four colors on extra heavy three-ply canvas; advertising mats from fourteen lines single column to a half page; one and three column newspaper cuts of scenes and players make a striking "reasons why" heralds.

Wolfberg Attractions Opens New Offices in Pittsburgh

THE Harris P. Wolfberg attractions announces that the business of the main office is growing faster than present facilities, and as a result an additional suite of offices on the sixth floor of the Lyceum Building, Pittsburgh, has been opened within the last few days.

Wolfberg's success with Selig's "The Crisis" brought many offers from other producers. His choice of "The Deemster," "On Trial," "Hate" were made only after the most painstaking investigation, he says.

Mr. Wolfberg last week in New York closed contracts for the state rights of "To-day," "The Mad Lover," and "Persuasive Peggy" for Ohio, western Pennsylvania, and West Virginia.

An interesting phase of "The Mad Lover," which features Robert Warwick, is the latter's departure for the Plattsburg encampment immediately after "shooting" the last scene of the picture. "The Mad Lover" is, therefore, Warwick's last picture. He is said to be so deeply interested in the picture that he invested his own money in its production.

Fink on Trip with Two Prints of "Warrior"

In keeping with the interest displayed by buyers and theatre men throughout the country in "The Warrior," the seven part spectacular screen offering exploiting Maciste, star of "Cabiria." Arthur H. Sawyer of General Enterprise, Inc., announced this week that M. R. Fink would leave New York on Tuesday, October 2nd, on a special tour embracing several important cities.

Mr. Fink, a departmental head of General Enterprise, Inc., and an expert market statistician, will carry with him on his trip two copies of "The Warrior," and special screenings of the film spectacle will be held under his direction in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and other cities which occupy important positions in the distribution of motion pictures.

While making the circuit of the abovementioned film centres, the General Enterprises, Inc., representative will, in addition to presenting "The Warrior," arrange for a series of advance showing for the six-part human interest feature, "Mother," produced by George Loane Tucker and recently acquired for state right disposition by McClure Pictures.

In Philadelphia, at the request of several prominent exchange men and leading theatre owners, a private showing will be held in one of the big hotels and arrangements have been made for special orchestral and stage effects in order to give the feature a presentation in keeping with its magnitude.

Because of its distinct military and patriotic flavor, officials high up in the diplomatic corps at Washington have evinced a keen desire to witness "The Warrior" and its unusual scenes of warfare on the Italian front. Mr. Fink, in addition to holding a special show for the buyers in the District of Columbia, may arrange to exhibit the Maciste picture for the benefit of several of the governmental heads in Washington.

The tour is made primarily at the behest of state right buyers in the various cities mentioned who are anxious to scan "The Warrior" personally.

Southern Visitors in a King-Bee

The promoters of the new Liberty Theatre that is being erected in New Orleans were recently the guests of the King-Bee Films Corporation at Bayonne, N. J. They were Ernest Boehringer, theatrical manager; W. Eberhart, a prominent well driller; A. F. Cazedessus, real estate magnate, and Alex Crouchy, Jr., the Mayor of Baton Rouge, La.

Billy West, the star of the King-Bee comedies, was making his entrance in a bar room scene just as the party arrived. At the suggestion of Mr. Boehringer, Arvid E. Gillstrom, the director of these comedies, used the entire party in this scene, and remarked afterwards that they acted more natural than the "extras" who were engaged.

Mayor Crouchy became very much interested in the leading lady and while telling her a funny story, Nat Spitzer got the cameraman to snap two stills of them which should make a very good copy for the papers "down home."

Turner and Dahnken Buy "A Mormon Maid"

Territorial rights on "A Mormon Maid" are being sold rapidly, it is announced. The last two sales to be reported are for southern California and Arizona, by T. L. Tally, head of the Tally Interests, Los Angeles.

Turner and Dahnken, of San Francisco, have secured "A Mormon Maid" for northern California and Nevada. Both purchasers are prominent in the councils of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, and in selecting "A Mormon Maid" they feel that they have taken over a picture which will maintain the standard of excellence which they insist upon in all productions they distribute.

It is very likely that Mae Murray, star in "A Mormon Maid," who is working in California at present, will be present at the initial showings of the picture in San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Negotiations on behalf of the Friedman Enterprises, owners of "A Mormon Maid," and Hiller & Wilk, Inc., their selling agents, were conducted by Benjamin Friedman, head of the Friedman Film Corporation.

Fifth Walt Mason Finished

The A. Kay Company announces that the Filmcraft Corporation, producers of the new Walt Mason stories, has completed the fifth Walt Mason story, entitled "I Remember, I Remember." The final scenes of this picture were taken a week and a half ago, and the entire negative was developed two days later. Addison J. Rothermel, who directed the picture, cut it the earlier part of last week. The picture was ready for screening on Thursday, and was shown to the executive staff of the A. Kay Company on that day.

Metro Releases Five Features During Month of October

FIVE feature productions will be presented by Metro Pictures Corporation during the month of October, as well as the usual quota of Metro-Drew comedies. These are exclusive of the patriotic special production de luxe, "Draft 258," Metro's successor to "The Slacker." This, like "The Slacker," has been directed by William Christy Cabanne and written by him and June Mathis. It is scheduled for early release.

Ethel Barrymore, Harold Lockwood, Emily Stevens, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, and Mme. Petrova are the stars represented in the October output. First on the list is "Paradise Garden," with Harold Lockwood as star, released October 1. This is a screen version of the popular novel of the same name by George Gibbs. Vera Sisson, William Clifford, Lester Cuneo and Virginia Rappae are prominent in the star's support.

"Life's Whirlpool," the October 8 release, has Ethel Barrymore as star. "Life's Whirlpool" is an all-Barrymore production, for it was both written and directed by the star's brother, Lionel Barrymore. It is a five-act Metro wonderplay, presented by B. A. Rolfe.

"A Sleeping Memory" is a seven-act Super-Feature starring Emily Stevens. It is a screen version of E. Phillips Oppenheim's novel of the same name, and has been adapted for the screen by Albert Shelby Le Vino. George D. Baker has directed "A Sleeping Memory," which has been produced under the personal direction of Maxwell Karger. Frank Mills plays oppocsite the star, and the supporting cast includes Walter Horton, Kate Blancke, Mario Majeroni, Richard Thornton and Frank Joyner.

"More Truth than Poetry" is the October 22 release. Mme. Petrova appears in this five-part feature, which has been written by the star herself. It is described as a story within a story. Mahlon Hamilton has the leading masculine role, that of Ashton Blair. Others in the cast are Violet Reed, Harry Burkhardt, William B. Davidson, Charles Martin, Mary Sands and Anthony Merlo. Burton L. King directed.

Prominent People See "The Public Defender"

"The Public Defender" was shown for the first time before an audience at the Hotel Astor, Monday afternoon, October 1. A distinguished assemblage of lawyers and laymen, prominent jurists and civic betterment workers were in attendance. The grand ball room of the Hotel Astor was especially decorated for the occasion.

"The Public Defender" was produced as a screen attraction by Harry Raver. It is based on the idea presented in Mayer C. Goldman's book of the same name. As visualized "The Public Defender," according to opinions freely expressed by those present at the initial showing, possesses all of the properties of an enduring success, and will undoubtedly have a great influence in furthering the movement.

Among the eighteen hundred present at the premiere were the following: Judges Otto Rosalsky, John F. McIntyre, William H. Wadhams, Frederick Kernochan, Chas. W. Appleton, Emil E. Fuchs, Moses H. Grossman, John L. Walsh. Others in attendance were: George Gordon Battle, lawyer; Thos. W. Churchill, president Board of Education, New York; Abraham Levy, lawyer; Irving Putnam, publisher; O. F. Lewis, secretary Prison Reform Association; Rabbi A. K. Anspacher, Edwin S. Stanton, United States District Attorney, and the authors of the story on which "The Public Defender" is founded, Mayer Goldman and Frank W. Harris.

The three stars of the production, Frank Keenan, Alma Hanlon and Robert Edeson, were also present.

Tuckor Productions Proving Very Popular

George Loane Tucker's production of Hall Caine's story, "The Manxman," which recently closed a very successful run at the Criterion theatre, and which is being distributed by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, is booking strongly, it was announced this week.

"The Mother," being distributed by McClure Pictures is, from all accounts, going equally as well, and the Cosmofotofilm Company, Inc., handling "I Believe" on a state rights basis, reports strong competitive bids for unsold territory.

George Loane Tucker is completing a feature starring Mae Marsh for Goldwyn, and it is understood that he will make the second Petrova picture.

The Cosmofotofilm Company last week also reported the sale of California, Utah, Nevada, Arizona, Wyoming, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Colorado and New Mexico to the Deseret Film Company, of Salt Lake City.

Third Howell for Release Nov. 1

"Neptune's Naughty Daughter," the third of the Alice Howell's Century Comedies, will be released November 1. This is a two-reeler, produced under the direction of J. G. Blystone.

In this release Miss Howell is Neptune's not-over-angelic daughter herself. The piece is of the slapstick variety, in which this actress has given such a good account of herself in the past.

"The Woman Thou Gavest Me," by Hall Caine, for Brenon

"THE WOMAN THOU GAVEST ME," by Hall Caine, has been secured for the screen by Herbert Brenon. "The most searching study of the feminine soul in literature," is the way Mr. Brenon describes the novel, which went into many editions.

Hall Caine, it is said, is translated into more languages than any other modern English-writing author except Mark Twain. "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" has been translated into the Bohemian, Danish, Dutch, Finnish, French, Swedish, German, Hungarian, Italian, Japanese, Polish, Russian, Spanish and Yiddish.

The picture will be an important link in Mr. Brenon's singularly ambitious plans for the present year. "The Lone Wolf" and "The Fall of the Romanoffs" were Mr. Brenon's first two contributions to the season. He is now completing Rupert Hughes's mystery story, "Empty Pockets," which will be his first production as an independent producer. Mr. Brenon is now in sole control of the corporation which bears his name. He has just announced "Kismet," with Otis Skinner making his first appearance on the screen in his famous role of the beggar, Hajj. The Hall Caint novel, by the way, will immediately follow "Empty Pockets," preceding "Kismet."

"'The Woman Thou Gavest Me' was not only a best seller in every sense of the word," says Mr. Brenon, in making the announcement, "but it aroused international discussion as a story. Mr. Caine treated religion and divorce without gloves. He selected as his heroine a young and innocent Irish girl. Through ambitious parents the convent-bred girl, who knows nothing of life or the real meaning of marriage, is wedded to a dissipated, middle-aged lord. An insurmountable barrier separates the girl from her dissolute husband, and yet her religion will not admit of a divorce. Finally, real love for another comes into her heart. Caine paints the tragic consequences with a master hand."

Song to Exploit "Mothers of Men"

H. J. Shepard of Shepard and Van Loan, the representative of the Willis Robards feature "Mothers of Men," announces a novel scheme for the exploitation of its suffrage propaganda picture.

Joseph W. Stern, one of the largest music publishers in the business, and one of the most successful in the exploitation of popular songs, is putting out a number written directly around the picture. The music of this march-song has been written by Gus Edwards, whose work never needs any introduction. The words carrying out the thought of the picture are by Will D. Cobb, a lyric writer of well-known ability. It is entitled, like the picture, "Mothers of Men."

The large department stores and also the largest syndicate of five and ten cent stores throughout the country have contracted to display and carry the song, which will be released simultaneously with the picture. It will be sung by prominent cabaret artists, and also on the vaudeville stage over the entire country. In short, everything that can be done to bring it to public notice will be accomplished. A unique cover which has been designed for the music will be used as a twenty-four sheet poster for the picture, so that the two will be definitely connected throughout.

In addition to the above, a popular and well-known author has been engaged to novelize the picture, and that also will be put on the market as an addition to the advertising program. Such a book cannot fail to find instant popularity with the public, for the theme is one which will interest every woman throughout the country, as it answers many questions which have been the subject of hot debate during the past few years.

Hoffman Stops Off in Detroit

Several large deals pending with out-of-town exhibitors in various sections of the country caused the departure, last Friday, of M. H. Hoffman to confer with them in the interest of Hoffman-Foursquare pictures. Detroit being the first place where Mr. Hoffman's presence was required, he spent Saturday in that city and continued his sojourn on the Sabbath following.

His further travels will take him to Chicago—where the Hoffman-Foursquare Exchange has just been started by Branch Manager Frank J. Flaherty—and thence to St. Louis, where Sidney J. Baker presides over the destinies of the adjacent territory.

When he has finished his business in these three cities Mr. Hoffman will look in on the Cincinnati and Cleveland Hoffman-Foursquare Exchanges, and likewise stop off to pay his respects to Theodore C. Bronstetter, in charge of the Pittsburgh Exchange, and conclude his present trip in the Hoffman-Foursquare offices in Philadelphia, where Division Manager Jerome Abrams is establishing a record.

CHICAGO NEWS AND COMMENT

By WILLIAM J. McGRATH

LEAKS IN THE LOOP

With the closing of the Playhouse on October 1, Chicago now has only two movie theatres operating under the full week policy. These are the Ziegfeld and Bijou Dream. At one time during last summer there were ten theatres in the loop showing pictures for a week or more.

Ralph Horsburro, the Chicago young man who was one of those selected as a motion picture type by Violet Mersereau at the Convention last July, is to be given a part in her next Bluebird picture. He has changed his name to Ralph Graves and it is also said that he will be one of Mary MacLane's support in her coming Essanay picture.

Myron M. Stearns, for many years a special contributor to prominent magazines under the name of John Amid, has been engaged by the American Film Company as Assistant Editor of the Scenario Department.

Chas. Preigh, well-known advertising man, has joined the Burnet-Kuhn Advertising Company force.

A. H. Redding of Valparaiso, Indiana, a former veteran camera man of the Edison Company, dropped into the Enterprise optical factory last week and purchased a full outfit and equipment for the taking of special scenes to go with a coming lecture tour he is to make.

Chas. Bass of the Bass Camera Company, reports that business is on the boom for motion picture cameras and supplies throughout the entire country. Norman A. Howes, president of the Pathescope Company, Canada, was in Chicago last week and purchased new equipment from the Bass Company.

The Rothacker plant has a very busy appearance these days. Besides a score of commercial jobs that the force is being kept busy upon, the Wholesome Film Company are making their "Charlotte" picture there.

Fred Linick, chief salesman for the Unity Photoplay Company, uses a flivver to make his rounds. Fred says that it saves time. Manager Mintz of Unity tells a story right on top of that declaration that four hours were consumed one night last week in a far end of the town cranking Mr. Ford's product.

Bryant Washburn is bidding good-bye to all his Chicago friends and admirers, and they are legion. He has gone to the Coast to begin work for the Pathe Company.

Orders for the American Projectoscope have rather swamped the plant recently. The first of the new model came out of the factory ten days ago. The Educational Equipment Company of New York has ordered six of the same machines for delivery as soon as they can be turned out.

Edward Silverman, Chicago manager of Butterfly Pictures, has just returned from New York.

Wm. C. Cook, for a long time the right hand man of Manager Goldstein of the Artcraft branch office here, has been made sales manager of the local Paramount-Artcraft office.

The report was abroad in the loop last Friday that Manager Seery of Select Pictures had resigned. Mr. Seery but recently left Triangle to take over the local managership for Select. He could not be reached to confirm the rumor.

Another rumor on the street here is to the effect that Pathe are now fishing to land Helen Holmes among their quota of stars.

Manager Eckhardt, of the Fox office here, has secured affidavits from twenty-five to thirty exhibitors in Chicago claiming that every single one of their patrons who have thus far seen "The Spy," have commended the picture and expressed their delight.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Orpheum theatre on State street will hereafter house all the big film productions for the Loop. The policy will be a three-day run for each picture.

Form Theatre Circuit to Co-operate with Producers

The announcement was made last week of the formation in Chicago of an organization that it is said is planned to fill a long felt want in the motion picture field. It is to be called the Chicago Cinema Circuit. Clyde H. Elliott, for the past two years sales manager for the Paramount Picture Corporation, has resigned to accept the presidency and general managership of the new company.

Interviewed, Mr. Elliott made the following brief statement regarding the plans of the new organization. "Our idea is to accept into this new organization such theatres as are representative of the best in the Middle West, thereby enabling us to co-operate more fully with the various distributing agencies and producers.

"We will not confine our activities to the city of Chicago alone but to the neighboring States as well. There will be direct co-operation between each member enjoying a franchise with us. Our offices will be in the North American Building. Albert Selig is to act as secretary and treasurer."

Pettijohn and Rembusch Arouse Local Exhibitors

At a special meeting called Tuesday afternoon, October 2, forty-five members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association of Chicago met Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the American Exhibitors' Association and Frank J. Rembusch, chairman of the A. E. A. organization committee.

General Manager Pettijohn made a vigorous address to the Chicago exhibitors and told them that they would have to keep awake and on their toes in the future. He told of the work that has been done throughout the country in behalf of the development and organization of the A. E. A. since its beginning last July. He made plain what effort and result was to be expected from the Chicago branch to make up the ultimate success of the Association. He sketched over the events of the previous three weeks during the fight at Washington to stop the ten per cent tax and warned them that now, in face of this effort, the tax had been placed on them and it was up to every member of the Chicago branch to try and get as close to the producers and distributors as possible and evolve some means of eliminating waste and cutting down expenses in order that their businesses could survive in face of the tax.

Fifteen prospective members were at the meeting and Mr. Pettijohn gave a great deal of attention to them, explaining the basis and objective of the A. E. A. The result was that everyone of the fifteen exhibitors signed the membership rolls and paid their first allotment of dues.

Mr. Rembusch also gave the assembled members a heart-to-heart talk on the need of organization. When both officials left Chicago two hours later Mr. Pettijohn carried in his wallet a check for $200 from the local association as their contribution to the national dues.

Louis H. Frank and Maurice Choynski, leaders in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, left Chicago the following day to attend the meeting of the national directorate held in New York.

Two New Theatres Planned

The outlying sections of Chicago are to have two fine motion picture theatres added to their list by next Spring. One is to be on Madison street, near Western avenue, and will have a seating capacity of about 1,500. Lubliner and Trinz have leased the theatre for a ten-year period, commencing April 1, 1918, at an annual rental of $12,000.

The other is to be erected on the northwest corner of Thirty-fifth street and Forest avenue. Alexander Flower is to be the owner. It is to be an 1,800 seat house and is estimated to cost $200,000.

JUST FOR FUN

By LONGACRE

HOLDUPS are frequent occurrences at the Lasky studio in California. Only a short time ago we printed a photograph secured at great risk of life, depicting Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks relieving Al Lichtman of his roll. In the accompanying reproduction, which the cameraman only secured by disguising himself as a lamp post, Mary again gets on the job and relieves Bill Hart of all his Liberty Bonds. Julian Eltinge is fainting at the act and Cashier Theodore Roberts looks helplessly on. Evidently the sight of so much money has seriously turned Doug Fairbanks' head. It can be seen that he is in quite an unusual position.

Pete Schmid says that "use will be appreciated by Uncle Sam," adding that it is a scene from the Liberty Loan picture, "Three Billion in Three Weeks." This goes very well as an excuse for getting it published, but nothing will ever make us believe that it is not the real thing in holdups.

A Bit of Melodrama at the Lasky-Artcraft-Paramount Studio

SCANDAL NOTE

WHILE not engaged in directing pictures, Paul Scardon spends most of his time eating at French restaurants and attending prize fights!

H. H. VAN LOAN, who, it will be remembered, has often graced this page by reason of some law-breaking act, has arrived safely in Honolulu. The trip on the rolling Pacific, has, however, served to stimulate the Van Loan muse to an extent greater than ever before. From a lengthy treatise on the "Proper Method of Approaching the Ship Rail," we pluck the following concise and excellent little paragraph concerning seasickness:

"Seasickness," says Van Loan, "is just exactly what the word is. The sea gets sick and makes everything else sick to see it. Charlie Chaplin and myself, though, would never accumulate this disease, for he, like me, after getting something down hates to part with it. I can't, even through a 'seven' or 'eleven,' much less anything else. The only cure for seasickness is to keep away from the sea."

GEORGE PARDY contends that Larry Reid and ourselves attended a wake the other night. It is false, as the majority of Mr. Pardy's statements are. It was impossible for Larry to take in a wake not being awake himself.

ROCKLIFFE FELLOWES believes he is accomplishing much these days by playing opposite Kitty Gordon in a picture and rehearsing with Grace George for her forthcoming stage play. Next thing Rockliffe will undertake will be to eat breakfast at the North Pole and lunch at the Equator.

NOT so long ago Louise Huff was the ingenue in "Ben Hur." At the first rehearsal Louise was asked to read the lines of her part. The result was hearty laughter by all the other members of the company. Poor Louise was almost hearbroken but obliged the stage manager by reading and re-reading, until he finally asked, "How far below the Mason-Dixon line do you come from?" It seems that the company had not been amused at the way the little lady had read the lines but at her peculiar Southern drawl.

Number 2 of Pat Dowling's series, entitled "How They Did It in the Good Old Days" follows.

Axel Smith, the well-known and justly celebrated daredevil cameraman and producer of motion pictures, had a narrow escape last week. When he asked a vaudeville actress to appear in one of his pictures, the lady became highly insulted and hit him with a leg of the tripod of his camera, which she pried off in her rage. Axel, who declares he is something of a prophet, fired a parting shot at the actress as he was going hurriedly down the fire escape, saying that some day she would jump at the chance to receive a regular moving picture salary pay check. It is said, on high authority, that at these words the lady was prostrated.

HOW PICTURES ARE BOOKING

Ruth Clifford Appears in "The Savage," With Monroe Salisbury, a Julian Bluebird Which Goes on the Screen at the Broadway Theatre, New York, October 22.

Theda Bara's "Cleopatra" Booked for Lyric

William Fox's production of "Cleopatra" with Theda Bara in the star part, has been scheduled for a Broadway showing beginning October 15, when the picture will open at the Lyric theatre.

The feature was filmed last Summer in California from a scenario by Adrian Johnson. Its completion, according to Fox, represents the coordinated playing of 30,000 men and women and a large expenditure in the erection of historical cities. Three months were spent in its production under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards.

A fitting musical setting has been arranged to accompany the presentation of the picture.

Paramount Pictures Penetrate to All Points

It will soon be possible, it appears, for Paramount Pictures Corporation to paraphrase England's saying, and declare that "the sun never sets on Paramount Pictures." During the travel itinerary of the past summer, Louis Francis Brown, general manager of the various Burton Holmes enterprises, discovered that Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures had achieved much popularity in such outlying territory as Honolulu, and in Juneau, Alaska—the one on the extreme south, the other on the extreme north. In both these cities, Paramount Pictures are seen regularly and are familiar to the amusement-loving public.

Alice Howell Comedies Popular in Canada

Canada has received the Alice Howell-Century comedies very favorably, according to reports made from the State Rights Features head office at Toronto. Two of the best theatres in Ontario—the Strand and Loew's Yonge Street, Toronto, have booked these comedies for an early showing. Many of the smaller exhibitors have also made arrangements to show them in their houses shortly.

Smaller Exhibitors Like Goldwyn Features

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, if its first releases are a criterion, appears to have devised a type of productions holding much pulling power in the smaller cities throughout the country, as well as in the large places where they are first presented.

Reports from exhibitors in the small towns all over the United States and Canada declare that both "Polly of the Circus" and "Baby Mine" are proving popular with audiences and now, while both pictures are just about to enter the first runs in towns of large population not covered in the first three weeks' presentations, there is demand for quick rebookings of both features in houses where they were presented less than a month ago.

Each of the Goldwyn offices is working what is said to be a larger number of prints on all Goldwyn releases than have ever before been called into play simultaneously in the history of the industry.

Fairbanks at Rialto, New York

"The Man from Painted Post," featuring Douglas Fairbanks, was shown at the Rialto, New York, last week. Manager Rothapfel provided adequate music to accompany the picture. Record crowds are reported to have been in evidence at every performance.

The athletic star was seen in quick succession climbing the front of a barn, riding up the slope of a mountain at a seemingly impossible angle, shooting off men's hats, killing desperadoes with either hand, engaging in a desperate gun battle, jumping fifteen feet into a saddle and finally rescuing a school teacher from the clutches of a bad man and making her his bride. The picture was stirring.

Paramount Furnishes Book on "Who Is Number One?"

Paramount is sending to exhibitors and exchanges this week one of the most comprehensive campaign books ever issued on a serial. The book tells everything about "Who Is 'Number One?'" the Paramount serial, that the exhibitor wants to know. An artistic double-page spread shows scenes from the fifteen-episode serial. Another page is filled with miniatures of a few of the newspaper ads that will be used in the campaign. A small reproduction of Frederic Dorr Steele's twenty-four sheet poster, that will be posted by Paramount in 150 cities, illustrates the article outlining the billboard campaign. Other pages are devoted to Anna Katharine Green, who wrote the story, which is to appear in full in America's newspapers, and to Kathleen Clifford, star of "Who Is 'Number One'?"

Comment Convinces Distributor

A good sign that pictures are being heartily received by exhibitors and their patrons is clearly demonstrated when they favorably comment on the pictures when sending a check for the booking. A notation to that effect was received on the bottom of a receipted bill from L. L. Levine of the Regent theatre, Fulton street, Brooklyn, New York, by Mr. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Film Corporation of America. This is only one of many letters that are received at our offices praising our productions, said Mr. Hammons.

"The Benefactor" Held Over at Strand Theatre

"The Benefactor," a film of the life of Thomas Edison, his experiments and inventions, which was scheduled for presentation at the Strand theatre last week, has been held over and will be shown on the screen this week, when Margaret Clark's feature, "Bab's Diary," will be the principal photoplay feature.

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

ALL three Thomas H. Ince producing companies are at work on new subjects. Every unit has its individual producing studio. Charles Ray, under the direction of Victor Schertzinger, is at the Edendale plant, recently leased from the Selig Company. Dorothy Dalton, under the direction of Roy Neill, is busy at the Girard and George Street Studio, and William S. Hart and the horse opera troop are at the studio now known as "The William S. Hart Studio," which was formerly the Mabel Normand plant. The studios are from three to five miles apart, and supervision of these by Thomas H. Ince keeps the consumption of gasoline at the maximum. Business Manager E. H. Allen is having a private telephone system installed which will connect the several plants.

Julian Josephson is a new member of the Thomas H. Ince scenario staff, and author of the next Charles Ray picture. This story pertains to the experiences of a young man who encounters many difficulties in securing an education and burns the midnight oil in order to pass the examination of an agricultural college.

The second Dorothy Dalton Ince-Paramount is well along in production. It gives Miss Dalton the opportunity for the display of a very wonderful array of new gowns, for up to this time she is accredited with saying she has spent six hours before the camera, and three weeks before her dressmaker.

Minter Company in San Francisco

Three American Mutual star pictures are now in production. Two of the organizations are busy this week working in Santa Barbara, and the third, that of Mary Miles Minter, directed by Henry King, is in San Francisco.

William Russell is now busy taking the star role in "A Night in New York," being the experiences of a small Maine railroad station agent on a trip to the great White Way. The supporting cast for Russell includes Francelia Billington in the opposite lead, Harvey Clark in the character role, Florence Burton, Edward Peil, Alfred Ferguson, Fredrick Vroom and Carl Stockdale. Exteriors for the New York scenes were made in Los Angeles by the company last week, when Director Edward Sloman was here and spent ten days.

First of New Series Titled

J. R. Crone, studio manager at the American plant, also announces complete cast for the Marguerita Fischer production to be made at the American Studio. The working title of this photoplay is "A Daughter of Joan," and will be the first of a series of pictures in which Miss Fischer will appear, according to a long term contract made by President S. S. Hutchinson with Miss Fischer while he was on the Coast.

This subject gives the former star of the Pollard screen plays the role of a daughter of an army officer. The plot portrays her desire or wish that she were a boy so that she could serve actively in the aid of the country. Jack Mower, who appeared opposite Miss Fischer in several of the Pollard Photoplays, has been placed under contract by Mr. Hutchinson to appear in the coming series. L. C. Shumway and Hal Clements are other principals of the cast.

Mary Miles Minter is working at San Francisco under the direction of Henry King in a subject at present known as "The Mate of the Sally Ann," adapted from the Henry Albert Phillips story by Elizabeth Mahoney. This is a tale of the sea, the plot being laid about the wreck of an old ship. The company spent considerable time in searching for locations for this film. It is estimated Director Henry King traveled fifteen hundred miles by auto to find the desirable old ship that could be used. Alan Forrest plays the lead opposite Miss Minter. Others in the cast are George Periolat, Jack Connolly and Adele Farrington.

New American Players

There are a number of new faces on the American lot now. Edward Peil has just returned to that studio, and Jack Connolly, well known on the screen, has been engaged for the Mary Miles Minter Company. Daniel F. Whitcomb is again with the American in the capacity of scenario writer. He is the author of a number of American releases. L. C. Shumway, former Universal and Lubin leading man, has been engaged by Studio Manager J. R. Crone, and another new member of the American organization is Hal Clements. He has been with Lasky, Morosco, and other producing organizations of the West Coast. Joseph Von Meter has been engaged as assistant to Director Lloyd Ingraham, who is in charge of directing the Marguerita Fischer productions.

Paramounters All Active

Construction of the new thirty-thousand-dollar inclosed glass stage has been begun at the Lasky Studio, the work at the present time consisting of laying the foundations necessary for the steel construction.

But one company is now working at the Lasky plant. This is under the direction of Wm. C. De Mille, who has Julian Eltinge as star. Florence Vidor, Mabel Van Buren and James Neill have been selected to support Eltinge in this dual role play, which is from an original scenario.

Director George Melford is at Bear Lake with a company headed by Wallace Reid and Ann Little, filming the exteriors of "Nan of Music Mountain," adapted from the Frank H. Spearman novel of the same name.

Two subjects are now in production at the Morosco Studio. Jack Pickford is being featured in one under the direction of William D. Taylor. Robert Thornby is completing the other subject, which has Vivian Martin as star.

Thrillers Filmed by Signal

The Signal Company is home from spending almost three weeks in the Yosemite Valley and the northern part of California, where Director J. P. McGowan filmed some of the most exciting scenes for the coming releases of the Mutual serial, "The Lost Express." In the Yosemite, the wrecking of three coaches and a locomotive by hundreds of tons of earth and stones falling upon them from the side of an overhanging mountain which was dynamited, were successfully filmed without injury to any one. At Sacramento during the California State Fair, Director McGowan and aides staged a head-on collision of locomotives. Upon their return to the studio this week, arrangements were completed for another thriller, which will also show the dynamiting of a large bridge when a train was crossing it.

During the absence of the Signal Company from their Los Angeles Studio, the plant was used by the William Russell Company of the American Studio at Santa Barbara, which has been in Los Angeles filming exteriors and some interior scenes for a comedy-drama laid in New York. The direction is in charge of Edward Sloman.

Barriscale in "Bohemia"

Raymond West is now at work on his first Paralta subject which will have Bessie Barriscale in the featured lead. The scenario for this is by Monte Katterjohn, and a greater number of scenes are laid in the artist colony of Greenwich village. George Fisher and Ed Coxan are other principals of the staff.

Robert Kane, general manager of the Paralta Studios, is shortly to leave for American Lake to enter army training camp, and members of the studio producing staff gave a dinner for him at the Los Angeles Athletic Club, Monday evening, October 1.

Old Time Court Settings in Fox

French court life sets and a great array of men in knickerbockers and powdered wigs are to be seen at the Fox Studio. The cause of this is the filming of a photoplay of that period titled "DuBarry," which will offer Theda Bara in the star role. The subject is being made by J. Gordon Edwards, and well-known Fox players take the important roles.

A new Gladys Brockwell subject, titled "The Awakening," is now in production under Bertram Bracken. This gives Miss Brockwell the role of a modern St. Cecelia. The principals of this cast are Colin Chase, Edward Cecil, Willard Louis and Vivian Rich.

The Franklin Brothers are still working on "The Mikado," and the Richard Stanton Company, which has Enid Markey as star, will finish its production within a few days.

Straighten Out Sunshine Rumors

There have been a number of conflicting rumors concerning the Sunshine Comedies made under the direction of Henry Lehrman. According to a statement made at the Fox Studio, the several companies are to continue with additional players from time to time. The most recent additions to the Lehrman staff are Bobbie Vernon and Gloria Swanson, formerly affiliated with Mack Sennett Keystone.

Gertrude Selby, who was featured in the early Lehrman Fox releases, has returned to that studio, and will be featured again opposite a well-known comedian.

Los Angeles was visited by a thunderstorm and lighening struck the building at the Fox Studio occupied by the publicity and scenario departments. The building caught fire, but the quick work of Tom Mix, who shinned up the columns of the porch, climbed to the roof, tore the burning shingles away with his hands, and had the fire out before any one could get Hollywood central to call the department.

T-Keystone Subjects Ready

The first five Triangle Keystone comedies are nearing completion. First release of these is set for the latter part of October, and is titled "False to the Finish." The story was written by Albert Glassmire, manager of production at the Triangle Keystone Studio, and the direction is in charge of Reggie Morris. Ray Griffin and Myrtle Lynd will be seen in the featured roles. The working title, which in all probability will be retained as the permanent title for the second subject, is "A Soul of a Plumber." Dora Rogers, Fritz Schade, Peggy Pearce and Jack Henderson are the principals in this subject, filmed by Robert Kerr from a story by Anthony Caldeway.

Harry Williams and Walter Fredricks wrote the story for the Harry Williams directed comedy, "Too Many Nieces," which has a cast that includes Mal "Slim" St. Clair, Eddie Gribbon, Dora Rogers, Blanche Payson and Rose Carter.

A travesty on a burlesque show is the fourth subject which as yet has been unnamed, may be known as "The Burlesque Tragedy." Albert Glassmire is also responsible for this story. Herman Raymaker is the director, and the cast includes George H. Binns, Maude Wayne, Dale Fuller, Lloyd Bacon and Frank Bond. A number of expensive sets were built for this including one of a swimming pool.

William Beaudine's first Keystone offering will be released during the week of Thanksgiving, and is titled "Won by a Fowl." This has a number of trick effects, and a cast spoken of as in the superlative degree, for it includes Claire Anderson, Fritz Schade, "Baldy" Belmont, Peggie Pearce and Paddy Maguire. This is another Glassmire story.

Ten Triangle Units Working

Additions to the Triangle organization making subjects of five reels or more increased the number of producing units now at the studio at Culver City to ten. During the week fully half that number completed subjects, and plans are being made for all ten units to be at work during the coming week.

G. P. Hamilton, who has been identified with the film industry in one way or another since its birth, was added to the directing staff by General Manager H. O. Davis this week. Mr. Hamilton has had a world of experience as producer and writer for the screen. He was one of the organizers of the American Film Company, later was superintendent of studios and laboratories of Essanay, served five years with Biograph in New York and Los Angeles, and for several years was director-general of the St. Louis Motion Picture Company. In the past two years Mr. Hamilton has made a number of independent subjects. The personnel of the company to work under him has not been decided upon.

Julian Johnson Points Out What's What and Why in the New Triangle Studios, H. O. Davis, being the Interested Witness

Frank Borzage is again back to the Triangle, and will direct the filming of five-reel subjects. Recently Borzage directed William Desmond, and left to accept a special engagement at Universal.

The management of the Triangle Studios has engaged Peggy Hamilton, who has been termed "Lucille of the West," to supervise the costume and wardrobe factories.

Filming "Regenerates"—a Drama

Among the new Triangle subjects being filmed at present is one titled "Regenerates," a dramatic photoplay laid in New York City. This is being filmed by E. Mason Hopper, with Walt Whitman and Alma Rueben as principals. Exteriors for one of the beautiful residences, on West Adams street, Los Angeles, are being used, and at the studio a very elaborate setting for the interior of this residence has been completed. The furnishings are said to have cost thousands of dollars.

"Gentility," the story of a young Irish lad who serves as blacksmith in a small village is the photoplay now being made by T. N. Heffron, with William Desmond as star. The plot brings the Irishman to America when he inherits a great fortune from a relative, and in Chicago, where he takes up his residence in a mansion left him, the youth has many experiences of a comedy situation nature.

Director Raymond Wells, who was recently added to Triangle directing staff, has J. Barney Sherry as the featured player in a photoplay to be titled "Fanatics." Sherry is the oldest actor in the sense of continuous service for the Triangle and New York Motion Picture Corporation, and has been seen in releases from these plants for the past six years. Olga Grey, who was formerly with Fine Arts producing units, has been engaged to play opposite Sherry in this subject.

Melodramatic Water Story

The water story being made by Director William Gettins, has been titled, "Everlasting Mercy." Monte Blue and Claire McDowell are the principals of this. The script calls for some extremely melodramatic action, one situation requiring a knife fight with sharks.

Lynn Reynolds is continuing on the out-of-door story, "Up or Down," and has been making scenes on a big cattle ranch near Santa Barbara. George Hernandez is the featured player of the subject.

Within a few days Jack Dillon will have completed "Indiscreet Corrine," which has Olive Thomas as star. She takes the role of a pampered young society girl who seeks adventure by making up as a cafe dancer.

Four Triangle directors are now awaiting new stories. During the past week seven subjects were given the final touches, titles of these being, "Firefly of Tough Luck," "Doing Her Bit," "The Fuel of Life," "The Guardian of El Dorado" and "Easy Money." Three are Western dramas.

Another Western "U" Story

Universal is to make another Western serial which is at present known as "Cody of the Cattle Country" or "The Bull's Eye," and James W. Horne, for more than three years with the Kalem Company, has been engaged as director. Al Cawood will be in charge of the camera, and Art Flaven is assistant director of the new company. Harvey Gates is writing the scenario with the collaboration of Director Horne, and so far the only player selected is Eddie Polo, who will be featured through the serial, which will be of fifteen episodes or thirty reels.

Joseph deGrasse is now directing Franklyn Farnum in a comedy drama, and appearing in the star's support will be a number of new people for Universal subjects, as well as former Universal players. Edith Johnson is playing opposite Farnum, and Al Filson, veteran character actor, so long with the Selig forces, takes the character role. Lon Chaney, Sam deGrasse and Howard Crampton are others who make this an all-star aggregation.

Take Night Scenes in City

Practically all of the lighting equipment of Universal City was used in the downtown district of Los Angeles this week when Director Allen Holubar made scenes at night for the coming production, "The Twisted Soul," which has Dorothy Phillips as star. Many motion picture companies have worked on Los Angeles streets. In fact, it is a daily sight, but this is the first time a company has used artificial lighting devices in the downtown section, and the result is reported good. Among other players in this subject are "Brownie" Vernon, Murdock MacQuarrie and a number of other well-known players.

The Universal Xmas number titled "Uncle Oliver's Christmas," has been put in production. Little Zoe Rae, Ella Hall, Emory Johnson and Gretchen Lederer will be members of this cast. The subject will consist of five reels, and is being directed by Elsie Jane Wilson.

Prepare for Japanese Subject

A big staff of Japanese workmen have been busy preparing exterior settings for the Japanese story titled, "Anthony the Absolute," adapted from the Samuel Merwin story of the same name. Practically all scenes in the play are laid in Japan, and thus complete new settings are needed for this production, which has Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury as leads, with W. H. Bainbridge and George McDaniels taking important roles.

Paul C. Hurst is now filming a two-reel railroad drama, "The Frustrated Hold-up," featuring Helen Gibson, together with M. K. Wilson, Raymond Nye and "Hoot" Gibson as principals.

"The Red Ace" serial company, directed by Jacques Jaccard, is now on its thirteenth episode, and "The Phantom Ship" unit, which has Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber as principals, and is directed by Francis Ford, are working on the seventh episode.

Fast Work by Comedy Groups

Four comedy companies are working at U City on as many different subjects. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, directed by Harry Edwards, have during the week filmed the one-reel Nestor, "Bad News."

Director Allen Curtis has made "Villainy and Victory," a Joker, with Gale Henry and William Franey, and Craig Hutchinson has completed the Victor Comedy, "Jumping the Border," which has Dave Morris and Gladys Tennison as leads.

Al Santell is making "Come Across" with Harry Mann and Kathleen O'Connor. The story is by King Vidor. A number of scenes require action on the roof of a downtown building where Billy Rau, comedian, cavorted about on the edge of the cornice, causing a crowd to collect that blocked traffc during the busiest hour of the day.

Pierre Hungate, who for the past year has served as engaging director at Universal City, has been called to the colors, and is taking a short vacation prior to departing for the cantonment at Camp Lewis, American Lake, Washington.

Set Burns—Damage Small

Stuart Paton, director, is again working on multiple reel subjects, the first he has directed since completing "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." The first picture he will make is at present known as "Beloved Jim," and is spoken of as a tale of two Christmases. Harry Carter, for the first time in many months, appears in a straight make-up, and takes the hero role. Playing opposite is Priscilla Dean, and the supporting company includes Joseph Girard, Sidney Dean, Charles Mailes and Frank Deschon. The latter is a well-known comedian of the legitimate stage, and this is one of his first appearances in pictures.

The second Mae Murray production, "Face Value," has a slum atmosphere in the early part of this. The star takes the role of a little waif of the tenement district who overcomes many hardships, and wins her desired place in the world.

The burning of a western set on the big ranch of Universal City, Saturday afternoon, October 29, caused a fire which wrought damages estimated at several hundred dollars. A strong wind was blowing at the time, and sparks were carried to adjacent settings and buildings nearby. The fire department at U City responded quickly, and their speedy action prevented fire spreading badly, and damaging the buildings in that section.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

ASTA NIELSEN, sometimes referred to as Europe's most famous screen star, is visiting in New York at the present time, and is incidentally studying the American film art. It is understood that it is not at all unlikely that the European star will be presented in an American-made screen production within the near future. She has not as yet, it is said, decided whether she will establish a studio of her own or go with some established American film organization. It is known that she has had offers from various film companies, but thus far she has not made any decision for the future. Miss Nielsen's business interests in this country are being looked after by Fred Wingardh, who has taken offices in the Strand Theatre Building.

There seems little doubt that Miss Nielsen, who was born in Denmark and received her film training with the Great Northern Film Company and the International Film Company, the latter of Berlin, will become as popular a screen artist in this country as she is abroad, where she is declared by some to be the world's most versatile film actress.

ONE of the largest and most elaborate ballroom scenes ever taken for motion pictures will be evident in "The Outsider," a forthcoming release under the Metro banner, starring Emmy, Wehlen. The scene was staged at the Metro Studio in Sixty-first street, New York, and the entire sixth floor was given over to the set. William C. Dowlan, who directed the picture, and his assistant, Benjamin S. Kutler, spent whole evenings along Broadway securing more than one hundred girls to take part in the dance scene. The splendor of the scene demanded that the best dancers possible be obtained.

With the taking of the ballroom sets, Mr. Dowlan has about completed his second picture for Metro, and will shortly leave for the Western studio, where he will direct Viola Dana.

CARLYLE BLACKWELL is close upon the four hundredth picture play in which he has had the leading roles during his seven years before the camera. Of course, this number includes many one and two reel productions of the early days, but the aggregate is said to be greater, probably, than that of any other screen star. Mr. Blackwell's next play before reaching the 400 mark is "The Good for Nothing," in which Evelyn Greeley, young leading woman of World-Pictures Brady-Made, is featured.

OLIVE TELL, the Empire-Mutual star, is said to be more than proud of the latest distinction bestowed upon her. She was chosen to represent the city of Lusanne in the Red Cross Pageant, "America," to be held October 5. Aside from her duties as a motion picture star, Miss Tell was busy every minute either rehearsing for the event, superintending the furnishing of her new Fifth avenue apartment where her mother and sister will live with her, or trying on the many gowns for her new play, "Her Sister," calls for.

WESLEY RUGGLES, Vitagraph director and brother of Charles Ruggles, was caught, or rather included, in the draft for the National Army. The summons reached him when he was in the midst of producing "The Agony Column," a forthcoming Blue Ribbon feature. Ruggles wanted to go into the army, but he also wanted to finish his picture and make one other a bigger feature. So he went to the commissioners of his district and related his troubles and desires. At first they couldn't see any reason why Ruggles should get an extension of time, so Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph, made a proposition to the commissioners that if they would permit Ruggles to have the extension of time Vitagraph would agree to supply a five-reel feature weekly, free of charge, for showing in the training camps. It went over, and Ruggles got his wish.

A THRILLING riding stunt was performed for scenes in "Blue Jeans," a forthcoming Metro picture starring Viola Dana, under the direction of John H. Collins, at the junction of two picturesque country roads near Roslyn, L. I.

Clifford Bruce and Sally Crute have escaped, in the story, riding one horse, from the old sawmill where they have tied Robert Walker to the carriage of the saw and left him to his fate. The sheriff driving a buckboard is in pursuit. Two roads join, forming a Y. Clifford and Sally come down one road as the sheriff drives down the other. The latter reaches the junction first, and backs the buckboard across the junction point. The pair on horseback dash toward the sheriff, and vault over the buckboard, and are soon swallowed up in the distance. This is said to be only one of many thrillers in "Blue Jeans."

ALICE JOYCE, the Vitagraph star, had a birthday a very few days ago, and among the gifts that came to her was one that was particularly satisfying—because she gave it to herself. Miss Joyce went out about ten or fourteen days ago and added about (deleted) dollars' worth of furs to her already extensive collection, but this apparently did not satisfy her completely. Lida Morris, of the Winter Garden, is authority for the statement that Miss Joyce stepped boldly into a Fifth avenue shop and selected a Russian sable cape for which she paid (deleted again) dollars. This is said to make Miss Joyce's fur collection now complete.

SIR GILBERT PARKER loves children and he has found in Commodore Blackton's charming little ones two very staunch friends and admirers. The Canadian-English author is really a man with a sincere appreciation of the home life and he finds it idealized in the establishment of the man who is producing his novels in film form for Paramount.

"Upon all positive moving picture films (containing a picture ready for projection) sold or leased by the manufacturer, producer or importer, a tax equivalent to one cent per linear foot."

Reduced Footage Is Foreseen

"This means literally a 20 per cent. tax on completed positive, i. e., completed product, which is larger than that imposed upon any other industry engaged in production of any character of goods. The result of this will necessarily be reduced footage—less pictures—and again the net return to the Government from the taxation of corporations will be reduced, because of the lessening of returns as a result of decreased output and more expensive production.

"It is obvious that if the film tax were eliminated the Government would profit to a greater extent by the present schedule of taxation upon incomes and surplus profits of producers and distributors. I cannot but feel that the tax levy as agreed upon by the Conference Committee would be most damaging to the industry, a curtailment of the amusement now recognized as the cheapest and most satisfactory for the people in time of war, and would generally hamper the industry in its efforts to assist the Government in every way possible in this crisis. If the Government could gain by the very destruction of the industry itself, I should not raise my voice. But as it is the industry and the Government both are being hurt and we must all protest."

Exhibitors Protest

American Exhibitors' Association, who has followed the course of the tax bill as affecting the motion picture industry since it was first agitated last summer, makes the suggestion that the Government issue specially prepared tickets, the price for which will include the tax to be paid at the particular theatre for which they are issued. This procedure will in all probability be followed by the proper Government authorities, whichever way arranged.

Mr. Pettijohn gives his opinion in the following interview: "The war tax will cause a great hardship, especially on 10-cent theatres. The motion picture exhibitors of the United States have been most willing to do their bit for Uncle Sam. Their screens have been at the disposal of the Government for war loan, food conservation, Red Cross and other Government propaganda work. I have never heard of a single theatre in the United States refusing to co-operate in this great work.

"I believe that the tax as it now exists will put 25 per cent of the 10-cent houses out of business. Another 25 per cent will take the chance of raising the price, or dropping back to a 5-cent program. And probably 50 per cent will be able to continue a 10-cent program as before. My understanding is that this matter will be regulated in such manner that the tax will be paid by the persons seeking admission.

Report by Exhibitors Urged

"If the Government would print tickets in the sums of 11 cents, 17 cents, 22 cents and 28 cents, and sell these tickets to motion picture exhibitors for 1 cent, 2 cents, 2 cents and 3 cents, it would simplify the detail work at the box-office of the theatres and insure the Government a full return on the tax without a separate checking.

"If every exhibitor in the United States will make a complete report 30 days after the tax goes into effect to the headquarters of either of the exhibitors' organizations it would give some intelligent figures and some basis upon which to base an appeal in December, at least for the exemption of tax on 10-cent admissions.

"The exemption of 5-cent admissions only was in my opinion a mistake. Five, 10, 15 and 25-cent theatres should have been exempted or no theatres should have been exempted. It is not the best thing for a business which is trying to elevate itself to encourage their lowest form of work and place the burden upon those who are trying to raise the standard.

"The prices of food commodities have continually climbed and the prices of almost everything have been advanced. It appears now that admission to motion picture theatres will have to be raised. There is nothing to do between now and next December but make the best of the situation and prepare to intelligently show by carefully compiled figures that the tax on 10-cent theatres should be eliminated in December."

The War Tax

law specifically says that the tax must be paid by the person admitted. This may or may not carry particular significance, but since a law relating to revenue collected by the Federal Government is construed literally, it would seem to convey the fact that the exhibitor has not the choice of collecting the tax from his patron or paying it himself, but he must collect it from the patron.

An important clause in the tax law is the one which exempts admissions, all the proceed of which are used exclusively for the benefit of religious, educational, charitable institutions, societies, organizations or admissions to agricultural fairs.

The above provision is of no particular importance to the exhibitor unless he at some time or other may give his theatre over for the benefit of religious, educational or charitable institutions and then he must remember that all the proceeds must be turned over to such religious, charitable or educational purpose before an exemption under this clause may be claimed.

The term "admission" includes any accommodations and the charges made therefor.

The clause providing for the payment of the tax to the proper Federal authorities (revenue collectors) provides that each person, corporation, partnership or association receiving any of the payments above referred to, "shall collect the amount of the tax, imposed, from the person making such payments." The person, corporation, etc., who receives the tax is obliged to make monthly returns, under oath, in duplicate, and pay the taxes collected, to the collector of internal revenue of the district in which the theatre or principal place of business is located. These returns must contain such detailed information and be made in such a manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

Two Distinct Taxes on Films

The manufacturer and producer will be particularly interested in the clause which provides for a tax on film. All unexposed film is subject to a tax of one-fourth cent on each foot. A tax of one-half cent is placed on positive films ready for projection. This would seem to mean that from the maker of the raw stock to the manufacturer there are two distinct taxes placed on film. The one on the unexposed product and the one on the positive print. Before the film reaches the projection booth of the theatre there has been paid a tax of three-quarters cent on every foot of film which passes over the lens of the projecting machine. Since the taking of a five-reel feature often entails the usage of 20,000 feet of film or more, sometimes less, only 5,000 or 6,000 feet of which is actually used in showing the five-reel picture, the tax means more than it would actually convey at first blush. The raw stock of film comes first under the tax law, each foot of which is subject to a tax of one-fourth cent. This is construed to mean that the film when it leaves the manufacture, not of pictures but of film, is subject to the tax on one-fourth cent. When it arrives at the studio and is run through the camera after the process of "shooting" scenes, then it becomes subject to another tax of one-half cent on every foot. And this clause refers to the positive print not the negative from which the prints are made. That is, this is the construction which the writer places upon this section of the law. It is a question whether this tax will be levied upon the positive film, before said film is "cut" or whether the tax will be levied on that portion of footage which remains after the "cutter" has finished and the picture has been edited and sub-titled.

This is important in view of the fact that there will be quite some difference in the amount of the tax from the producers' standpoint. But the salient point is the fact that upon each print there is a tax of one-half cent on each foot of that print. This means that many of the big companies who send out hundreds of prints each week will be obliged to pay a tax which will run into thousands of dollars every week. Those who have computed the amount to be raised from this particular tax, place the figure at $3,000,000.

THE WORLD MARKET

Havana Distributor Will Handle Mutual Features

THE culmination of a special trip which Adolfo Roca, film importer and distributor of Havana, Cuba, recently made to Chicago, where he conferred with the executive powers of the Mutual Film Corporation, was the confirmation of a contract said to run into six figures whereby Mr. Roca will devote his energies and those of his organization to the distribution of the well known Mutual productions throughout Cuba.

It is understood that the negotiations which were last week brought to a close were started some months ago by the Oceanic Film Corporation and Adolfo Roca with the end in mind of establishing in Havana a proper representation of the different films released under the Mutual banner. Matters were brought to a speedy and successful conclusion when Mr. Roca made the trip to the Windy City.

As a proof of the initial impetus that he is giving to placing Mutual films at the pinnacle of the industry in Cuba, Mr. Roca has made arrangements whereby they will first be shown in the Gran Teatro Fausto, which is in a class with the best motion picture theatres to be found anywhere.

The fact that certain Cuban importers tried to keep American films out of Cuba did not discourage Mr. Roca in the least, and having an appreciation of what the public wants very readily saw in the productions of Mutual just the class of subjects he thinks will appeal to the different elements that make up Cuban audiences.

Express Embargo in New England Hits Films

Beginning October 1 Express Companies Do Not Guarantee Delivery of Films on Time—Famous Players Notifies Exhibitors

A SWEEPING embargo in New England territory on motion picture films, instituted by the express companies, threatens to cause great inconvenience among exchanges and exhibitors in the New England States. As a result of the decision many shows are likely to be held up, while others may be delayed so long that the advertising of the exhibitors may not only be useless but harmful.

To inform the exhibitors thoroughly of developments regarding the situation, the Exhibitors' Service Department of the Famous Players Film Company of New England has sent the following letter to the various theatre managers in New England who use that service: "Having been notified by the express companies that an embargo has been placed on all express shipments of motion picture films, effective on and after October 1, and that on and after that date they will not guarantee delivery of films on time, we are hereby advising you of this condition of things as it concerns our mutual interests.

"The Famous Players Film Company of New England will employ its utmost efforts to have your films reach you in season. We will ship them to you as early as possible but we must waive all responsibility for the delivery of them on time, as the embargo is not within our control. If possible we will ship your films a day earlier than usual and we will leave nothing undone that will help to give you timely service in this regard.

"On your part, we request that you use your best endeavors to facilitate movement of films by seeing to it that your films are shipped back on the first train after your last performance.

"Please make certain that return shipments are made promptly and see to it that the films are put aboard the train. Careful co-operation in this matter is absolutely necessary. Be assured that we will do our part and that we will appreciate your help."

Italian Syndicate to Promote Film Exports

The current issue of Commerce Reports, published at Washington, carries the announcement that a syndicate has been formed at Genoa, Italy, for the purpose of exporting films. It is understood that the leading Italian firms interested in the developments of the commerce and exports of Italian cinematographic products have taken part in the project, and that the syndicate proposes to promote such exports especially to the markets of North and South America.

The newly formed syndicate is said to have the financial backing of one of the principal Italian banking institutions.

Inter-Ocean Sells Russian Films for Canada

Guy S. Schlesinger, of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, has announced that "Kerensky in the Russian Revolution of 1917," the state right feature being exploited for Inter-Ocean by M. S. Epstein, has been sold for the Dominion of Canada. Charles Stevens, general manager of Super Features, Ltd., is the purchaser.

During his recent trip in Canada Mr. Schlesinger spent a few days with his brothers, Richard and Mayer, who operate the Royal Alexander Theatre at Lachine, Quebec.

Victor Moore Comedies Land New Bookings

The Victor Moore Klever Komedies have been booked in the William Fox and Marcus Loew theatres and the Max Spiegel New Newark Theatre at Newark, N. J. It is also announced the rights for these comedies have been disposed for Scandinavia and Russia.

Vogel Buys Foreign Rights to Chaplin Films

William M. Vogel, who recently returned from a two years' stay in Australia, where he was handling World and Metro pictures, has purchased from the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., the foreign rights to Charlie Chaplin's forthcoming comedies.

Mr. Vogel's extensive knowledge of the foreign field has already enabled him to dispose of much of his territory, the rights for England going to the Western Import Company, and those for Australia to Australasian Films, Ltd. He expects to close practically all foreign rights before the release of the first picture and reports record prices all along the line.

Coupon Book Solution to Tax Proposed by Minneapolis Showmen

The coupon book is being proposed by some Minneapolis and St. Paul exhibitors as a partial solution to the problem that has been made by the new war tax bill. While exhibitors are still working on the problem and are undecided whether to raise prices an even 5 cents to meet the situation or take small change and standard system will undoubtedly be adopted.

If it is ruled that the tax applies to the theatre charging 10 cents as well as the others, the coupon book will be advocated as a time saver. The tax on such theatres if it is imposed at all will be 1 cent and nine tickets in a book or block, selling for $1 would save much change making time for the ticket sellers.

The man with a block of tickets in his pocket would also be likely to attend more shows than the man without one. A strip of tickets and carfare home would make the $5 bill safe for the night in some cases. The solution is to be worked out at a meeting of exhibitors.

NEWSY REPORTS FROM ALL SECTIONS

Censor Fuss in New Brunswick Abates Not

The appointment of a member of the New Brunswick Board of Censors is causing some concern to the members of the New Brunswick government. In that province positions on the board of censors are regarded as political plums to be given to men supporting the party in control. Following the recent election two members of the board were dimissed by the government. One of the two men appointed in their place has died and there is a vacancy, which in the ordinary course of events would have gone to a supporter of the dominant political party. Recently, however, a new element has been introduced in the form of the returned soldiers who claim that such public positions should be given to the men who have fought and bled for their country. Accordingly they have named Frederick Hyatt of St. John as their nominee for the vacancy on the censor board and his name has been forwarded to the government. Without waiting for the soldiers, however, the St. John patronage committee of the Provincial Government met to consider the appointment of a political supporter to the position. There were three candidates for the position and the committee did not reach a decision. Now, with the khaki candidate in the field the matter is still further complicated. Meanwhile the censor board is short one member and the exchange men are suffering some inconvenience in consequence.

Motor Truck Service Assures Baltimore Men Film Service

Baltimore motion picture exhibitors have been particularly fortunate in securing their daily film consignments while theatres in all parts of the country have been greatly inconvenienced by delays due to the large railroad shipments of Government materials. The fact that there is a motor-truck film service between Washington and Baltimore has greatly facilitated the handling of photoplays between the two cities and has resulted in little if any delay in the receipt of the shows. The motor-truck service was inaugurated by Frank H. Durkee several years ago. The project was in instantaneous success. Recently it has been necessary to increase the capacity of the service.

Hearst-Pathe News Has Twelve Scenes

Hearst-Pathe News Number 80, announced last week for release, will contribute at least twelve scenes to the current screen.

Among the cities where scenes were "shot" are San Diego, New York, Robertson Rock, Ont.; Plattsburg, N. Y.; New Orleans; Rockford, Ill.; Rapid City, S. D.; San Francisco, Cleveland, Chicago and West Point, N. Y.

Keystone Censors Reject "Skinner's Baby"

Although the drastic Kansas board, and every other censor body in the country, have passed "Skinner's Baby" without a cut, the feature has been turned down by the Pennsylvania Board of Censors after many reviews by the members of that body. When the picture was first presented at the Philadelphia Arcadia, it was rejected by Mr. Niver and Mr. Oberholtzer, of the Board, President Shattuck being out of the city. As the latter had declared a liberal policy when elected, it was hoped he would reverse the decision, but no action was taken, and the picture was counted out. Essanay at once took an appeal to the courts, and the case will be heard in the near future.

Holah Gets Scenes in the Black Hills

C. E. Holah, manager of the Pathe branch office in Omaha, Neb., has returned, with W. T. Warren, Pathe cameraman, from a trip to the Black Hills of South Dakota for scenes. The pair spent four days on the trip and secured not alone many excellent pictures but recreation as well.

Morgan Lithograph to Build in Cleveland

Rialto at Baltimore Starts Children's Matinees

Children's performances are becoming more popular in Baltimore. Another motion picture theatre—the Rialto—has established regular Saturday morning showings of juvenile photoplays.

At these performances a feature is made of the little Mary McAlister pictures.

The Rialto children's performances were arranged by Myer Fox, president of the Linden Amusement Company. and Arthur B. Price, manager of the theatre. The performances have been very successful.

Brooklyn Triangle Reopens with Ogden Feature

The Brooklyn Triangle theatre, which has been closed for a few months during the making of extensive alterations, will reopen Saturday night, October 8, with the initial production of the Ogden Picture Corporation in which Lillian Walker is starred, "The Lust of the Ages." An augmented orchestra will be installed in the Triangle theatre and a full musical score especially prepared for "The Lust of the Ages" will be played during the run of that production.

William S. Hart in "The Narrow Trail"

Thos. H. Ince Productions

A virile drama of the West—stirring in action, new in theme. A "leap in the saddle and away" sort of story, that carries you swiftly from a stage hold-up to a terrific fight in a 'Frisco "honky-tonk"; from a spectacular cowboy race to romance in the wilds of the Nevada mountains. And, incidentally, you see Bill's famous Pinto pony, Fritz, who, cast for an important role in this production, moves faster than the wheels of justice to outwit "Judge Lynch" and help his master win a girl.

"A Man's Law"

(Overland Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

HUMAN, red-blooded, with a wide vein of heart-interest prominent through the structure of its five reels, "A Man's Law," produced by the Overland Film Company, under the derection of Harry Davenport, with Irving Cummings in the featured role and Ruth Sinclair carrying the feminine honors, runs true to nature and presents a photodrama that approaches pretty nearly the pinnacle of entertaining value. It falls short of being a Class A production for the reason that the author has not made possible enough actionable material for five reels of pictures. The director has seen fit to run it to five reels, but in doing so he was obliged to carry some of his scenes, particularly the one showing the pursuit of Vance by La Clerc, to excessive lengths. This fault, however, may be overlooked by the average audience because they are shown some ideal exteriors which portray faithfully the great, wooded, rugged country of the Northwest.

The action moves with dramatic precision. The continuity is not once affected, adversely. The story runs with the smoothness of entertaining fiction and an audience is impressed with the naturalness of it and find themselves living the rugged life of the men and women of the great Northwest.

Irving Cummings presents a strong, whole-souled man of the North. He is cast as a French Canadian and a better type would have been hard to find. Mr. Cummings would have left a more forcible impression and presented a greater naturalness if he had not take such particular care to affect the Broadway "make-up." Ruth Sinclair does some fine work in the leading feminine role. She presents a pretty picture and never allowed herself to "overact" in the scenes which call for strong emotional acting. Arthur Morrison is a good type, a forcible actor and fully appreciates the "heavy" element in dramatics. Roy Applegate stands out as a clever character actor. Baby Applegate, a little tot of four or five years, gives promise of shining in the future. "A Man's Law" is one of those pictures that finds a responsive note in the hearts of all classes and although falling short on actionable material in script, it should leave the screen having left the impression that the greater part of the audience has enjoyed the sixty-odd minutes it has held the screen. The photography, in "spots" is not always perfect. There are few interior sets used.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Ruth (Ruth Sinclair), a young orphan girl, lives with her foster father, who is a drunkard. While in a drunken stupor he assaults her, and she, taking his hunting knife from his belt, stabs him. She leaves the cabin in the North woods, thinking Jim Vance, her foster father (Arthur Morrison), dead. Ruth wanders through the woods and falls exhausted. Jules La Clerc (Irving Cummings), a young mountaineer, is camping in the woods. He hears a cry and finds Ruth, whom he cares for and later marries. They go to the Du Bois settlement and La Clerc and Mackenzie (Roy Applegate), who keeps the general store, pool their resources. The money is placed for safekeeping in the bureau drawer. During the night Vance, who has been driven out of the settlement down the river, enters and steals the money. Ruth hears him and is surprised to face her foster father, whom she thought she had killed. Vance escapes. Mackenzie discovers the loss and suspects La Clerc. La Clerc overhears Vance at the saloon say that he met his old girl the night before. He suspects him of being Ruth's lover and of stealing the money. Ruth keeps the fact a secret. La Clerc starts out on Vance's trail and finds him in the woods, where a fight takes place and Vance is drowned in the river. Ruth explains and she, La Clerc and their child, Baby La Clerc (Baby Applegate) settle down to happiness.

"The Man from Painted Post"

(Artcraft—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE MAN FROM PAINTED POST" fails to present the procession of comedy customary in the majority of Douglas Fairbanks' pictures of the past. Neither does the star perform as many of those feats of agility and athletic prowess as is usually his wont.

Eliminating the similes from an O. Henry short story would seem an analogous practice. Similes aren't the whole of an O. Henry work but oftentimes they are a very large and prominent part of one. And to be sure there is another big asset possessed by Fairbanks aside from his humor and his athletics. That is his personality. "The Man From Painted Post" has as much of that as have the best of his other pictures.

Which fact makes it a very pleasing picture. And the portion of comedy that does appear together with the one or two stunts performed by Fairbanks help liven the action to a degree that surpasses—far surpasses—the usual picture.

And that about sizes up "The Man From Painted Post." The box office statement will tell the rest, the rest being the most important part of all. People may justly expect more of the typical Fairbanks stuff than here presented, they may be a wee bit disappointed that he didn't introduce more laughs and more wild stunts and then again they are apt to pardon the star for taking something of a five reel respite.

Fairbanks himself did the scenario from a story by Jackson Gregory. There is somewhat too much introduction for safety's sake and the subtitles lack the comedy as does the action, otherwise it moves according to the Hoyle of the scenario writer. The star climbs up the side of a barn, leaps through space to the back of his pony and fights a number of cattle rustlers in fitting style. His love affair with the schol teacher is fine, containing a smattering of comedy and his battle of wits with Bull Madden adds more humor.

Eileen Percy is better than ever as the heroine and Frank Campeau makes a thorough villain. Joseph Henaberry directed. The western locations are superb.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Bronson (Herbert Standing), rancher, harassed by cattle thieves, employs Fancy Jim Sherwood (Douglas Fairbanks) to rid the country of them. Fancy Jim arrives at the ranch as a tenderfoot pretending to own the place. He soon discovers the head of the thieves to be Bull Madden (Frank Campeau) and as soon does he discover that the school teacher (Eileen Percy) annoyed by Madden to be the girl he loves. And when finally he succeeds in capturing the villain and rescuing the girl from his clutches, he discovers that he is the man who shot and killed his sister several years ago. So he takes pleasure in handing him over to the law. And the girl, very naturally, is his.

William Lowry, Rhea Haines, Charles Stevens and Monte Blue were wisely selected to carry fairly prominent roles.

"Fighting Odds"

(Goldwyn—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MAXINE ELLIOTT makes her picture debut, incidentally returning before the public after a lapse of a number of years, in Goldwyn's third picture, "Fighting Odds," which is the work of two such illustrious authors as Roi Cooper Megrue and Irvin S. Cobb. It is a story of the business world in which the wife of a double-crossed automobile manufacturer proceeds to double-cross his double-crosser and release her innocent husband from the penitentiary. Quite a familiar plot, all things considered, but it was worthy a trial on the stage as "Under Sentence" and revamped by its authors, it evidently appeared worthy a trial on the motion picture screen.

Miss Elliott's debut has been awaited with some interest, but beyond the pale of her present popularity, which is, of course, based on performances of the past, she can hardly hope to exert any great influence. She is stately, well gowned and able to meet the demands of her part, which as arranged are rather slim. But her absence from the close-up and her maturity seem to shed an air of formality about her, which prevents the intimate feeling extant between the more typical picture star and its audience.

But star would have benefited, and production in general would have reached higher standards had Messrs. Megrue and Cobb given off something better than a revised version of a stage failure to the screen. Poor plays are often screened, and with success but the material in "Fighting Odds" is so inconsistent, so opposed to the general conception of logic that there is a constant conscious or subconscious thought that Megrue and Cobb were constructing an awkward mechanical contrivance to set forth their story, rather than a smooth running, logical, well jointed scenario. There are a number of details that come to mind as faulty in various of its situations, yet the main criticism to be found with it is that none of the characters act as if the authors had credited them with any sense—which indeed they have not. It is without the limits of probability to believe that a large automobile manufacturer, running his plant a la Henry Ford should sign it and his money away to a trust without knowing it even though in the past his business decisions had generally turned on the advice of his wife. And the manner in which the wiley old head of the trust allows himself to be taken in by the wife, doesn't speak much for his intelligence on the face of things.

Aside from the more or less feeble-minded characters, the picture lacks real suspense. Its only real big moment is the arrest of the head of the trust. This is a punch, and a big one, but in its other passages, there is so much subtitular exposition necessary that it seriously ruffles the action's continuity and disturbs the audience.

Allan Dwan, as director, has only succeeded fairly. Many of his scenes lack realism. Hugo Ballin, as art director, has devoted his attentions to realistically plain, though rich, settings and has succeeded admirably. The lighting of the picture was also handled with an eye to realism, but regrettably is often too dim to define the action.

Charles Dalton is a polished villain, doing by far the best acting in the cast. The support, however, maintains a high degree of excellence so Mr. Dalton's outstanding performance is the more to his credit.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Copley (Henry Clive), an automobile manufacturer of Detroit, kind to his employees—a general success in the business world, thanks sometimes to the advice of his wife (Maxine Elliott), is offered the position of president of the Amalgamated Motors Company, a trust, in which the prime mover is John W. Blake (Charles Dalton). Copley against his wife's judgment, accepts the position and only the next day discovers that he has given away control of his business to Blake. Blake maneuvers so that Copley, in his official capacity, is accused and convicted of violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. Mrs. Copley realizes that Blake is the guilty man and sets about to get a paper resting in his safe that will exonerate her husband and convict the villain. Posing as an English widow she obtains an introduction to Blake and subsequently with the assistance of a detective procures the paper and has the satisfaction of seeing Blake land in jail while Copley rightfully goes free.

George Odell, Regan Hugston, William T. Carleton and Eric Hudson complete the supporting cast.

"From London to Laramie"

(Rolin-Pathe—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A HIGHLY comical Lonesome Luke number in which the star is seen as valet to an English lord (Snubs Pollard). The pair arrive in the wild and woolly West and are duly initiated to the ways of six-shooters, bucking bronchos, rough cowboys and the like. This idea always presents any amount of humorous possibilities to the wide awake producer and the Rolin organization have seized upon them with effective results. Luke's experiences with the cowboys while preparing to retire for the night are some of the funniest he has ever had during his very funny screen career.

The support is exceedingly well fitted for the rough and tumble kind of work allotted it. Snubs Pollard makes an uproarious figure of the Englishman and Bebe Daniels is the pretty heroine again. All in all "From London to Laramie" is the sort of comedy that should get over anywhere.

"The Princess of Park Row"

(Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"THE PRINCESS OF PARK ROW," a five-part Blue Ribbon feature from the Vitagraph Studios, presenting Mildred Manning and Wallace MacDonald in the leading roles, is from the pen of Paul West and developes, with bits of originality, the old idea of the royal princess meeting the very ordinary but good-looking young American and his subsequent heroism in saving her father and herself from the hands of conspirators. Romance, comedy and melodrama—each comes in for its share of reelage and the author has taken particular care to distribute these elements in goodly proportions. The idea is not new and many of the incidents leading up to the happy ending are far-fetched. Through it all runs the improbable. But there is action; there is the romantic vein and there are the melodramatic thrills—these three elements combined, even though based on the improbable, if the improbability does not verge on the farcical. will create a form of photodramatic entertainment that will satisfy all classes of patrons, providing the patron has not been lead to believe that he would see the best production ever projected.

Director Ashley Miller has given Paul West's story a good production. His selection of location developes the ideal. The interior sets are equally good, honorable mention attributed to the scene in the hotel lobby. He has incited good, live, conscientious action in the members of the cast and were it not for the fact that he was obliged to work with the improbable in script material, he would have created a picture verging on to the maximum percentage. The true-to-nature touch that always appeals because it reaches the heart is not much in evidence, but the average audience wants action and melodramatic situations and these two elements, "The Princess of Park Row" has. Without a big star leading the cast, with a good title, excellent photography and some real, exciting moments, this Vitagraph feature can be booked to good advantage for both exhibitor and patron of any neighborhood.

Mildred Manning presents a likable Princess and works before the camera with a grace of action and a noticeable sense of dramatic skill. Wallace MacDonald gives good support. Anne Brody, in the role of Berta, the Princess's maid, is not the type one would expect in attendance on a royal lady. She makes possible a nice bit of comedy. William Dunn and John Costello give average performances in less important supporting roles.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The story opens with a scene of the palace grounds of the King of a small European principality. A plot is revealed disclosing a land swindling game, in which a certain baron obtains mining properties from the people. The accomplice of the baron has fled to America. The King sends Prince Niclos (John Costello) to America to raise money on his collateral. Count Kronski (William Dunn), who is in league with the Baron, accompanies him. The Princess Margot (Mildred Manning) and her maid, Berta (Anne Brody), accompany them.

The Count and the Baron attempt to delay the loan. The Prince is kidnapped and made prisoner. The Princess gets a clue and goes alone to another rendezvous of the conspirators. A newspaper reporter, Tom Kearney (Wallace MacDonald), in search of material for a story, learns that royalty is stopping at one of the hotels. He meets the Princess. He accidently learns that she has gone to an out-of-the-way place and follows her. He is captured. The Princess makes her escape and goes for the police. After thrilling experiences, the reporter and the Princess succeed in defeating the plans of the conspirators. The Princess's father rewards the young reporter by giving his daughter in marriage.

"Anything Once"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

FROM the effete East to the wild West runs a road traveled by many a motion picture comedian, and Franklyn Farnum is the latest one to make the route. The authors, Isola Forrester and Mann Page, are, however, rather incompetent road builders. In fact, along toward the middle of the picture they haven't built at all. And the subsequent events lack a macadamized smoothness. They become jumbled and the smiling comedian does little else but run around in circles, whose radius takes in only a small amount of comedy.

"Anything Once" is amusing at the outset, but in pointed language, it flops at the other end. Not that it is altogether void of laughs. The introduction of the senorita, even though her ultimate place is always a mystery, is responsible for a good portion of comedy, particularly when she pursues Theodore Crosby from house to club, to hotel, and finally to the West. Mr. Farnum's personality is a likeable one and there is not a scene that he does not play with sincerity and appreciation.

William Parker prepared the scenario from Forrester and Page's story and Joseph De Grasse, usually a dramatic director, was in charge of its production. Claire Du Brey as the senorita and Marjory Lawrence as the heroine give creditable accounts of themselves.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Theodore Crosby (Franklyn Farnum) and his cousin (Marjory Lawrence) inherit a western ranch of which they must take possession at once. It is further stipulated that they must marry within six months or lose it. Theodore goes west and after divers experiences discovers that there is a plot to rob him of his inheritance by crooked attorneys, assisted by cattle thieves. How he frustrates this plot, makes friends with the bandits and wins the girl form the concluding reels of the picture.

Mary St. John, Sam De Grasse, Lon Chaney, H. M. Thurston, Raymond Wells, William Dyer and Frank Tokunaga complete the cast.

"The Fatal Ring"

(Pathe—Fifteenth Episode—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AFTER a thrilling get-away, this, the fifteenth episode of "The Fatal Ring," entitled "The Dagger Duel," introduces a pretentious masque ball where are staged further struggles for possession of the Violet Diamond and its precious setting. In the opening scene Tom Carlton rescues Pearl from an automobile which is hanging over a cliff and which Carslake and his men mean to push over the precipice.

Subsequent to this feat of daring the action moves to Pearl's home where the ball is given to announce her engagement with Carlton. Carslake is on hand. He has the precious stone and needs only its setting to make good his plan. He is refuted in his attempt to get it by Carlton. A lively free-for-all ensues before the second reel closes with Pearl again in the clutches of the conspirators.

"The Fibbers"

(Essanay-Perfection Pictures—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE trade looks to Essanay for good five-reel comedies now and "The Fibbers" is still another feather in the head dress of the company's Indian. Even though its opening reels are rather shy about introducing the plot, its last three are so thoroughly amusing and there is such an original kick in the finale that the ultimate impression made is one of complete satisfaction.

Bryant Washburn, who has been seen in some of the best of Essanay's recent offerings, appears in the leading role and by his natural bearing and refined sense of comedy registers every point of his role with good effect. Virginia Valli plays opposite and John Cossar complete the trio of principals.

The production given the picture by Fred Wright is always realistic. He doesn't erect palatial settings to represent the home of a moderately well off couple. He makes his action continuous, using the flash back as seldom as possible. In fact, Mr. Wright's work is meritorious chiefly for what it does not include. He is a director who has a correct idea of the manner in which real people act and succeeds in transferring this idea to the screen.

James W. Adams is author of the story and much credit is due him for the conception of an originally worked out story, with a number of surprises and one which gets over without demanding too much from the imagination of the audience.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Peter Cort (Bryant Washburn) is a fairly successful architect, but not as successful as his wife, Barbara (Virginia Valli), believes him to be. A railroad wrecks occurs near the suburb in which they live and they find themselves burdened with the presence of an injured dope fiend who is quite an expense. They are in despair about their funds. One day, while her husband is at his office, Barbara unearths a play she has written and reads it to their guest, Hope. He advises certain changes and she sends it off to Allen (John Cossar), a producer. The play is accepted. When Peter sees Barbara in company with Allen, his jealousy is aroused. Barbara has refrained from acquainting him with her success because she wants to surprise him. And when Barbara sees Peter with a certain wealthy married lady for whom he is designing a home she in turn is jealous. Domestic relations are strained until each reads of the other's activities in the paper. They return home after the successful premiere of Barbara's play to find their unwelcome guest, Hope, gone. But it turns out that he was once a well-to-do fellow and that it was due to him that Barbara's play was accepted and that Peter received the commission to design the rich lady's house. And so it paid to be charitable after all.

"The Fighting Trail"

(Vitagraph, Serial—Fourth Episode)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

THE fourth episode of Vitagraph's serial, "The Fighting Trail," is titled "The Other Half," and like its predecessors is characterized by "sure-fire" action, clear photography, beautiful stretches of western country and well-kept suspense. Events shape themselves in logical sequence. There are no forced situations. Everything about this episode smacks of western atmosphere. The author has not departed from his original idea nor has he been led astray from the path that is clearly outlined in the serial title. The action moves fast, the characters execute their parts with true appreciation for the situations as they arise. William Duncan and Carol Halloway never forget that they are working in a production that calls for action—swift action—and action that must be interpreted with vitality or in the language of the streets, "pep." The remaining members of the cast, Walter Rogers, George Holt and Joe Ryan are all "on the job." Some good "long shots" are recorded, disclosing natural scenic effects that please.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The outlaws kill Nan Lawton's (Carol Halloway) father and trap Gwyn (William Duncan) and Nan. They offer the two their lives if they will deliver the other half of the chart but they refuse. The two escape through a secret passage and reach the Lost Mine Hotel. Gwyn comes on Van Bleck (Walter Rogers) and accuses him of murder and forces him to admit that Cut Deep (George Holt) has the other half of the chart. He leaves Nan to guard Von Bleck and starts for the Lost Mine Hotel to find Cut Deep. He finds him at the bar and at the point of a pistol forces him to return to the spot where he left Von Bleck. Gwyn gets the paper. Nan and Gwyn then set out for the mine and Nan falls into a torrent in attempting to cross a gorge.

"Shall We Forgive Her?"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is advertised as an adaptation of a highly successful play by Charles Sarver. It is probably very old, too—really the type of play that the motion picture has put out of business. It is a melodrama of the ripest sort. Seemingly the author crammed every conceivable trick into it. Some of them fit in very well and others don't. But at any rate there are too many of them. Too much action! That is seldom the cry, yet it may be shrieked forth in this instance without the use of a muffler. The spectator is refused the chance of fastening his faculties on one line of action before some new card is turned, introducing an element almost foreign to the other.

Beneath this superfluity of action there is a much used and familiar plot of the dutiful wife and loving husband and the black-as-black-can-be villain who looms up to throw the wife's past full in her face. Things are patched up in the end, after the heroine, originally a country girl with a slim education, supplemented by a year in a Western mining camp takes up writing with success, after the hero has gone blind from the shock caused by knowledge of her past, after another woman has done her best to keep them apart and after two mutual friends have made the villain tell the truth.

Arthur Ashley has given the picture a rather scanty production while playing the villain a little too hard at the same time. June Elvidge is a sympathetic heroine and John Bowers a fair enough hero with little to do.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Grace (June Elvidge) goes West to a mining town to join her lifelong sweetheart, Neil (Arthur Ashley) only to find him a drunken sot. She is forced to stay with him or accept the merciless hospitality offered by the barroom, so she chooses the former and lesser of the evils. After a year she makes her escape due the assistance of Stapleton (George MacQuarrie) whom she has rescued from the desert. Arriving in New York she obtains settlement work through an old friend, Rev. Paul Ellsworth (Herbert Barrington). She meets Oliver West (John Bowers) who falls in love with her and they are soon married, he, however, in ignorance of her past. Neil turns up to blackmail her and Joan (Alexandria Carewe), a woman who had loved West previous to his marriage, see that he learns the truth. The shock proves fatal to his eyesight. He orders Grace away from him. With the money realized on her stories Grace pays for an operation on West which is successful. She then calls on Stapleton for assistance. He after giving Neil a sound drubbing forces him to tell the whole truth regarding Grace's sojourn in the West and at this story West is moved to forgive and ask forgiveness.

Charles Charles, Katherine Johnston, Richard Collins and Arthur Matthews have smaller parts.

"The Seven Pearls"

(Pathe—Sixth Episode—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE ABANDONED MINE," the sixth episode of "The Seven Pearls" serial, taken underground as the title implies. Harry (Creighton Hale) and Ilma (Mollie King) are caught in a water tight chamber in the opening scene and with the water rising their fate seems decided until an explosion knocks the bottom out of the chamber. They fall through to an abandoned mine shaft and here signal for help. Perry Mason (Leon Bary) has been knocked unconscious by the fall and when his brain again starts working it misses fire now and again, so Perry is not accountable for his actions.

The three finally find their way into a counterfeiters' den which connects with the shaft and after some tense action has transpired here they finally find themselves free. Perry, in the meantime has been hit on the head again. This blow restores his senses.

"The Girl Who Won Out"

(Butterfly-Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A SERIES of light scenes concerning the wanderings of two orphans comprises "The Girl Who Won Out." Violet MacMillan is featured as Nancy Grimm, the older sister. The various subterfuges she employs to throw the detectives from the children's home off her track and how she finally finds happiness form a story of mild interest.

Further than this, however, the picture does not go. It makes no attempt to show any strong dramatic or sustaining qualities and whatever interest it will evoke will be more or less spasmodic and measured by the degree in which Miss MacMillan pleases her audience. She dons boy's clothes and proceeds to fool a number of her co-players but doesn't make a very convincing boy in the public's eye.

The story is by Judge Willis Brown. C. J. Wilson, Jr., wrote the continuity and Eugent Moore directed. The atmosphere is good and the photography entirely satisfactory.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Nancy (Violet MacMillan) and Ellen Grimm (Barbara Conley) are left alone after the death of their mother. They are taken to the orphanage and after a while Ellen goes to a rich home and Nancy to a poor one, where she is maid of all work. Running away she dons boy's attire, kidnaps her sister and attempts to earn a living. The authorities find the younger child. Nancy goes to Noble (P. L. Pembroke), with whom she has some slight acquaintance and it is through him that both children are adopted by his parents.

Mrs. A. E. Witting, Charles H. Mailes, Gertrude Aster, L. M. Wells and Sherman Bainbridge complete the cast.

"The Ghost House"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

BEULAH MARIE DIX conceived an extraordinary clever comedy in "The Ghost House," in which Jack Pickford and Louise Huff are starred. The main action is staged in a "haunted" house. Into this a family has just moved consisting of a young girl, her widowed sister and the latter's baby. And on the same evening a burglar decides to hide in the house with his loot and the young hero is forced to abide there by order of a college fraternity of which he is a prospective member.

With each one of these parties on the lookout for ghosts, the results of that one evening may be partially imagined. The many twists which Miss Dix has injected serve to bring a continuous line of comedy to "The Ghost House." It is impossible to give a fair idea of the detailed action in cold type but it can safely be said that it deserves only the highest praise. It is worked out with all the ingenuity and smoothness of a stage play—in fact, a theatrical producer might well turn to it for serious consideration.

Mr. Pickford and Miss Huff, a team whose merit has never been overrated, perform excellently in the principal roles and their support is of the same high order. William C. De Mille directed. His work effectively brings out the high lights of the story. There are some unusual shots and the manner in which he has used light to accentuate a situation is commendable to the last.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Lois Atwell (Louise Huff), her widowed sister (Olga Grey) and her child inherit a home on the edge of the village generally known as the Ghost House. They take possession on the same night that Ted Rawson (Jack Pickford) is exploring the place under orders from his fraternity. A burglar (Eugene Pallette) son of the old keeper (James Neill) hides there with his loot. The keeper is the one who has circulated the stories about the ghosts as he finds the house a fine rendevous for his band. In the middle of the night Lois apprehends Ted and believing him a burglar makes him captive. The burglar, hearing and seeing the others and believing the house actually haunted flees, leaving the loot. When the baby is taken sick Ted offers his services and proves such a friend that Lois lets him go in the morning. The burglar and his pals return for the loot just after Lois had accused Ted of being the robber. He fights the trio until help arrives and then makes known his identity.

Mrs. Lewis McCord, Horace B. Carpenter, Edythe Chapman and Lillian Leighton complete the cast.

"The Torture of Silence"

(Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE TORTURE OF SILENCE" is a French made picture in which everything from story to production appears typically foreign. There is a single big situation dealt with throughout the five reels—the one in which the woman attempts to shield from her husband her altogether innocent though foolish past. This is offered small elaboration in the way of incident. Whatever strength it possesses is derived from the emotional performances given by the two principals.

The picture, when properly subtitled, will probably present an appearance that reaches well up to the average. Some of these subtitles should be made to clear up many of the peculiar acts of the husband, which fall short of being understandable in their present form.

The picture has been carefully staged and there are some scenes where lightning had been employed most effectively. Emmy Lynn as the harassed wife gives a performance full of appeal. Her acting is of a very high grade and during the time she is on the screen she constantly demands the attention.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Martha Courand (Emmy Lynn), neglected by her husband, urges Gallatin, his best friend, both orally and by letter to elope away with her. She goes to his apartment to continue her plea and, refused again, she snatches a gun and attempts to kill herself. Gallatin interferes and in the struggle is mortally wounded. In order to insure Courand's happiness he extracts a promise from Martha and from his servant, Jean, never to tell of the scene. Before he does he writes a note saying that he took his own life. Several years later when the Courand child has grown to be quite a boy, an old letter written by Martha to Gallatin is discovered. It falls into the hands of a blackmailer who brings it to the house demanding money. Courand purchases it and after reading it denounces his wife. He demands her to tell him who the other man in her life was but, remembering her oath, she refuses. He then begins to doubt himself the father of the child. Relations are strained between husband and wife for a long time until Jean, realizing that their happiness is worth more than the memory of the past, tells the whole truth.

"'One Shot' Ross"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"'ONE SHOT' ROSS" was written by Lambert Hillyer and it is not stretching the point at all to say that he has turned out an extraordinarily good story. It makes a big splash among its fellow western pictures, very few of them being able to approach it in originality of treatment and strength of situation. Its central figure was quite obviously modeled to fit the peculiarities of William S. Hart, yet even without such a strong personality it carries suspense and conviction in every scene. Mr. Hillyer has supplied his story with a number of high lights, the which he has strung together in a continuity that to all intents and purposes is flawless.

Roy Stewart carries the title part most satisfactorily. He does the stern bad man stuff to fine effect, reforms in fitting style because of a little child and only goes back to his gunning ways in the defense of virtue. The few scenes in which Mr. Stewart as Ross is supposedly "locoed" are enacted unusually well. Josie Sedgwick makes a good heroine and Jack Richardson is, as ever, the relentless villain.

Cliff Smith has set the story in a realistic western atmosphere. There are some fine long shots of cattle herds, while the tense action, such as shooting and the like, has been treated so that an unusual supply of suspense is derived.

"'One Shot' Ross" can frankly be advertised as a "best bet" and star or no, there will be few if any who leave the theatre dissatisfied.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

"One Shot" Ross (Roy Stewart), who has made Painted Gulch a fairly straight town by using his guns, leaves it after he sees a little girl crying over the body of one of his victims. He resolves not to use the pistols again. While traveling on the stage it is attacked by a gang of robbers led by Jim Butler (Jack Richardson). The horses run away, the coach is turned over an embankment and Ross is cut on the head. Taken to the cabin of old Sheridan (William Ellingford), the doctor fears for his ultimate sanity. Ross is cared for by Nan Sheridan (Josie Sedgwick), on whom Butler looks with envious eyes. Sheridan, while spying on Butler's gang, is shot and killed. Ross feigns feeble mindedness in order to get the goods on Butler, who turns out to be cattle thief as well as general bad man. A furious fight is staged in which Butler finally goes to defeat, Ross afterwards claiming Nan.

Louis Durham, performing well in the part of Ross' companion, and Leo Willis complete the cast.

"Wild Sumac"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE single fault with "Wild Sumac" is that its characters are never established until the final scene. There is a string of climaxes, often entertaining and sometimes carrying a fair degree of force, but generally the observer will find himself rather at sea because of the absence of hero and the lack of proper character drawing.

Perhaps this was Miss Elaine Sterne's idea of deriving suspense and mystery from her story. But there is a void left by the absence of that character called a hero. The French Canadian who claims the girl at last, shot a man in a brawl over a woman and led an innocent youth to drinking and gambling and ultimately his death. It is hardly prudish to exclaim over a hero doing such things usually awarded the heavy of the cast. Then Wild Sumac's guardian, who is thought her father for a long time, mistreats her generally and accuses him of a murder of which he is guilty. Of course the fact that he is not her father seemingly clears up the case, but the explanation comes a little too late.

The final reel discloses some exciting mob scenes when Sumac is about to be burned at the stake by the angry mob. The picture throughout has received capable staging under the direction of William V. Mong, who worked on a continuity done by Jack Cunningham from Miss Sterne's story.

Margery Wilson, George Chesebro and Edwin J. Brady carry the principal parts.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jacques (George Chesebro), having shot a man in a quarrel, finds himself a fugitive from justice in the great Northwest. In another town he meets Wild Sumac (Margery Wilson), who lives with a dishonest old trapper, Lupine (Frank Brownlee), and his squaw. Du Fere (Wilbur Higby), leading citizen of the town, hires Jacques to work on a railroad and puts his son, Pierre (Ray Jackson), in his charge. Jacques takes him to Lupine's house, where he procures liquor and where he plays at cards with Lupine. Lupine being dishonest, Pierre loses his money. Later Pierre learns of Lupine's tactics They fight and the boy is killed. Lupine puts the blame on the child. She is arrested. The populace, under the leadership of a religious fanatic, break into the jail and carry her out, intending to burn her at the stake. She is rescued by Jacques. It is then discovered through the confession of Lupine that she is really Du Fere's niece. Jacques is apprehended by John Lewis (Edwin J. Brady) of the Northwest Mounted. Before he goes to serve his short sentence he has Sumac's promise to marry him on his release.

"Firing Father" and "Jerry in Yodel Land"

(Strand Comedy and Cub Comedy. One Reel Each)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

JAY BELASCO as an automobile salesman arouses the ire of his girl's (Billie Rhodes) father, the result being that Mary is confined to her room. The ardent wooer, however, finds ways and means to circumvent the old man by staging a fake fire, and with his accomplices carrying off the girl bodily. It's a breezy comedy, and exhibitors can make no mistake in booking it. It is scheduled for release Tuesday, Oct. 9.

"Jerry in Yodel Land," a Cub comedy, is about up to the standard of George Ovey's work. He is waylaid by brigands in the Tyrol, and when relieved of his wealth, the brigands adjourn to a cafe to spend the cash, only to find that it is all "moving picture money" and they are forcibly ejected from the place. Jerry's trick bicycle is a novel feature first introduced in this comedy. The release date is Thursday, Oct. 4.

"The Public Defender"

(Harry Raver—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

"THE PUBLIC DEFENDER," in the nature of a propaganda play, presenting an appeal for an official state defender in the courts for those indicted for crime and unable to pay for counsel, falls far short of presenting the interesting photodrama that the strong title would suggest. With wonderful possibilities woven into the story, written by Mayer C. Goldman and Frank W. Harris, members of the New York Bar, and scenarioized by Frederick Rath, the director, Burton King has, apparently, ignored, even the fundamental rules of legal procedure in staging the production, with the result that where the audience has reason to expect strong, convincing action, the characters, handicapped by reason of the fact that they are made to interpret the law in such ridiculous terms as to make even a junior law clerk blush, fail to convince.

Regardless of the means employed, the director has set out to free David Moulton, the accused man. Some of the scenes, all of which disclose the relations between attorney and client, are so far-fetched as to be ridiculous. Can you imagine a reputable attorney such as the character Jerome Martindale, refusing, openingly to examine a single witness in the defense of his client and then to charge the jury in such a loose, unconcerned manner as he does in the court scene? And all of this obviously ridiculous procedure followed when the accused man is, himself, a student of the law.

If these and other shortcomings, of the same nature, in "The Public Defender" can be overlooked by an audience, Harry Raver's production will go over with a "bang" for in the cast of characters are the names of Frank Keenan, Robert Edeson, Alma Hanlon, Florence Short and John Sainpolis—all favorably known to picture lovers. Especially the first two named are trump cards, of box-office value. Frank Keenan in the role of district attorney, has the opportunity to shine in strong character acting and he does so. It is to be regretted that he is made to lower the dignity of the legal profession by advising in his professional capacity as he does. John Sainpolis does unusually good work. Alma Hanlon gives a fair performance in a part for which she is unfitted. Robert Edeson will surprise a good many of his admirers by his failure to present even an average performance. Every one who sees him will be thoroughly convinced that in private life, he does not follow the profession of the law. Others who have minor roles in the supporting cast are, William B. Green, James Sullivan, J. K. Roberts, C. H. Martin, Louis Stearns and John O'Keefe.

The opening scenes promise strong, virile, gripping action and plot material. Until the director makes a farce of the law, "The Public Defender" strikes hard with a "sure-hit" aim. It is to be doubted if the average audience can and will overlook these faults. If they do, the picture will give average satisfaction. The last scene shows a aeroplane in action which makes a strong sensational scene when the action leading up to its introduction, calls for such drastic action. But its introduction in "The Public Defender," incites laughter rather than added excitement. The flight of the aeroplane, the arrival at the death house at the last moment, and the heroine registering exhaustion—all reminds one of "Daredevil" Dick episodes. "The Public Defender" may "go over" big, by virtue of the stars drawing qualities but it will not by virtue of real dramatic worth.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

David Moulton (John Sainpolis) is a law clerk in the office of Robert Murdock (Frank Keenan). Moulton's wife, Rose (Florence Short), is fond of pleasure and a favorite of Murdock's. Moulton sees them together and demands an explanation. He is discharged. Soon after Murdock is elected. District Attorney. Murdock tires of Rose. She becomes acquainted with Leslie Morrison (Louis Sterns), a Wall Street banker. Moulton gets a position in the bank of which Morrison is president. Rose has divorced Moulton, naming Mary Reed (Alma Hanlon), a stenographer in Murdock's office, as corespondent. Rose's extravagance leads to Morrison appropriating bank funds. Fearing the bank examiners will detect him, Morrison asks Rose to return some of the jewels he has given her, so that he can raise money to cover the amount short. Rose refuses, but advises him to throw the blame on one of the clerks in the bank. Morrison fixes the books of the bank, calls the District Attorney and arranges to have Moulton, who is now employed in the bank, accused. Later, Morrison falls down the elevator shaft and is killed. Moulton, who was at the bank working late the night that Morrison is killed, is accused of the murder. He is tried and convicted, Murdock prosecuting the case as District Attorney. Moulton, having no funds, is assigned counsel who takes no interest in his case and makes no effort to defend him. Mary Reed, who loves Moulton, applies to the Governor for a pardon but is refused. The day of the execution nears. The "Public Defender" bill has passed and Arthur Nelson (Robert Edeson) is appointed. Mary sees him and he starts gathering evidence sufficient to assure a new trial. He finds a clue in Moulton's favor and gains a new trial. To stay execution, he races to Judge Holmes's summer lodge in the mountains and gets the order. Mary accompanies him. The Judge convinced, gives Nelson the order. The death house is more than a hundred miles away. The Judge tells Nelson that he has a son in the aviation camp nearby. Nelson drives there and he and Mary are taken in the aeroplane to the death house, arriving in time to save Moulton from the chair.

Rivoli Is Rothapfel's New Theatre

The motion picture theatre in course of erection at the corner of Broadway and Forty-ninth street, scheduled to open in December under the direction of S. L. Rothapfel, will be known as the Rivoli.

Y. M. C. A. Help in Move for Better Films

With the co-operation of P. F. Jerome, director of the Equipment and Supplies division of the National War Work council of the Y. M. C. A.'s of the United States comprehensive plans are being worked out by the National committee for Better Films to take steps in the way of creating organizations of affiliated committees in cities where up to this time there has been but little interest in the Better Films Movement.

The secretaries of various social welfare organizations, it is expected, will take an active part in calling conferences of groups of individuals in each locality looking to the formation of a definite committee which will adopt a program for co-operation with some local exhibitor.

The plan presupposes that exhibitors will welcome the co-operative support thus assured them. The present plan of the committee is to cover the following states systematically:

West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Texas, Oklahoma, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota.

Already correspondence is under way and the outlook is hopeful for active results.

Censors?—Beyond Understanding, Says Judge in Decision

Wanted: Directors who can anticipate the whims of censors' minds. Only tried and proven psychologists with entre into the past and future so-called ideas which wander through the said censorial authority's cerebellums need apply. Bright future guaranteed in as much as those employed need know only concerning dark and empty spaces.

Such, in all truth, might be the advertisement seen in news and trade papers had Justice Murray and a jury in the Third Municipal Court, New York City, not decided in favor of a director in his suit against a certain film concern.

The facts as they were presented were that the director had been engaged to make a picture for the producing concern. He made the picture. Then in stepped the Board of Censors and certain alterations were stipulated, for which action the producers held they would not pay the director for his services, alleging he had guaranteed the picture would pass the censors.

The court decided a censor's mind was beyond understanding, hence no human being could predict its action, and—Q.E.D.—could not be held responsible if the censors disapproved. Verdict for plaintiff, $500.

Italian War Pictures Cause Injunction Suit

For Pitt Theatre Company of Pittsburgh Claims Infringement Is Made on Its "The Italian Battlefront"—Big Damages Asked

ANOTHER injunction suit concerning motion pictures showing scenes of European battlefronts and soldiers in action made its way to the front last week, and at last reports was holding its ground grimly even in the face of the barrage fire of proposed revenue taxes and increased theatre admission prices.

The Fort Pitt Theatre Company, of Pittsburgh, which controls the American tour of the motion pictures being presented under the title of "The Italian Battlefront," is the complaintant, in conjunction with the Italio-North American Commercial Union. The Fort Pitt Company, incensed at what it considers an unjust infringement on its copyrighted title of "The Italian Battlefront," launched a suit in the Southern New York District of the United States District Court to restrain Jack Goldberg and Alexander Stathopoulo from exhibiting or causing to be exhibited a motion picture production called "On the Italian Battlefront." The plaintiffs believe their title worth an enormous sum, and are asking for the alleged infringement, $50,000 damages.

The complaint further declares that the title, "The Italian Battlefront," which was adapted with the consent and upon the authority of the Italian Government, has been copyrighted, and that the Fort Pitt Theatre Company has expended large sums of money in advertising this title, and that they and their licensees, among them the theatrical producers, Sam S. and Lee Shubert, have exhibited this motion picture at such houses as the Forty-fourth street theatre, of New York City, the Auditorium, of Chicago, Tremont theatre, of Boston, Garrick theatre, Philadelphia and elsewhere.

By reason of these presentations together with the extensive advertising of the distributors and the interesting and educational value of these pictures it is declared that "The Italian Battlefront" has been widely and favorably known to the public, and that this title has come to be associated with and to designate the officially approved and sanctioned Italian war pictures.

It is alleged that for the purpose of benefiting from a favorable public opinion which has been created for this production, the defendants have "jointly conspired and concerted together to deceive the public and to deprive the plaintiffs of their just reward and profit by exhibiting a motion picture under the title, 'On the Italian Battlefront,' which picture wrongfully, untruthfully and falsely purports to be scenes taken on the battlefront of the Italian army."

The plaintiffs request the court to enjoin the exhibition of this product, and also its advertising.

The official Italian Government pictures are now being routed throughout the United States in legitimate theatres, at a legitimate scale of prices. They have been highly commended by both press and public.

Injunction Proceedings Over Russian Revolution Pictures

The dispute between the Overland Film Co. and the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation over their respective pictures of the Russian Revolution in which Kerensky is advertised as a prominent figure was heard in the Supreme Court before Justice Cohalan on September 24.

An order was made by the Justice in effect that the Inter-Ocean Co. should not exhibit or advertise the pictures claimed to be owned by the Overland Co., nor should they advertise their Kerensky picture as an official Russian picture or that they had paid the Russian government for it. The Inter-Ocean Co. was authorized to advertise their pictures known as "Kerensky in the Russian Revolution."

"Romanoff" Litigation

In our last issue mention was made of the injunction proceedings commenced by the Iliodor Picture Corporation against the Export & Import Film Co., Inc., and others.

On October 3 a further hearing was had in this matter before Judge Hough in the United States District Court, and the temporary restraining order previously made was continued pending the trial for infringement.

Judge Hough holds that the action is sustainable only as a theatrical infringement of copyright, and that where the title of a play is descriptive it may be part of the right or property covered by the copyright.

Under the decision of the Court the defendants are prevented from using the title, "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs with Iliodor," and from showing any photograph of Iliodor in a costume in which he is shown in the plaintiff's copyrighted photoplay.

Kalem Launches Drive for New Liberty Loan

The Kalem Company has produced in motion pictures an appeal to the public, driving home the urgency of the new Liberty Bond issue and the extraordinary opportunity offered everyone to do his bit. The appeal, placed as a "trailer" on all Kalem films, appeared in motion picture theatres simultaneously with the inauguration of the Government's campaign and will be shown until the Liberty Bond issue is fully subscribed. Their trailer, beautifully lighted and tinted, is a scene of a gray-haired mother bidding goodbye to her two sons, one a marine and the other a color sergeant in the Army. Imposed on the film is the text "She Lends Her Sons." Lend Your Dollars for a Liberty Bond—and Victory!"

Globe Raises Ticket Rate While War Tax Hovers

War, which has never been a respecter of pocket-books, has gone a step further in New York and has piled on the straw that will no doubt break the camel's back, insofar as the relation between film tax, theater prices and amusement seekers is concerned.

Hereafter, when the young man of Manhattan escorts his best girl to the theatre he is going to dig down deeper into his pockets for the coin than he has ever done before. Last week the edict went forth from the Globe theatre to the effect that beginning with Fred Stone's engagement at that house the price of tickets will do a double quick to $3 each in the orchestra section, which is an advance of fifty cents over all former records with the exception of special occasions. On top of this the impending war tax of ten per cent is expected to descend upon the purses of the theatregoers December 1, making a $3 ticket sell at $3.30. And war has caused all this, as well as the tax on films and motion picture theatres.

The action of the Globe in raising admission prices is believed to be the first step toward a general increase in theatre tickets, spreading to the motion picture houses as well as the legitimate.

Landon Joins the Nicholas Power Company

G. W. Landon, well known in New York publicity circles, has joined the Nicholas Power Company as associate advertising manager.

What To Do with Cigarettes and Pennies

1. Pack cigarettes carefully in boxes of 100 (boxes can be secured from local tobacco stores) in which slightly moistened blotters in envelopes are placed to prevent cigarettes from drying.
2. Arrange with the commissary department of the camp where men from your section will go for distributing the cigarettes contributed at your theatre.
3. In case this is impossible, or in case you have superfluous cigarettes, send them by parcel post, carefully packed, directly to Motion Picture News, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.
4. Pennies and other coins collected should be deposited at your bank and a check for the amount sent weekly, made payable to Motion Picture News. These checks will be turned over to the Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund for purchasing tobacco and cigarettes to be sent to our soldiers in France. Receipts for these packages (every 25 cents you send buys 45 cents worth of tobacco) will be sent to you directly by the soldiers who receive them. You will receive a postcard message of thanks directly from the trenches for each 25 cents you contribute.

   For example: If your cash contributions amount to $100 weekly, you will receive 400 cards. These should be displayed in your lobby or, better still, sent out to your mailing list.
5. Keep closely in touch with your local newspaper. Let the editor know your results and urge him to co-operate with you. It will mean more subscribers for his paper—more patrons for your theatre.
6. If you haven't sent for a "Drop a Penny" or a "Drop a Cigarette" card, send for it—NOW!

Ince Makes Another Suggestion to Government

Thomas H. Ince has been very active in war matters, and suggestions he has made to government officials have been highly beneficial and heartily welcomed by several departments. Another suggestion by Mr. Ince which in all probability will be carried out by the government, is the making of motion pictures throughout the country. Relatives and friends of soldiers in France will be gathered together in familiar locations of the soldier boys home towns, and short subjects filmed. Mr. Ince has agreed to finish these pictures at the actual cost to his laboratory, and they are then to be sent to France where they can be shown to the regiments containing soldiers from every town. This move on the part of Mr. Ince will be appreciated.

Chicago Local of A. E. A. Holds Meeting

Seventy-one of the leading exhibitors of Chicago and vicinity turned out October 2 for the meeting which the Chicago local of the American Exhibitors' Association held at its quarters. It was the largest gathering of exhibitors held in the Windy City in several months, and many of the exhibitors who attended were not affiliated with any exhibitors' organization.

Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager of the recently formed association, addressed the meeting, his remarks making such an impression on the assemblage that the local's membership was increased sixteen members.

The Local turned over to the treasury of the National body a check for the annual dues of fifty-one members.

Screen and Stage Folk to Work for Patriotic Bazaar

Theatrical and silent drama professionals will be decidedly active in working for the big U. S. Army and Navy Bazaar which is to be held in Grand Central Palace, October 27 to November 3. This is to be under the auspices of the Army and Navy Field Comfort Committee, and the funds raised will be used for the purchase of comfort packages for our soldiers and sailors at the front and in cantonments. These kits contain tobacco, pipes, cigarette paper, cigarettes, chocolate, shoe laces, shaving cream, soap, tooth paste, and other little knickknacks which are difficult for the man in service to obtain.

Emma Frohman is director of the woman's section. Those who desire to assist in the work, either part or all of their time, are invited to communicate with her at 12 East Forty-sixth street, New York City.

Marguerite Clark in "Bab's Diary" at Strand

Marguerite Clark in her latest Paramount feature, "Bab's Diary," the first screen version of the sub-deb stories, is booked for the Strand in New York this week. It is understood that the two sub-deb features to follow this, with Miss Clark as star, will also be shown at the Strand.

Liberty Loan Campaign in Gaumont Weekly

The campaign for the distribution of the second issue of the Liberty Loan bonds is rapidly progressing all through the country. Gaumont-Mutual Weekly No. 145, which is released on Wednesday, October 10, pictures the opening of this campaign in New York City, where one-tenth of the amount of bonds allotted for that section was subscribed almost at once.

Timely war scenes in this number of the Weekly come from both sides of the Atlantic.

Ernest Shipman Pays Tribute to Producer

Ernest Shipman, who recently announced that he has severed all connections with film producers for the purpose of giving his undivided attention to exploiting a number of features in the open markets of the world, and who has affiliated with Chester Beecroft for the export trade, this week qualified his statement that it is about an even break in responsibility between the producing and exploiting ends of the industry by paying tribute to the creative genius of the producer.

In reference to this assertion that the creator of the product should be entitled to the lion's share of the credit and profits, Shipman said: "This attitude of course refers to the Independent producer, who constructs for the open market. It is somewhere among the unfettered directors that we are more apt to find the masterpieces, whether it evolves a simple problem of every-day American life, or reaches the grand opera heights of filmdom.

"Creative genius requires to be surrounded with the safeguards of practical business, but in such a way as to foster the profits without warping the big thought of the producer.

"It is a far cry from the hopeless amateurish effort to the acme of artistic success; and it is in between these extremes that my work now lies. On one hand, I am dissuading the hopeless effort, or turning it into more profitable channels; and on the other, paving the way for the coming of the masterpiece, of which a certain number will surely reach the screen.

"An eye to the world-wide appeal in the selection of theme is something which should not be overlooked, for while the God of War has temporarily checked some portion of our export trade, he is at least granting us a two-years' franchise for universal manufacture."

Ohio Permits Showing of Fight Films

The Ohio Board of Censorship, at Columbus, has let down the bars in one respect regarding motion pictures. The censors have permitted the exhibition of films showing the Carl Morris-Fred Fulton boxing boat at Canton, O., on Labor Day, and in which prize fight Morris was disqualified for fouling. The Industro-Scientific Film Company, of Cleveland, has been given permission to book the picture into Ohio, and the first exhibition was at the Lyceum theatre in Columbus.

Nebraska League to Entertain Organizer Rogers

Organizer Rogers, of the Nebraska branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, will be the guest of that organization at two meetings scheduled for this month, the first of which will be held in Lincoln within a few days. Exhibitors from all parts of the state are expected at this meeting, following which, according to present plans, there will be a similar one in Omaha. It is understood that Mr. Rogers will spend a week or more calling upon exhibitors throughout the state in the interest of the organization. President H. M. Thomas, of the Nebraska branch, is said to have declared that the membership has never been up to the desired point.

Goldfish Lauds Showmanship of Exhibitors

Declares the Motion Picture Showman Now Equals or Excels His Brother in Legitimate Field in Delivering the Goods

SAMUEL GOLDFISH, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, in a statement last week handed the exhibitors of this country a large bouquet by declaring that the exhibitors are striving harder to gain and are coming nearer to success in attaining the full showmanship values out of their pictures than theatrical managers are obtaining from plays presented in their theatres.

"If you will carefully analyze the situation in the first two hundred cities of America, or several hundred additional towns and cities," says Mr. Goldfish, "you make the following significant discoveries:

"First, you will find that motion picture advertising in the daily newspapers is from two to ten times as great as the advertising of theatrical attractions. This means, of course, that, independently of their natural attraction and popularity with the public, motion pictures are more aggressively exploited than any other forms of amusement ever have been and doubtless ever will be.

"Second, you will discover that the exhibitor, the owner or manager of the motion picture theatre, makes a greater personal effort to gain public attention through the quality of his showmanship, through display of his inventiveness and ingenuity than the theatrical house manager reveals.

"Third, there are more existing channels for the exploitation of motion pictures than ever existed for attracting attention to theatrical attractions. The motion picture is more nearly the universal entertainment than anything else could be because of its fractional cost to the amusement-seeking individual. Stores, shops, industries and individuals lend their aid more quickly to the popularization of pictures than they can or would to the higher priced attractions of the legitimate theatre.

"I venture to say that few managers of any type have ever equalled the recent fine mounting and staging of 'Polly of the Circus' devised by S. Barrett McCormick and Robert Lieber at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis; of Harold Edel, managing director, and his associates at the Strand theatre, New York; of J. A. Quinn at the Rialto theatre, Los Anegeles; of Herschel Stuart at the Old Mill theatre, Dallas, Tex.; W. H. Smythe of the Strand, Seattle, and dozens of others with whose showmanship I am familiar.

"I consider it a fortunate thing for the film drama that there is no wholesale employment of the theatrical system of sending out equipped companies from New York to exhibit pictures to the public of America's towns and cities. If this were the system motion pictures would not today command any serious attention in America or the world at large. The thing that makes them greater and more popular than any other form of entertainment is the vast labor, the thought and the energy expended by individual managers everywhere to make their presentation attractive and challenging to the public."

Lowell Mayor Appears at Opening of Theatre

Strand, Owned by President of New England Metro, Brings Such Crowds Lowell Police Are Called

The new Strand theatre in Lowell, Mass., which was built for Louis B. Mayer, president of the Metro Pictures Corporation of New England and the American Feature Film Company of Boston, celebrated a very auspicious opening, October 1. The Mayor and many other prominent officials of the city, besides more than twenty-five hundred moving picture fans attended.

Nothing like was ever witnessed in Lowell amusement circles before. More than a thousand persons were turned away. Three police officers had been engaged to handle the crowd, but it was found necessary to send in a call for reserves.

Seven o'clock was the advertised time for the sale of seats, but two hours before that time, men and women gathered in front of the box-office seeking admission. By the time the box-office opened the line had extended up Central street, beyond Hurd street, and down the street to the junction of Prescott street.

When the doors were finally opened the theatre quickly filled up and Manager James J. Carroll was forced to discontinue the sale of seats. Every seat had been occupied and provision had been made to accommodate the overflow. It was by far the largest crowd that ever turned out to witness an entertainment in Lowell.

The program proper started twenty minutes after the scheduled time, the first number being a series of patriotic selections by the big twenty-piece Strand Symphony Orchestra, Arthur J. Martel, conductor.

Manager Carroll then appeared on the stage and extended his personal welcome and then introduced Mr. Mayer, owner of the house, who paid a real compliment to the city, in explaining that Lowell was selected for the home of the Strand because it looked like a real live and up-to-date city. Mayor James E. O'Donnell extended his compliments and congratulations to the management of the theatre, and wished them every success in their undertaking.

Jewel Feature Chosen by Defense Society

The American Defense Society has selected the Jewel production of "The Man Without a Country," made by Thanhouser and featuring Florence La Badie and H. E. Herbert, for exhibition in some 200 theatres throughout the country. The screen version of Edward Everett Hale's classic is to be used in connection with a big patriotic drive that the Defense Society is launching to gain recruits for the work that is being carried on in co-operation with the Government.

MAKE-BELIEVE GARDENS; REAL WORK FOR DOGS

Too bad that Alice, when she fell down the well into "the Antipodes," and found herself just four inches small, couldn't have dropped into one of those wonderful Japanese Gardens in miniature (Reel Life, No. 75), which are exact copies of the famous gardens of Nippon. So skillful are the craftsmen who produce these tiny shrubs that they can exhibit trees over a century and a half in age, which measure little over a foot in height and spread.

The dogs of the St. Bernard Hospice have long been justly famous. But new allies in the first aid field are needed, and dogs are now being regularly bred and trained for service at the front. Two years of patient teaching, graduate a dog who can climb and vault, whose scent is accurate, who carries messages back from the front, and who attacks a prisoner only when he attempts to escape.

The Springfield Armory, founded in Washington's time, is to-day doing yeoman service in turning out rifles. A "daily production" clock urges the men to even greater efforts.

TIME'S IRONIES

Had he a prophetic soul, we wonder, that watchmaker of Germany who encased a fine watch in a carefully wrought skull? Not so grim are other examples of the art (Gaumont Reel Life, No. 76). These timepieces from England, France and Holland are beautifully wrought in gold and silver, and highly decorated with enamel and precious stones. Nor are pleasing curiosities lacking. A "Motion Picture Watch" discloses Louis XV and his court moving with the hours across the dial; one elaborate "Table Watch" conceals a music and a snuff box; another contains a landscape and a windmill with arms that turn; on a third, made in Switzerland in 1790, a fountain sends up jets of crystal.

Following this dignified display comes an exhibition of acrobatic cycling by two very clever performers, and finally views of the land whence comes the luscious cantaloup, the Imeprial Valley of California. From this spot alone, two hundred cars of melons start daily, each with its five and a half tons of ice, renewed six times before the melons reach the end of their transcontinental journey.

A NEW OLYMPUS

Glacier, Yosemite, the Yellowstone,—we call them national parks, but we doubt if even the gods of Olympus enjoyed such beauty and grandeur as these American playgrounds afford. "Glacier National Park" (Hearst-Pathe) is a film of remarkable beauty, from the opening view of Triple Divide Mountain, down which waters flow to the Pacific, Hudson Bay, and the Gulf of Mexico, to the final view of Lake McDonald and the rugged peaks that circle it about.

UPSETTING GRAVITY

If Italy should need instruction for her recruits in the art of climbing perpendicular walls, which she probably doesn't, we can furnish a professor of the first rank. This nameless "human caterpillar" (Universal Current Events, No. 21) climbs up the face of a twenty-two-story building in San Francisco almost as easily as you or I would walk up the Statue of Liberty. One catches one's breath at viewing only the screen version of the affair.

Truly we are the world's market. Foreign aviators have found that no wood answers so well for warplanes as the spruce of our Northwest forests, and have come here to urge speed in its delivery. We glimpse them in an Oregon camp, and see the results of their efforts in a busy mill at Juneau, Alaska.

Boats are as urgently needed as aeroplanes. Another big freighter destined for France takes her initial plunge into Lake Erie with a sideways motion that would seem to threaten total immersion.

When word reached Kenneth Alexander, driving an ambulance in France, that his horse Escoba had won the Lexington Futurity, many exciting scenes of which are shown, he promptly cabled the $7,000 purse to the Red Cross. A doubly-honored horse!

A lively and interesting reel this, with a final tribute to International Strength Helping Identical Ideals

THE REAL HAWAII

Poor Hawaii has been so thoroughly slaughtered to make an afternoon tea holiday that all it can emit is the faint tinkle of a ukalele and the rustle of a shredded skirt. Yet Hawaii is a noble land, and we owe a debt of gratitude to the Educational Films Corporation for its latest release, "A Flying Trip Through Hawaii."

Starting on the Hilo Railroad we pass, by a high trestle around the shoulder of a hill, through tropic woods, looking down on beautiful streams and out into the open, where the surf tumbles on the beach hundreds of feet below.

Nimble native boys, startlingly like a certain wooden toy of our childhood, hitch themselves up trees for cocoanuts; sturdier men wade out with throw nets into the surf, bringing out, after a tussle with the buffeting waters, splendid catches of fine fish. To crown the whole, there is a magnificent picture of surf riding, the finest by far that we have ever seen on the screen. The reel is unusual in its vigorous beauty.

SURF AND MOONLIGHT

Always beautiful, with a peculiar wild loveliness by reason of the volcanic rocks that buttress its shores, is the coast of California. From Del Monte, where, in "Historic Monterey" (Educational Film Corporation) we start on the famous Seventeen Mile Drive to Monterey, comes one splendid scene after the other of tumbled waters, surf dashing high over the great, corroded rocks, and a white road curving between twisted cypress trees.

A monument to Commodore Stoat, who took possession of California in 1846 in the name of the United States reminds us of the State's Spanish past.

HAPPY HUNTING GROUNDS

Did you ever read Kipling's story of the Baby Seal, way up in Behring Straits? Do you remember the fights on shore, the great herds going off into the misty seas? Well, here they are, in "Seals and Pelicans in their Native Haunts" (Educational Films Corporation). On San Magail Islands, off the California coast, are surf and seals and rocks, mixed up sometimes in indistinguishable confusion. The clumsy creatures are seen hauling themselves with surprising rapidity over the rough ground, gaining ease and grace the moment they sink into their real element, water. Or, resigned to interruption, they face the camera with anything but a pleasant expression. Perhaps it is not pleasant to weigh two tons at the age of thirty-five!

If the seals are a sort of natural submarine, the pelicans can well be the aeroplanes. The largest colony of them on the Pacific Coast is found at Anacapa Island. Here they assemble in large flocks, and bring up their interesting but extremely ungainly offspring.

Pioneer Corporation Grows Apace the Times

In checking up the motion picture organizations which are either maintaining a place in the front ranks, or are forging there through sheer merit and far-sightedness, it is well not to lose sight of the Pioneer Film Corporation, of 126 West Forty-sixth street, of which Nathan Hirsh is president. The Pioneer organization is growing apace the times, and shows indications of outgrowing present quarters within the near future.

Albeit a successful exhibitor for several years, Hirsh entered the feature end of the business about two years ago, purchasing such features as he could secure for Greater New York. Before long he extended his operations throughout the entire state of New York and northern New Jersey. The first really big achievement of his "independent" career was when he launched Ince's "Civilization" for his territory. Since then Hirsh has acquired the rights of Julius Steger's "Cold Deck" with Wm. S. Hart, "Redemption," "Today" with Florence Reed, "The Mad Lover" with Robert Warwick, Williamson Brothers' "The Submarine Eye" and Selig's "The Garden of Allah."

With all this the Pioneer Corporation has grown to such an extent that the quarters proved inadequate in every manner, and the company recently took over the premises formerly occupied by the Mutual Film Corporation, 126 West Forty-sixth street. It is now predicted that the Pioneer will be obliged to occupy the entire floor before long.

Mackenzie Produces Ten Episodes of Serial

Fenimore Cooper Towne, business manager for Donald Mackenzie, announced last week that Mr. Mackenzie is the producer of the sixth to the fifteenth (last) episodes only of the new serial for Pathe, "The Seven Pearls," featuring Mollie King.

Converting the Thrill Into Dollars

each letter in the telephone book or directory—people living at Number One each street, and so on. This is the sort of a stunt that is bound to make talk and a lot of it.

The other is a modification of the "Raffles" idea. This is to pick out ten or fifteen persons and announce that they will be stationed at certain corners and that each one will have a pair of passes which will be given to the first person approaching the agent and saying: "You are 'Number One,' appearing in 'Who Is Number One?' the Anna Katherine Green mystery serial, starring Kathleen Clifford at the Blank theatre."

Before passing by the Paramount Press Book we want to reproduce one paragraph that certainly echoes one insistence that we have been making during this series of articles. Here it is:

"Keep up your advertising on 'Who is "Number One"?' Keep your posters outside, continue your campaign through to the very end. Patrons are likely to forget the dates of showing. When 'Who is "Number One"?' is inside—no matter whether it is the first episode or the last—let the public know about it.

"You have something worth talking about every week. Speak up. If you don't, your competitor down the street, who also is showing the Paramount serial, will divert your business his way."

Now we have practically covered the field in the various discussions of serial exploitation in the five articles. There is just one more point to bear in mind. The serial depends largely on the thrills. That has been proved especially in the case of a recent chaptered story which started out on the idea that the real sensation incidents were not needed. The failure of the serial to draw crowds certainly showed that the thrill, the mystery element, the feats of daring are necessary.

The exhibitor should see to it that he plays up the particular thrill in each episode. As we have already said, don't for a minute go on the principle that the serial will carry itself. It's going to carry a lot of your patrons along, and those who advise a huge effort on the first episode are right, but there is still effort to be put forward to keep your patrons from dropping out and at least for the first four or five chapters to bring in those who missed the opening chapters.

In this connection it is well to state that Paramount is using the trailer idea for the first time as applied to serials. After the end of each episode there is a short trailer showing part of the most thrilling incident in the next episode. This is the best sort of teaser work and ought to do wonders in holding the audiences that see the earlier chapters.

Send letters or cards to your patrons on each of the first five or six episodes calling attention to the sensational feature of the coming chapter; better still, if you can also include a scene cut showing some of these feats. Mail these to your whole mailing list, regardless of whether the people have seen the first episodes or not. Prepare these cards purely upon the drawing power of the particular episode. Don't refer to the fact that it is the third or the fifth chapter, but tell something about what is going to be shown.

The main part of your teaser advertising had to be used before the first episode was shown, but you certainly haven't exhausted the thrills that are going to be seen in episode No. 10 in advance of the showing of the first chapter. Remember that with a serial you have always got something up your sleeve.

We have already referred to lobby displays on each episode and have urged that the exhibitor not content himself merely with a stock banner and the stock lithographs on the serial as a whole, but make a centered lobby display each week on the sensational episode that will be shown. For instance the battle between the super-submarine and the "sea crawler" could be featured in a dozen ways. Every episode of every serial will suggest something with a punch to the exhibitor who familiarizes himself with the story. Keep the synopsis of the story before you and know about it in advance. Better still, keep before you the entire story, if it is printed in a newspaper in your section.

Here is a suggestion for the utilization of the thrill combined with the contest idea. Announce at the start of the serial that you are going to give a prize for the person who picks the most sensational episode, the second most sensational, and the third most thrilling. These votes are to be cast only after the conclusion of the serial, and a good plan would be to make these prizes tickets for the next serial that you show. In this way you can work the two serials into each other and by showing slides on the second serial toward the end of the first one, you can come very near carrying your entire audience over from one serial to the other.

Hit the thrill every minute. Don't exaggerate. Just tell the public what you have coming. You'll find that the serial has a particular appeal and all that you have to do is to call attention—in the most striking way possible—to what is to come and you will get results.

There has been no effort made in this series of articles to tell you how to select your serials for the material that they contain. No one can advise a manager on this point. Naturally a bad serial is poor business, but the greater part of the poor business that you blame on the serial is not the fault of the story or the production or the star. It is you.

Keeping overlastingly at it is the secret of serial success. Try some of the ideas we have suggested in this series on your next chaptered story and work every minute until you have finished the last episode and then count your receipts and compare them with the last continued story that you ran.

This concludes the discussion of the five serials now before the public, the productions of Vitagraph, Pathe, Universal, Mutual and Paramount. We have tried to tell you the part each company is doing, the different methods of handling these thrillers and have offered you many suggestions from the producers and gathered from other exhibitors.

But it's like everything else. If you merely say, "That's a good idea" and then dismiss it, there's no hope for you.

We'd like to hear from exhibitors from time to time stunts that they have used in connection with serials. We shall continue to publish the new ideas that develop and to print the best from successful showmen.

"Smokes" Campaign Causes Cigarette Argument

The "smokes" campaign of MOTION PICTURE NEWS was the cause of an argument recently between Benjamin Chapin, the Lincoln Cycle director, and another producer.

"The patriotism of Civil War Days never had a chance to express itself in cigarette funds," said the other producer.

"You're wrong," replied Chapin, "and you are just like the people who laugh at the sight of a lucifer match being used in a scene of one of my pictures. They don't know that such things were actually in use in the sixties. But as far as cigarettes are concerned, while I didn't allow the use of them in any of the Cycle pictures, I know that the soldiers of both the North and South, especially the South, smoked paper-rolled cigarettes during the war, and, no doubt, many 'smokes' were sent them from the folks at home.

"Such things as illuminating gas, matches, army observation balloons, pacifists, steel pens, pencils, slackers and soapbox orators were all known to people of the Cival War days."

Marguerite Snow in Person at Boston Theatre

Marguerite Snow has been booked by Manager Thomas D. Soriero of the Park Theatre, Boston, for a personal appearance at his theatre Monday and Tuesday, October 15 and 16. Miss Snow will also officiate at a liberty bond booth at one of the local department stores, it is said.

Mammoth Closes "Who's Your Neighbor?" Deal

The Mammoth Film Corporation, Franklyn E. Backer, president, has concluded its final purchase of "Who's Your Neighbor?" written by Willard Mack. The territory comprises eleven western coast states and northern New Jersey. "Who's Your Neighbor?" played last week at the Goodwin theatre, Newark, N. J.

Helene Chadwick Signs Again with Pathe

Helene Chadwick, who has been appearing in Pathe pictures for the past year, has renewed her contract for one year, Pathe also obtaining an option on her services for a second year.

It is the intention of the Pathe organization to star Miss Chadwick in her future productions, the first of which will be "The Nauhlaka," an eight-reel feature now being directed by George Fitzmaurice at the Solax studio at Fort Lee.

Ten Companies Distribute Liberty Loan Film

Exhibitors Urged to Show All Episodes and to Advertise the Feature Extensively—Exchanges Pay the Express Charges

THE committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry which has been appointed to co-operate with the Secretary of the Treasury in the important work of circulating the necessary incentive among film fans to buy bonds of the second Liberty Loan, has completed plans for the distribution of the all-star feature production, which is expected to accomplish the feat—if such it can be called.

As previously announced in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, the production consists of five parts or episodes, each five hundred feet long. There will be one hundred prints of each of them. National celebrities, together with more than forty stage and screen artists, appear in the picture, and not the least unusual thing about it is that the artists donated their time and services absolutely free of charge in order to help their country in its hour of need. It is now up to the exhibitor to do his bit and present the film to his patrons.

Distribution of the film has been placed in the hands of the committee, of which Adolph Zukor is chairman, the other members of which are Marcus Loew, J. E. Brulatour, W. W. Irwin, and George K. Spoor. This committee has arranged for ten of the largest distributing concerns, all of which are members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, to handle the actual distribution of the pictures through their various exchanges.

In order to avoid any confusion each episode has been assigned exclusively to two of the ten companies as follows: The first episode will be handled by Universal and Vitagraph, the second by Metro and Paramount, the third by Fox and Goldwyn, the fourth by Pathe and Triangle, the fifth by World and Select. Each of these ten companies will have fifty prints of the particular episode which it has been designated to handle. Under this arrangement it will be necessary for any exhibitor who desires to run all five episodes to get into immediate contact with either concern in the respective five groups which are handling the distribution.

As previously announced, the exhibitors will receive the pictures for presentation absolutely without cost, and the express charges are borne by the respective exchanges. In view of this the committee has called the attention of the exhibitors to the fact that speedy handling of the films will be not only appreciated but will also be aiding the campaign. The campaign is scheduled to close October 28, and it is hardly necessary to remind exhibitors of the seriousness of delaying the forwarding of the print from his house to the next one.

The committee has also urged exhibitors to advertise the production extensively, both for its patriotic value and because of the undoubted prestige which such action would give the theatre. It is expected that this will be done universally, as this would be the only expense on the part of the theatres.

Among the artists in the film are: William Courtleigh, Clifton Crawford, Leon Errol, Edmund Breese, Jack Hazard, Jefferson de Angelis, Hal Forde, Paul Everton, Jed Proudy, Tom McGrath, Will Rogers, John Drew, Barney Bernard, Mary Pickford, Lillian Russell, Mabel Taliaferro, Beverly Sitgreaves, Mrs. William Courtleigh, Billie Burke, Pauline Frederick, Ann Wheaton, Nance O'Neill, Ethel Barrymore, Elsie Janis, Laurette Taylor, Marguerite Clark and Lillian Walker.

Paramount Heads Tour to Get Exhibitors' Ideas

Itinerary of Hiram Abrams and B. P. Schulberg Linked Up with Advertising Drive—Greater Service Value Evident

THE recent inauguration by Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, and B. P. Schulberg, general manager, of an extended tour of the United States to visit exhibitors in every city of fifty thousand population or over, at about the same time the announcement was made of the million-dollar campaign of Paramount and Artcraft to further promote the popularity of pictures bearing their trademarks, appears not to have been a coincident, according to developments last week.

It is now understood, as a matter of fact, that prior to the beginning of the tour of the Paramount officials, the big drive had been thoroughly discussed and it had been definitely determined that one of the most important phases of the campaign would be that of personal contact with the exhibitor. Obviously the value to the exhibitors of Paramount and Artcraft pictures of the outlay of money and thought which is entailed is the linking up, so to speak, of the advertising with the local showman and his theatre. In other words, if an advertisement of these pictures appears in a national magazine or newspaper it must at once be associated in the minds of the readers with their local theatres exhibiting these products. This will be done by means of trademarks employed in all advertising, identifying marks which cannot be overlooked or mistaken.

Discussing the plan upon his arrival at Los Angeles for which his tour proper will begin, President Abrams said:

"Already the names Paramount and Artcraft had become household words with photoplay patrons the country over, but this was not enough. The Paramount organization had assured exhibitors at the time the star series selective booking plan was inaugurated that every possible means would be employed to aid them in building up their business for the product. The million-dollar campaign which has been launched is one of the vastly important means to that end. Not the money spent but the way in which it is spent is the significant point.

"The purpose is to link the campaign with the local showman so that he will directly benefit. The public will be drawn into the theatres where these productions are exhibited as surely as a needle is attracted by a lodestone. In motion pictures, those presented by Paramount and Artcraft offer a brand of film entertainment so good, with stars of such splendid drawing power, stories by the foremost authors and technical perfection apparent in every foot of the film, that once those who by some chance are unacquainted with these pictures have the opportunity of seeing them, they become regular patrons of the theatres where Paramount and Artcraft productions are shown.

"It is to reach the ones who for one reason or another have not yet become members of the Paramount and Artcraft 'family' that this national advertising campaign was undertaken. Of course the exhibitor benefits directly. It is as if someone stood at the door of his theatre—someone, too, with standing and reputation, and took every passer-by by the arm and said, 'Come in, old chap (or madame)—there's a Paramount (or Artcraft) picture being shown here today and it's great. You can't afford to miss it.' Would that be a help—always providing the authority was unimpeachable and sufficiently respected in the community to undertake such a liberty? Ask the exhibitor that question!"

MacMahon Opens Literary Bureau

A novel idea of helpfulness to producers is put forward by Henry MacMahon in the establishment of his Literary Bureau, which was opened on October 1 at 321 West Fifty-fifth street, New York. As he says:

"Every film executive and publicity manager wants outside help or information in a hurry now and again. The regular staff is tied up with other matters, or the needed facts are not available without digging in libraries and some hours of journalistic interviewing. For instance, some point in history, drama, art or science baffles producing director or scenario chief; or, there is an unusual number of writing orders to be executed; or, perhaps, it is imperative to get in touch with some important personage for an interview and a story. I propose to meet this long-felt lack of supplemental service. Whatever your literary problem is, bring it here."

Having done extensive research work for D. W. Griffith and many other producers, Mr. MacMahon is peculiarly qualified for this branch of effort. His acquaintance with the theatrical and literary field of New York is second to none. During a vacation from regular labors he has been contributing articles to several of the magazines and feature supplements. He will be daily in his study in West Fifty-fifth street henceforth, and may be reached by telephone, Columbus 2969.

Considering New Affiliation

Jeff Dolan has left the Keystone Press, Inc., of 727 Seventh avenue, New York City, where he was employed in the capacity of salesman. Mr. Dolan is considering several offers with various film companies as road salesman. In this line he has had many years' experience.

Big Crowd Sees Fairbanks-Sunday Ball Game

The recent baseball game in Los Angeles, which was announced in advance as a Douglas Fairbanks-Billy Sunday event, proved to be a winner in every sense of the word, with most of the "winning" on the side of the smiling comedian. Ten thousand people and a 1 to 0 score provided the biggest feature of the game. It was an elaborate feast for the big crowd, and considering it was a benefit, compelled various personages to declare it the biggest event of its kind ever pulled off in California. The proceeds of the game, which amounted to over $5,000, is intended to equip the soldiers in camp with baseball and athletic paraphernalia.

Week Runs Becoming Frequent in Washington

Week runs are getting to be a frequent occurrence in Washington. W. H. Hart in "The Cold Deck" had a most successful week's run at Moore's Strand. "The Slacker," with Emily Stevens, remained at the Casino for a week. Douglas Fairbanks in "The Man from Painted Post" is booked for a week at Loew's Columbia.

The Leader is making week runs for all productions. "This is the only way to permit your patrons to see the picture," commented Corbin Shields, manager of the Leader. "Those who see the show are its best advertisers. People are always a little dubious about newspaper advertisement or even criticism. And it takes three days for your picture to be advertised by word of mouth. If you pull it off then, you have lost the best part of your week. This the Leader has practically demonstrated by box office receipts if your picture is worth anything. I emphatically state that we do our biggest business the last half of the week."

The Leader is a downtown house of 400 capacity, charging a 15-cent admission, and showing Fox productions. It showed "Joan the Woman," with Geraldine Farrar, for a week, with excellent success.

Trade Showing of Corona's "Curse of Eve"

On Wednesday, October 10, at 2 P. M., the Corona Cinema Company of Los Angeles, will show its first production, "The Curse of Eve," at Wurlitzer Hall. This picture has been promised for a long time and great interest centers about its trade showing, as it is said to be most pretentious. It commences with a biblical allegory, which is unusually effective. C. V. Henkel, sales agent of the Corona Cinema Company, is located in the Candler Building.

Cameraman Takes Trip on Chilean Submarine

In a recent number of the Hearst-Pathe News appear some very interesting scenes taken on board a Chilean submarine on her trial trip through the Cape Cod canal. Cameraman Cooledge obtained permission from Capt. Pena, of the Chilean navy, to let him go along, and obtained the scenes from the deck of the boat as she was running at top speed.

Great Changes in Scenarios During Six Months

Frances Marion, Artcraft Expert and Scenarioist for Mary Pickford, Says Public Now Understands More Intricate Stories Used

FRANCES MARION, who is responsible for the screen adaptation of Mary Pickford's "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," as well as other Artcraft productions, is a writer whose success in the motion picture field is partly due to her close observation of the public and her study of screen audiences.

"The scenario of today is vastly different from the scenario of five, three or even a year ago," said the Artcraft scenario writer recently. "In fact, it has changed and we no longer have to do our pictures in words of one syllable for an audience which has developed so fast that we can write more and more intricate stories and picture audiences can follow them.

"I am now working on a screen adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's story, 'The Little Princess,' for Mary Pickford. As soon as that is finished we will do an adaptation of another famous story. The screen adaptation of 'Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm' was more difficult to write than one would imagine because it will be recalled that there are no very thrilling or dramatic situations; however, I believe we have presented a story that has particuar interest to the public."

On being questioned as to how she became connected with the photoplay world Miss Marion said: "I just fell into the scenario writing game entirely by accident. I used to write short stories for the magazines and received several requests from motion picture companies for the screen rights to these stories, so I thought that if I had magazine stories that the screen wanted, a little study would enable me to write stories directly for the screen.

"I gave up illustrating and designing, which I was then doing, and went in entirely for scenario work. I went with various producing companies before joining the Artcraft forces as scenario writer for Mary Pickford. My first work for Miss Pickford was an adaptation of 'A Poor Little Rich Girl' upon which 'Our Mary' induced me to come west and write all of her scenarios, and there is no person in the world nicer to write for than Mary Pickford.

"Even scenario writers have their limitations and cannot think of everything, but Miss Pickford and Director Neilan work right with one and between the three of us, we manage to evolve a story.

"I like story writing much better than illustrating and designing, and by the way, I made all the posters for Oliver Morosco's first production with Kitty Gordon as well as posters for some of his other stars, but have given that up for the present entirely, though I keep an easel and a lot of paint always within easy reach in case I get an inspiration."

Miss Marion has attracted considerable attention as a writer in the screen world during the past year, and is today undoubtedly one of the very foremost scenarioists in the industry. Her exceptional work attracted the attention of Miss Pickford, who soon obtained her services for Artcraft pictures, and the result of this combination has already received much favorable comment in and out of the trade.

Bruce Expects to Return to New York Next Month

Robert C. Bruce, scenic director for the Educational Film Corporation of America, expects to return to New York in the middle of November. Mr. Bruce has had a remarkable trip over the United States, covering practically every state in the Union, touring in an automobile and taking pictures of the most interesting parts of this country. Mr. Bruce is known as one of the best scenic directors in the business and his pictures have always received high comment. During this trip Mr. Bruce has taken seventeen pictures, and before his return to New York will take seven pictures more in and around Mr. Rainier, Washington.

Abrams and Schulberg Arrive in Los Angeles

With tidings of still greater motion picture prosperity in store for the coming winter in Los Angeles, Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, and B. P. Schulberg, general manager, have arrived in that city, thus completing the first leg of a trip whose itinerary includes visits to every city in the United States boasting more than 50,000 inhabitants. The two were met at the depot in the City of Angels by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who had himself arrived in the coast metropolis only a couple of weeks before, and Herman Webber, Western representative of the company.

Ethel Ritchie Plays Dual Role Opposite Hardin

Ethel Ritchie and Neil Hardin, the well-known and popular Falcon stars, are featured in "The Understudy," which General Film declares will do more than its share to maintain the fast pace set by the four-reel dramas of the series, of which "The Understudy" is the eighth release. In this feature Miss Ritchie appears in two roles—those of Georgianna Lane and Hope Van Alen. The remarkable resemblance between the two young women is the basis of the story which follows the substitution of the former to pose as Mrs. Van Alen, while the real wife is being treated at a sanitarium.

The two stars are supported by a strong cast which contains, among others, Bruce Smith and Mollie McConnell. "The Understudy" was produced under the supervision of H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer.

The ninth of the Falcon series will be "The Best Man," founded on a story which appeared in the Peoples' Magazine. Margaret Landis and William Ehfe are the featured leads.

EXHIBITOR PERSONALS

ILLINOIS.—Ashland: Dave Hexter has purchased a full interest in the Lyric theatre and plans to give picture shows on Tuesday and Thursday nights and on Saturday afternoon and evening.

O'Fallon: H. P. Schwarz and John Knerrer have leased the Taylor Opera House and took charge October 1. The new managers will equip the theater with a new motion picture machine and screen. They will endeavor to give the patrons the best in motion pictures, and are busy booking some extra big features for opening week.

INDIANA.—Rensselaer: W. C. Milliron is making some extensive changes to the front of the Star theatre that will increase the seating capacity of the house as well as to add to the comfort of the patrons. The ticket office has been moved forward to the sidewalk line and the operator's room also brought out. One feature of the latter will be the better ventilation afforded and instead of the heat from the projecting machine being thrown into the auditorium it will pass out a ventilating trap in the top of the operator's booth.

IOWA.—Fayette: T. J. Leahy has purchased the Princess theatre at Fayette.

Milo: J. G. Thorp has purchased the Star theatre.

Spencer: H. B. Gray has purchased the Fraser theatre.

Irwin: Peter Steenhusen has purchased the Opera House at Irwin.

Onawa: Krigstin & Wonder have purchased the motion picture theatre here.

Wheatland: J. C. Robertson has disposed of his interest in the A. Muse-U theatre at Wheatland to Otto Lahann.

Milo: J. G. Thorp is the new proprietor of the Star.

Toledo: W. B. Persons has purchased the Grand.

Harper's Ferry: John H. Horve is the new manager of the local theatre.

Ida Grove: Harry Lowder, formerly of the Lowder Theatre Company has assumed the management of the Grand theatre.

KANSAS.—Fort Scott: Pictureland, the largest theatre in Fort Scott, has been sold by Miss M. C. Smith to J. T. Porter of Kansas City. Miss Naomi Porter will manage the theatre for her father.

Galatia: Lee Coheen is erecting a new theatre here, fuller details of which will be announced later.

MINNESOTA.—Aitkin: A surprise was sprung on the theatregoing public a few days ago when it was announced that the Moveum would, under new management, Mr. Mugridge having sold his interest in the theatre to C. C. Simpson and O. Wangen of Hillsboro, N. D., who took immediate possession.

Genuine regret was expressed by all the old patrons of this popular amusement house at the retirement of the Mugridges, who have always striven to give clean, wholesome entertainment, the pictures shown having been of a high order at all times.

Mr. Simpson will be joined here by his partner, Mr. Wangen, in a few days. The first departure from the established order is the announcement that hereafter or until further notice the theatre will be closed on Sunday evenings.

Mr. and Mrs. Mugridge have no definite plans for the future, but go from here to Swift Current, Sask., Canada, where they own some farming lands.

NEBRASKA.—Davenport: Charles D. Wells has taken over the Isis, Davenport's most beautiful theatre, from Exhibitor Clark.

Concord: Elmer L. Wilmarth has opened a new motion picture theatre here.

NEVADA.—Reno: W. C. Edmunds, a prominent theatrical manager of San Francisco, until recently in charge of one of the largest film exchanges in that city, has arrived in Reno to assume the management of the Majestic theatre for the Nixon Estate Company.

Mr. Edmunds took over the local theatre today. It will continue, he says, as a motion picture and vaudeville house. Several important changes are contemplated in the architecture of the Majestic but no decision as to their extent has been made by the ownership.

OHIO.—Mansfield: Fred Hilton is heading a new organization that has purchased the Arris theatre from Fred Stecker, Jr. The Arris Theatre Company is the name of the new combine and its incorporators are James Shelley, A. J. Roth, Peter C. Miller and Mr. Hilton.

The Arris theatre is one of the best known in Mansfield and the announcement that Mr. Hilton will be manager insures the good will of those who attend picture shows and most people do. The announced policy of Mr. Hilton for the Arris is cleanliness, courtesy and merit. "We will cater especially to women and children and every effort will be made to please them. Of course, the men folk will find the same interest in the program."

Mr. Hilton announced that some changes to increase the attractiveness of the theatre will be made, but that they would not interfere with the daily programs.

Springfield: The Majestic theatre having undergone a thorough course of reconstruction is now ready for reopening. The seating capacity has been increased from 600 to 1,000 and Manager Phil Chackers announces big feature productions for his future programs.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Philadelphia: Record was made of the sale of the two-story moving picture auditorium at the northwest corner of Twenty-fifth street and Ridge avenue by Charles Rose to G. T. Roesch for a nominal sum. The lot has a frontage of 78 feet and the assessed value is $17,000.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—Canton: J. E. Marsh has disposed of his interests in the Empress theatre to G. A. Mills, who assumed control a week ago. Mr. Mills is a local business man and promises to make the Empress theatre a success. After this week a high-class run of Universal service will be bound to please the most critical of movie fans.

HAVE REVOLUTIONIZED ALTERNATING CURRENT CONDITIONS

Intense Illumination Noiseless Projection
Wanderless Arc Perfect Operation
No Change in Carbon Holders

The operators' difficulties, which included a wandering light, ghosts in the picture, sputtering of the arc, and a noise almost intolerable, have all been relegated to by-gone days.

The adoption of SPEER "ALTERNO" CARBONS merely necessitates the proper placing of the carbons in the upper and lower holders. No new housing, no additional lamp jaws, no adapters—simply the same equipment used for other carbons.

The exceptional advantages and possibilities now afforded for alternating current counteract the arguments formerly used for the installation of elaborate and expensive apparatus for the changing of alternating current to direct. Operators and projection experts now declare that perfect projection is obtainable with alternating current equipment.

Why Have Music with Pictures?

THE claim has been made and with considerable justice that music is 50% of the motion picture show business.

The man who made this statement was not in any way belittling pictures, but merely pointing out the necessity of supplying something to take the place of the human voice of the legitimate stage.

The argument is borne out when we visit the leading theatres in the large cities throughout the country, where the need of proper musical accompaniment has been so strongly felt that large symphony orchestras have been installed. These orchestras draw patrons, not only from their immediate communities but also from the outlying quarters of their various cities. These people come in and attend the shows without knowing at all what particular picture is to be shown, but realizing that when they reach the theatre they are assured of as good a picture as can be obtained accompanied by the very best music which it is possible to hear anywhere in their particular section of the country.

* * * * * *

THE smaller houses are not able to compete with these large orchestras, but they can largely improve the quality of music which accompanies the particular film which they are showing—giving musical value in comparison with their admission charge.

I have personally visited houses from 500 to 1,000 seats in the smaller towns or in community centers, where a pianist accompanied by perhaps a violin and 'cello is droning away without any more than a casual regard for what was being shown on the screen, their object being merely to produce music, which they consider harmonious, without the least thought as to whether it is suitable or not. Musicians of this kind are a distinct detriment to the house in which they are playing, for instead of being of 25% attraction value they do not deserve to be considered more than a 5% drawing card. On the other hand there is no reason in the world why, if they follow the pictures properly, they could not materially increase the attendance of the particular house in question.

* * * * * *

IT may be that they do not understand how to play for pictures, but musicians with ordinary intelligence should not have any difficulty in learning this art and becoming a distinct asset to the owner of the theatre in which they play.

One of the most important points is the actual knowing the story and general value of the picture before it is thrown on the screen for the first time for the audience. In other words, all musicians should see the picture at least once before it is put on public exhibition. The musicians should also, wherever possible, take advantage of the suggestions which other musicians have made in connection with the picture, as this outside help is of absolute importance and cannot be underestimated.

* * * * * *

ANOTHER help which should under no consideration be overlooked is the review of the picture to be shown, as it appears in the various trade papers. These synopses are of the utmost importance and every theatre manager of the country should absolutely insist upon every one of his musicians reading them, for from them the musician will obtain a clear and concise story of the picture as well as a general idea of the impression which it made upon the reviewer. In other words, every musician in every theatre throughout the country should find out all which is possible to learn concerning every picture to which he is going to play.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS is publishing each week from six to twelve cue sheets prepared by a musician who knows his business and is able, because of his qualifications, to select music for the picture, which if played, will build up the reputation of any theatre.

* * * * * *

FAR too many musicians have the attitude that because motion pictures are a comparatively cheap form of entertainment, that therefore anything which they render will be satisfactory. They do not look for help and even go so far as to refuse it unless the theatre manager stands up and forces them to take advantage of all which is offered.

What MOTION PICTURE NEWS is trying to do is to build up a better and higher form of musical accompaniment for the motion picture theatres, which will increase the revenue of the exhibitors throughout the country.

* * * * * *

WE not only are giving cue sheet service but we also will help the exhibitors choose a musical library which must be continually added to, in order that the patrons of the house may continually look forward to hearing the new airs rendered. We therefore wish to impress upon every exhibitor the importance of insisting that their musicians take advantage of the film reviews, and cue sheets, as well as the general service department we operate in connection with "Music for the Pictures."

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Two Letters, but Not Alike

ON the letterhead of the Regina Trades and Labor Council, Regina, Sask., signed by J. Hobson, Secretary, comes a letter that I have purposely left unanswered until a fitting opportunity presented itself, read it and think it over.

I. G. SHERMAN,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City, N. Y.

DEAR SIR:

Being a reader of the Projection Department of your paper I have taken great interest in the National Anti-Misframe League and the letters from the different writers giving their views on the poor condition of film. Most of your writers place the blame on the "kid" operator, rewind boy and the crank turner. While a great deal of the trouble is attributable to the parties mentioned, there are yet others who have thus far escaped the "press notices"; these are the tight-fisted exhibitor and the underpaid employee, of which the different exchanges contribute more than their share.

Starting with the exhibitor, there are some who will not spend any part of the box-office receipts to purchase new parts for their projectors; they apparently entertain the idea that a machine will last forever without repairs, and again, they employ an operator and pay him about ten dollars per week and expect the same class of work as that delivered by one receiving twenty dollars per week. As long as the exhibitor continues to pay such low wages they must be content with the poor service they receive. Taking the exchanges that control the film and to whom the operator looks to at least send out their film in fair condition, and which they very often fail to do with the consequence that the operator is the sufferer and blames the girl inspector without giving thought to the conditions under which she is laboring, which, if investigated, generally are more than ridiculous; the girl being about fifteen years of age and having in the neighborhood of two hundred or more reels of film to revise in one day, she hurries to get through on time, therefore, many a bad spot gets by, and for this labor the reviser receives in the neighborhood of from five to eight dollars per week, and under these conditions does not care whether she holds her job or not. You can readily see that one working for such low wages can hardly be expected to take any great interest in their work. This might be rightly termed "the evil of the underpaid employyee." In closing, I wish to thank you for the space this letter will take in your valuable paper, and wish the NEWS and the League the success it rightly deserves.

(Signed) JOHN L. HOBSON.

The other letter from Local 304, M. P. M. O. of Waterbury, Conn., is as follows:

I. G. SHERMAN,
729 7th Avenue,
New York.

DEAR SIR:

I have been instructed by this local at a regular meeting, held Aug. 5, 1917, to inform you that at the present time your views in regard to the work that an operator should do besides running his show does not meet with the approval of this local. We firmly believe that the hardest blow the operator has received in some time is the formation of the National Anti-Misframe League.

(Signed) WM. JENUSAITIS, Secretary.

These two letters as well as the almost universal membership of the League only go to prove that to paraphrase the words of the great emancipator: You can please some of the people all the time, all the people some of the time, but you can't please all the people all the time. As for the letter of Brother Hobson, knowing that such conditions do exist, there is nothing further that I can add to his letter. I might say though that the conditions which he mentions are becoming changed gradually, and as Rome wasn't built in a day, we likewise are biding our time until the evil of the underpaid employee will have become but a memory. To Brother Jenusaitis, I can only say that I am sorry the members of Local 304 take such a view regarding the League, and without any hard feelings at all I must disagree with the statement that the formation of the League is the hardest blow the operator has received in some time. I do not know whether the brother has read all that has been written about the N. A. M. F. L., or not, presumably not, for if he had he could by no stretch of the imagination construe my views as meaning that the operator should do the work of the film exchange. Such is not the case. He knows and I know that a good operator will not run a film through his machine after the first show with a misframe in it; he will take it out, for his own sake. This being true, why not report the negligence on the part of the exchange to us and allow us to assist in correcting the evil and help the exhibitor get that which he is paying for and is entitled to? Since the formation of the League I have been instrumental in having placed several union operators in various film exchanges as chief inspectors of film, and these men have given me their promise that they would meet the operator more than half way in the matter of better film condition. It is not the policy of this department or its editor to roast those who disagree with me, and I feel sure that after careful consideration of all that has been written and all that has so far been accomplished by the members of the League, the members of 304 will do as other progressive organizations have done and join the League in a body, and lend their co-operation in any and all things that will help to better the condition of the operator and make his labors less arduous and more of a pleasure, if work can ever be called a pleasure.

Fuses Blow

H. McCOY, New Hampshire, asks: "In the place where I am employed—to show moving pictures one night a week—I had a strange thing happen, and as it never happened to me before, I am asking you for a little information. The other night, shortly after starting the show one of the fuses melted, I put in another and in a few minutes that, too, melted, and so it went for the entire evening. Now, what I want to know is what caused this and how can I prevent it. Will watch for your answer in the near future."

Answer: My dear friend, why is it that you failed to mention current supplied, whether rheostat or transformer was used, etc. You must realize that I am not possessed with occult powers, but I will do my best in an endeavor to be of assistance to you. When the fuse blows in the arc circuit there are two questions to be considered, that is, did the fuse blow when the arc was struck, or when the main switch was closed? If the first, you should examine the rheostat to see if one or more of the coils are not grounded to the frame or touching each other in such a way as to cut out a part of the resistance. If, however, an economizer is being used you should then test it out for a short circuit or ground. If the fuse blew upon closing the main switch, if I were you I should immediately look for a short circuit or a ground heavy enough to amount to a short circuit, but if the fuse blew while the arc was burning and everything working as usual, and upon installing another fuse the same thing occurred, I would follow the wires from the lamp to the fuse block and try to locate a ground. There is a slight possibility that your fuses are overloaded, but as you did not mention in your letter the ampere carrying capacity of the fuses nor the number of amperes used at the arc, I am not willing to say for certain that such is the case. One other thing to be considered is that the fuses might have blown by reason of a loose connection which may be in the switch or fuse block. In tracing out your line you will by feeling of the wires know whether they are unduly hot or not. If so, you may be reasonably certain that there is a loose connection somewhere in your circuit. It is a habit with a number of operators when such a condition arises, to boost the fuses by placing a piece of copper wire under the new fuse to "help carry the current"; sometimes they do not even hide their crime by putting in a fuse at all, but take a wire large enough to supply power for a trolley line, and place it where the fuse should be and where they belong, in this way jeopardizing the lives of not only himself and employer but the patrons of the theatre also. I have taken up more space than I anticipated, but if I have been of any small assistance to you it will have been worth while. If you have not received as clear an understanding as you may have expected, write me again and I will do my best to help you, but be sure and send all the information you have.

From the Far West

C. R. MANSFIELD, Cresecent City, Cal., writes: "Please put me down with the rest of the Anti-Misframe 'boys.' I haven't noticed many names from the 'far West' on the Roll of Honor. The idea is a good one. I believe it has done wonders already, at any rate I am getting films with a seal of inspection now, whereas I did not before. Nevertheless, I look them over just the same, and some of them need it. I operate at Endert's theatre and will send you information regarding my equipment, etc., later. This is my busy day, but I simply could not make up my mind to wait any longer, and decided to get in and help along the good work of the League."

Reply: The pleasure is mine. While the responses are coming in in large numbers there is always room for more, and, I feel sure, as soon as the boys in the far West get acquainted and realize the purpose of the League, I will have my hands full getting out cards, buttons, etc. I will look forward to hearing from you again.

Praises Film Exchange and Wants Information

G. K., Bemidji, Minn., writes: "I am not a union operator, but I do not consider that sufficient cause for not joining the N. A. M. F. L. Please put my name on the roll of honor, and let me say right here something that I have very seldom read, and that is a good word for the film exchanges. We get features from seven different exchanges in Minneapolis, and I am surprised at the good condition of the film received from them. Here's hoping that this condition will become nation wide through the efforts of the league. Now I would like to have a little information. This theatre has been open about a month, having been closed up for five weeks by its former owner. When I examined the machine, upon taking the job, I found that it was a 1A Motiograph, 1916 model; I discovered a cracked condenser in the mount and upon striking the arc I found that I had a double spot on the cooling plate. I sent for two sets of lenses, plano convex 6½ and 7½ focus. These I tried out, using first the two 6½'s and then the two 7½'s but was unable to eliminate the double spot. Then I tried a 6½ in front and a 7½ in back and still the same result, after which I put the 7½ in front and the 6½ in back, but no good. Then I sent for a 9-inch focus lens, but the supply house sent me a 9½. I experimented with the 7½ nearest the arc and the 9½ in front, and with this combination I get the best results but it is still unsatisfactory. I cannot possibly use two 6½ or 7½ or one of each as the arc is brought too close to the back lens, causing breakage. With my present combination the arc is 4 inches from the back lens and I can plainly see the image of the arc in the disc of light thrown on the shutter blade directly in front of the objective lens. The light on the screen is not affected by this but, believe me, it keeps me busy preventing it. Am using 120 volts, 60 cycle, A. C., pulling 60 amperes with 5/8 cored carbons, top and bottom. The distance from the front condenser to the cooling plate is 14 inches, and the objective lens is 6-inch focus. Do you know of a preparation for cleaning a gold fibre screen? Your advice will be greatly appreciated."

Answer: As I have so often said, the department is for all operators, and while I would prefer that all were members of the union, I realize that in some cases this is impossible. However, your name has been added to the Roll of Honor and you will receive your membership card and button in due time. You gave me all kinds of data, but left out the most important point, and that was the distance from machine to screen. Therefore, it is impossible for me to even attempt to answer your question with any degree of intelligence.

I am sure the film exchanges will appreciate your words of praise, and I might also say that from reports that I have received the exchanges in the Middle West are sending out film in better condition than are those exchanges located here in the East. In answer to your question as to a preparation for the cleansing of gold fibre screens, I would suggest that you write a letter to Henry Parrish, Owensboro, Kentucky, asking him for particulars regarding the method of screen renovation which he explained to me during his visit to New York. If you will furnish me with the data I have asked for I will try and help you find a solution for the elimination of the double spot.

Some Executive Board—Some Local

A STRIKE that was not a strike threatened to tie up all the motion picture theatres during the past week, when it came time for the enforcement of the new wage scale as submitted to the exhibitors by Local 306 M. P. M. O., of Greater New York. One of the greatest stunts ever put over by a body of organized workers was that which Local 306 promulgated. After many conferences between representatives of the exhibitors' league and the union, without an agreement being reached, it was decided by the executive board of the union to open a strike headquarters and notify every motion picture operator who was affiliated with the organization to report at "headquarters" on Monday, October 1, at 9 a. m., at which hour it was almost an impossibility to get to the entrance leading to the meeting. The operators were then locked in the meeting hall and their cards taken from them until such time as their employers became aware of their plight and appeared to bail them out. When the exhibitors realized that they were caught they made all haste to sign up the new contracts and left the headquarters with their operators. All was not a bed of roses for the officers, however, as the plans had been carefully worked out and the men who were the representatives of the local union had been up night and day for several days. There was a certain amount of opposition and a few exhibitors refused to sign contracts until they found it would be next to impossible to obtain competent men to run their daily show. While the situation has cleared up to a great extent there are, however, a few, and a very few, exhibitors who have not yet signed up. The officers of the union are very optimistic and believe it will only be a question of a few days before every theatre in the greater city will be employing "union men," members of 306. While I have at times had my doubts as to the advisability of an employee of a concern engaged in the manufacture of motion picture apparatus fulfilling the duties of president, I want to, at this time, heartily compliment Sam Kaplan, president of Local 306, for the very able manner in which he conducted the "strike," also the Precision Machine Company for their generosity in allowing Mr. Kaplan to be absent from his duties at their plant, where he is chief inspector of all machines leaving their factory, thus enabling him to devote all his time to the bettering of the condition of the eight hundred odd members of the motion picture operators' organization, without in any way jeopardizing his position as their employee and still being continued on their pay roll. The Macklers, Harry and Al, business agent and secretary-treasurer, respectively, are also to be commended for their untiring efforts and the able and whole-hearted support they gave their executive officer in this most difficult problem which confronted him so early during his administration of the local's affairs. Harry I. Sherman, my namesake and recording secretary, was on the job early and late, and is entitled to a share of the glory attendant upon the victory which has crowned their efforts. It should not be necessary to call the attention of the members-at-large to the huge task which confronted their officers, and now that the victory has been won without conquest it is hoped that the most harmonious relations will prevail between the exhibitors and the operators, and this can best be done by each and every member of the union maintaining at all times his dignity and applying himself to his profession in a manner that will show that the employment of "union men" is the safest and best course after all, for the exhibitor is as much if not more the gainer than is the operator by such a course, as a careful reading of the contract will show.

Simplex and the I. P. A. Inc.

THE Precision Machine Company was ably represented at the second lecture given to the members of the International Projection Association, Inc., whose headquarters are at 652 Bergen avenue, Bronx, N. Y., when Mr. A. P. Lombard, representing the manufacturers of the Simplex projector, appeared at the club rooms of the above-named association on Friday evening, October 5, and delivered a most interesting and instructive lecture on the care and efficient handling of a modern type projection machine. An enthusiastic and attentive crowd of "boys" listened to the many points brought out by the lecturer and their interest was correspondingly increased when Mr. Lombard dismantled the mechanism, explaining in detail each part and the work which it was to perform, as well as the great care exercised in its manufacture, and then reassembled the machine in full view of his audience. Stronger Light

The light from an Alternating Current arc comes alternating from both carbons, while from a Direct Current arc it always comes from the same carbon. The Direct Current arc can therefore be arranged so that the maximum amount of its light always passes through the lens, while it is impossible to do this with an Alternating Current arc. A Direct Current arc also gives off more light for the same current than an Alternating Current.

If your electric service is only Alternating Current, a

this lecture had never seen a machine completely dismantled before, and the object lesson thus brought out was of great importance to them. It surely is a most excellent idea on the part of the officers of the I. P. A. to foster and promote such a plan as this whereby the members of the association will become benefited in such a way as to make them more competent workmen and also fit them to hold more enviable positions. Mr. J. E. Robin is another speaker who has promised to appear and deliver a lecture at an early date, as has Mr. Walter Green, of the Speer Carbon Company, and while these lectures are only open to the club members, I believe that other operators who express sufficient interest in the lectures would be favored with an invitation from Al. Polin, president; Morris Jay Rotker, recording secretary, or any of the other officers.

One Question, Please

DAN DOSS, McAlpin, W. Va., writes: "I am writing you about my membership card which I have not yet received, and I would like to ask one question, please. Should not a Powers' 6B machine take the film through when the film has about an inch or two of the sprocket holes missing on one side? Owing to the loop setter it won't do so for me any more, and if you can offer some suggestion it will be greatly appreciated."

Answer: In regard to your membership card, will say that your correct address was not to be found, and while the card and button were ready to be sent you, this could not be done until I heard from you again. Both are now being mailed to you and should reach you before this is in print. Now as to your query, unless the tension on the take up is very great there seems to be no reason why the film should not pass through the machine without giving any trouble. Some operators have run film that have had one entire side, containing the sprocket holes, missing; however, it is the safest and best plan to cut out the three or four pictures and make a new splice, as there is a possibility, and a very great one, that the film might catch upon a rough corner and stick at the aperture plate, and—well, you know the answer. I would suggest that you examine the tension of the take up and have it so set that it will take up the full reel without any undue strain. If you do this, I believe you will have found the remedy.

Not the Fault of the Machine

G. S., WICKFORD, R. I., writes: "As we have a ——— machine and used to think it was a good one, it is now showing a dim picture at times. We thought perhaps it might be caused by the rheostat, which is an old fashioned one, and in which the coils get red hot and make the operating room a hot place in which to work. We have been looking for a rheostat or something that will effect a saving of current and at the same time enable us to show a good clear picture. As it is now, the current is up and down; the result is that we have a picture that is unsteadily illuminated. Where could we get such a device, in Providence, R. I., or Boston, Mass., or could we do better somewhere else? Please let me hear from you soon."

Answer: The fault is not with the projector, but in the rheostat. As you say it is an old fashioned one, there is no doubt that the coils have outlived their usefulness, and I would suggest that you purchase a new one. Second handed articles are hardly ever satisfactory, and the possible saving is too small a matter to be considered. You failed to state in your letter whether the current supplied was Alternating or Direct. If direct, the rheostat is the most inexpensive thing I know of. If, on the other hand, the current is A. C. I would recommend that you purchase a Transformer, Compensarc, Economizer or Inductor, all or any one of which are nothing more than an electrical device for changing alternating current of a given cycle and voltage to alternating current of the same cycle but of a different voltage and amperage. The saving in electric bills will more than pay the cost of such a device in a short time. I believe the U. T. E. Co. have a branch in Boston where you can obtain what you want.

3,000 Seat Theatre for Cantonment

ANOTHER new theatre brought into existence by the war is the Liberty, a house which will have a seating capacity of 3,000 and which is nearing completion at the Fort Dodge, Iowa, cantonment. The house is being built by Elbert and Getchell, of Des Moines, and will be managed by Fletcher Russell of Hampton, Iowa. Mr. Russell has managed the Windsor at Hampton successfully for the past five years. Unless some disposition is made of the Hampton house it will continue under the same management until the expiration of the present lease.

A Cine Camera of Novel Design

THROUGH the courtesy of Messrs. T. B. Brown and Geo. R. Stringham, of the Motion Picture Specialty Company, 607 West 43rd street, New York, we have recently had the opportunity of examining a new and ingenious motion picture camera, the same being designed and constructed by Mr. Stringham, a competent mechanician.

The radical feature in the new camera is the relative arrangement of the lens and the film magazines, which are so disposed that the lens is mounted within the camera casing in a deep recess. This is accomplished by placing the lens between the two film boxes, or magazines, which latter are of 400 feet capacity. The appearance of the camera when closed is shown by Fig. 1, which shows that the camera casing is made to form a natural sunshade for the lens. Although the lens is placed far back from the front of the camera, the recess in which it is located is of such size that no vignetting occurs around the edges of the field of view. It is obvious from Fig. 1 that vignetting or double exposure devices may be attached to the camera front, while the carriage to which the lens is mounted may be instantly drawn forward rendering the lens accessible for cleaning or removal. The lens may be detached from the camera by a quarter turn of its mount, and any objective from 1¾ to 6 inches focus may be quickly attached. A telephoto-lens can also be accommodated, and all lenses are so mounted, by the makers of the camera, that when the lens carriage is in position and the focussing pinion turned as far back as possible, the lens is at its infinity focus. The objective is focussed by a knob on the left of the camera connected to slow-motion gearing. This makes the attainment of a good focus a wonderfully simple operation.

As a result of situating the lens between the film magazines the exposure aperture and film-moving mechanism of this camera are not to be found near the front of the instrument, but are located at the back of the camera, as is illustrated by Fig. 2, which shows the camera open and the film threaded. The arrangements of the feed and take-up sprockets and the pressure gate reminds one of the Debrie cine camera.

The intermittent or film movement mechanism in this camera has received special attention; it is a claw movement having a D motion and is operated by a system of crankshafts and connecting rods. It is accurate and very nearly noiseless in operation. The gear ratio is eight pictures per crank revolution, but this can be changed to one picture per turn, while the camera is in operation, by manipulation of a conveniently located knob.

Of special importance in the estimation of all professional camera men is an automatic dissolving shutter, and a good example of such is to be found on the camera now under consideration. The dissolving shutter is controlled from a lever on the left of the camera case, accompanied by an index hand which regulates the length of the dissolves. Dissolves of two, four, six or eight feet may be made automatically; while the dissolving shutter may be hand operated to produce a dissolve of any desired length. By throwing the dissolving lever in one direction the shutter is caused to close; it is caused to open by pushing the lever to the other extreme; and when the lever is at its central position the shutter remains open, or closed, or however it may have been adjusted.

The rearmost dial on the operating side of the camera, Fig. 2, is the dissolving-shutter index-dial, and by watching the indicator the exact instant at which the shutter closes may be noted. A knob attached to the indicator permits the hand operation of the dissolving shutter. The dial in front of the shutter-index is a speed indicator, by which the rate of cranking may be determined. There is also provided a footage counter which shows the amount of film run off in numerals; runs backward or forward, and is readily reset to zero.

The photos, Figs. 1. and 2, show that the camera crank is located centrally and at the lowest center of gravity, thus eliminating much of the vibration which is usually set up in a cine camera when the crank is operated. By simply turning the crank backwards the film is automatically and instantaneously reversed, the take-up device being of the multiple clutch type and of such efficiency that the camera operates with the same ease when 400 feet of film is about taken-up as when the roll has just been loaded into the camera.

A feature which we must not overlook is the film magazines, which take a roll of film just as it comes from the can and are, moreover, provided with mouthpieces, or light-traps, which open wide when the camera is closed, thus relieving the film of any undue pressure or frictional contact. This feature was "borrowed" from the Newman Sinclair camera, but is a good one, nevertheless, and would prove a valuable addition to all cine cameras with enclosed magazines. The magazines and the casing of this new camera are made of fiber composition, which is so tough that a hard blow from a hammer will not even abrade the surface, much less crack or splinter the boxes. We have not learned the trade name of this material but would like to learn where the stuff grows.

In addition to the attachments mentioned, this camera possesses all other conventional ones, such as film-punch, adjustable aperture-plate, provision for masks, etc. In addition Mr. Stringham advises us that he could add without difficulty any additional devices required by a camera man.

These cameras are not being made for the market just at present, but the Motion Picture Specialty Company are prepared to make them to order. Those desirous of learning more about this practical and efficient taking-instrument are referred to the makers, whose address is given in the opening paragraph.

Light Loss by Reflection and Absorption in Photographic Optical Systems

Since the beginning of the Anastigmat era in photographic optics many types of camera objectives have been evolved, which differ widely in their design, and in the number, arrangement and characteristics of their component lenses or elements. For some time after refined photographic objectives came into general use the light loss by reflection at their glass-air surfaces was a topic of discussion, as was also the light loss from absorption by the glasses of a compound lens.

The results of careful investigations have shown that the difference between the light lost by reflection in air-space lenses (so-called), and in objectives composed of cemented elements, is so slight that both types of objective are about equal in efficiency, but since the method of determining the amount of light lost by reflection at the glass-air surfaces of a photographic objective is likewise applicable to optical projection systems, prism systems, etc., it will prove instructive to review the investigative work which has been done upon this subject, and to set forth the manner in which light loss due to reflection may be determined.

The quantitative estimation of reflecting power is represented by the ratio of the intensity of the light incident upon a surface to the intensity of the amount reflected and in the case of a transparent refracting medium is definitely represented by Fresnel's formula where i is the angle of incidence and r the angle of refraction.

$$\frac{1}{2}\frac{\sin^2(i-r)}{\sin^2(i+r)} + \frac{1}{2}\frac{\tan^2(i-r)}{\tan^2(i+r)}$$

By the employment of the Fresnel formula light loss by reflection at the faces of prisms has been investigated by Rayleigh,[1] and at the glass-air surfaces of some types of photographic objectives by Moritz von Rohr of the Zeiss works,[2] whose findings should be studied by those interested in all aspects of this subject.

By a special derivation of the Fresnel formula, the light loss by reflection at glass-air surfaces, when the incidence is normal, may be computed without mathematical complication, the light loss at a refracting surface of index n_1, when the intensity of the incident light equals 1, being expressed by

By the use of this formula the light lost at the reflecting surfaces of photographic objectives has been investigated by Karl Martin,[3] mathematician and computer at the Emil Busch Optical Works at Rathenow, Germany, whose methods will now be considered.

In his experiments Martin employed an axially parallel beam of violet light of wave-length 415. Von Rohr states[4] that it makes no appreciable difference in the results, however, if the light is incident in a direction inclined to the axis instead of normally. Employing the rigorous Fresnel formula in his work, he came to the conclusion that the light loss, due to reflection, was for all practical purposes a constant over the entire image-plane. The intensity of the incident light being taken as 1 and the loss by reflection at the first surface being the remainder of the light transmitted is therefore represented by

$$1-\left(\frac{n_1-1}{n_1+1}\right)^2 \text{ or } \frac{4\,n_1}{(n_1+1)^2}$$

The light lost by reflection at the second glass-air surface, of refractive index n_2, will therefore be represented by

Neglecting, as inconsequental in the final result, the light which reaches the focal-plane after repeated reflections from the surface of the lens, the remaining light intensity after reflection at the second surface will be numerically expressed by

$$\frac{4\,n_1}{(n_1+1)^2} - \frac{4\,n_1}{(n_1+1)^2}\left(\frac{n_2-1}{n_2+1}\right)^2 = \frac{4\,n_1}{(n_1+1)^2}\left\{1-\left(\frac{n_2-1}{n_2+1}\right)^2\right\}$$

$$\text{or } \frac{4\,n_1}{(n_1+1)^2}\times\frac{4\,n_2}{(n_2+1)^2}$$

From the foregoing operation it is evident that the light loss by reflection at x surfaces will be

$$\frac{4\,n_1}{(n_1+1)^2}\times\frac{4\,n_2}{(n_2+1)^2}\times\frac{4\,n_3}{(n_3+1)^2}\quad\cdots\cdots\quad\frac{4\,n_x}{(n_x+1)^2}$$ or, more briefly written

$$\prod_{x=1}^{x}\frac{4\,n_x}{(n_x+1)^2}$$

By simplifying this expression of the product of the losses by reflection at x surfaces we obtain as a representation of the remaining light intensity

$$R = \left(\frac{4\,n}{(n+1)^2}\right)^x$$

Assuming, with Martin, for purposes of general comparison, that the refractive index of all the glasses (lens elements) is 1.58 for wave-length 415, and taking no account of the light loss by reflection at cemented surfaces (which is found in practice to be negligible), we have as the remainder of the light after reflection at x surfaces of index 1.58

As a matter of fact the average loss in the intensity of the incident light after reflection at one glass-air surface of index 1.5 will be about 4 per cent, but as this loss increases with increase in refractive index, the loss in the case of modern anastigmatic objectives made of highly refracting Baryta Crown glass will generally be 5 per cent or upwards at each reflecting surface. The 4 per cent loss per surface holds approximately for all lenses constructed of "old achromats." It should here be reiterated that the loss at cemented surfaces is inappreciable, but if it is attempted to compute the loss by reflection at the interface between two refracting media of different index, the value of n used in the computation is taken as the relative index of the two media.

In his investigation of the light loss by reflection at the glass-air surfaces of various types of photographic objectives, in the manner outlined above, Martin secured the following data

	Loss per cent.	Efficiency per cent.
Single lenses (2 glass-air surfaces) such as: Landscape and Periscopic lenses	9.8	90.2
Double lenses (4 glass-air surfaces) such as: Aplanat, Protar, Double Anastigmat series III, Collinear, Orthostigmat, Periplanat, Biperiscope, etc.	18.7	81.3
Triple lenses (6 glass-air surfaces) such as: Petzval Portrait Lens, Triple Anastigmats, Tessar, Cooke, etc.	26.7	73.3
Quadruple lenses (8 glass-air surfaces) such as: Planar, Double Anastigmat Type B, Aristostigmat, Unar, Busch Omnar, Homocentric, etc.	33.9	66.1

From the foregoing examples it is seen that the difference in light loss by reflection between each of the four types of lenses considered is about 10 per cent. These differences are considerably reduced when the light loss by absorption for the various kinds of glass is taken into consideration. Pflüger ("Zeitschrift für Wissenschaftliche Photographie"—1903, p. 141) has investigated the light loss by absorption of various kinds of optical glass. Using light of wave-length 415, and a glass thickness of 1 cm. he found the loss by absorption to be:

For Ordinary Crown Glass..... 1.8 per cent
For Baryta Crown Glass..... 5.2 per cent
For Baryta Flint Glass..... 2.5 to 2.7 per cent

(The two last mentioned glasses are extensively used in the construction of Anastigmats.)

While, as has been shown, the principal light loss in uncemented (air-space) lenses is due to reflection, there is also an appreciable light loss in cemented objectives, due to the greater thickness of the glass elements, and the somewhat yellowish color of the Canada Balsam with which the glasses are cemented together. In the course of his investigations Martin took occasion to compare the light loss of a cemented and an air-space lens. The cemented lens was a Goerz Double Anastigmat, Series III; the uncemented objective was a Busch, Series III. Both lenses were of like speed (f7.7) and focal length (300 mm.). The comparison follows:

GOERZ ANASTIGMAT

		Total loss	Efficiency
Loss by reflection about	18.5
Loss by absorption about	14.1	32.6	67.4

BUSCH ANASTIGMAT

		Total loss	Efficiency
Loss by reflection about	32.5
Loss by absorption about	4.7	37.2	62.8

This shows that a cemented Anastigmat is only about 5 per cent more efficient than an uncemented one, as regards the intensity of the light transmitted under equal conditions.

While Martin's interesting investigation was a more or less mathematical one, the subject of light loss by reflection and absorption has been very practically investigated for various types of photographic lenses by Mr. Robert W. Cheshire[5], whose experiments will be briefly described.

Mounted at one end of an optical bench was a Nernst lamp, the light from which was focused by a microscope objective upon a small circular opening placed at the principal focus of a telescope objective. By passing through the telescope objective the light beam was collimated to parallelism, and was then directed upon one side of the diffusing screen of a Lummer-Brodhun photometer. The other side of the photometer screen was illuminated by a comparison glow-lamp at the other end of the optical bench. After equalizing the illumination of the photometer field, by adjusting the distances of the two-light sources, the photographic lens to be tested was mounted on the optical bench between the telescope objective and the photometer, and directly in the path of the light rays proceeding from the telescope. A match was again made with the photometer, and from the difference between readings when the photographic lens was in place, and when it was removed, the light loss for the objective could be calculated.

As the result of an extensive series of tests and comparisons, all reduced to numerical data in the paper cited, Cheshire sums up his findings briefly as follows:.

"For each glass-air surface allow, for the loss due to reflection, 5.22 per cent of the light incident upon that surface, and for each centimeter of the axial thickness of glass in the lens allow, for the absorption loss, 2.4 per cent of the light incident upon the lens. An example will make this clear. Consider a lens with eight glass-air surfaces in which the total axial thickness is 2.8 centimeters. At each glass-air surface 5.22 per cent of the light is reflected, and, therefore, 94.78 per cent only is transmitted. Consequently if reflection were the only cause of the loss of light the amount transmitted would be $(.9478)^8$, of the incident light, or 65.1 per cent. Due to absorption, however, there will be a further loss of (2.8 x 2.4) per cent, or 6.7 per cent. The final value of the percentage transmission is, therefore (for the lens in question), 65.1—6.7 or 58.4 per cent."

The foregoing outline of the investigation and method of computing the light loss by reflection and absorption in photographic lenses, affords the means of some profitable experiment. The application of these data to optical projection yields important information, as is also the case with any optical system containing numerous reflecting surfaces.

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

Music Plagiarists—And Large Imaginations

WHO wrote "Tipperary?" Just now some woman out west declares that she wrote the chorus with another title and then sang it to Harry Williams in 1908. But she does not say which Harry Williams she has in mind. And if she did write the song, why didn't she come forth and put in a claim long before this? Maybe she did write a chorus like "Tipperary," and maybe scores of other composers used the same strains in the same way long before she was born. Then again, Harry Williams may never have heard her song until he was notified that he had appropriated it. If Williams or any other writer were to analyze the song he would find that the same strains had been used before, as the tune itself is a very ordinary one.

The practice of unknown persons declaring that they are the authors of hits carrying well-known names has become quite a joke in the song wold, and practically every hit writer has discovered others trying to claim credit for his work. L. Wolfe Gilbert has been told that the chorus of his "Lily of the Valley" has been taken from various foreign songs and operas. One woman wrote in saying that a friend of hers wrote the chorus while studying music on the other side of the Atlantic.

Every once in at while some one bobs up to say that he helps Al. Bryan write his songs, while others contend that they supply him with titles and ideas. While discussing this topic the other day Bryan remarked:

"Any time you see my name on a song you can bet your last cent that I wrote every line of it, and when the time comes that I have to depend upon others for titles, ideas, or lyrics, I will quit and get a job."

Jack Mahoney is another with a following of claimants for his song honors. He has kept a record of those posing as the author of "Summertime," and up to date he has discovered fifteen. Several years ago when Mahoney was in business for himself he wrote a song called "I'd Give the World to Know," and shortly after publishing it he received a visit from a man who writes, prints, and peddles his own songs. The latter accused Jack of having stolen the melody from one of his numbers and threatened to bring suit. Instead of putting the man out of his place, Jack took him into a piano room and showed his accuser where the latter had taken his chorus from "Break the News to Mother" and several other hits. That was the last Mahoney ever heard of the suit.

So much has been written about popular songs, writers, and the fortunes they make, in spite of the fact that many successful writers cannot read or play music, that thousands get the impression that songs and ideas are frequently stolen when submitted by unknown writers. And the suits over songs, as well as the "song shark" cases that have been aired in the courts, help to strengthen this idea.

Time and again I have tried to convince skeptics that one does not have to be able to read or play in order to write popular music. I have tried to show them how melody is born in some, and that these gifted persons cannot prevent melody from bubbling from their system any more than they can live and not exhale air. When you tell some that Earl Carroll writes successful music comedies without knowing one note from another they simply laugh, and infer that his publisher very likely gives him all the good ideas and melodies that are submitted through the mails, little dreaming that Carroll's publisher, Leo. Feist, would rather pass up the chances of a dozen hits than have a suit hanging over his head.

Once you get within the inner circle of the song game you become sort of an outlaw with most folks, in so far as songs are concerned.

At times I wonder how Sophie Tucker will fare out with something she started last year. An article in the American Magazine stated that she is one of the few vaudeville headliners who lends a helping hand to the struggling song writer, and as a result she was bombarded with more than a thousand song manuscripts from all over the country. They followed her around the circuit and worked on her nerves to such an extent that for a time she was afraid to ask for mail. The lyrics dealt with all topics imaginable. Now some day she will use a big publisher's song with a topic that was in one of the manuscripts, and the owner of that manuscript will swear by that's holy that she took the idea and passed it on to the publisher. Poor Sophie!

The chap that wrote that the way of the transgressor is hard forgot to add that the way of the popular song writer is harder.

Does Spectacular Music Advertising Pay?

DOES it pay a music publisher to give away 72,000 copies of sheet music in order to put over a novel stunt in advertising? This is what one would have to do if he wished to take a full page in The Saturday Evening Post. Leo Feist did it, and he is just as likely to repeat. The question that bothers many is what does Feist get out of it?

In the first place he has set the music-loving public talking about his daring, and he has established a record for advertising; but he must derive something more tangible than gossip and a record. I don't know what his mail order sales amount to, but it is safe to say that no live "Plugger" would accept the sum for a month's salary, for in the first place Feist asks fifteen cents for a copy that you can buy in a Woolworth store for ten, and no sane person is going to put out the extra five. Feist may be a gambler, but he is no fool, and he must be getting some real benefits from this sort of advertising.

It is obvious that Feist's idea is to reach music buyers, and in taking space in the Post he hits the eyes of persons in little towns that never get to see a vaudeville show, and these same music-loving folks swear by the Post, and think that any article advertised in its pages must be good. And when you get down to facts Feist is simply doing what every big national manufacturer does with his goods. The biscuit maker advertises his wares with the idea of keeping them in the mind of the public and having them go to the nearest grocer when they want biscuits. The biscuit maker does not ask the reader to send in a dime for a box, but gives publicity to his wares so that the dealer will have confidence in the manufacturer and know that the goods will be kept before the public, and as long as such is the case, he will not run much chance of having the stuff left on his shelves. And in advertising in the Post, Feist reaches something like 4,000,000 readers.

With good songs and the right kind of advertising, ninety per cent of the song publishers should be doing three times the amount of business they do annually—and this does not apply to advertising in theatrical or trade papers. A good song is a temptation to the average person, but he will not fall unless brought face to face with it. And thousands who would purchase the light music never think of going into a ten cent store; but if they met song announcements at different turns in their daily lives they would soon get into the habit of buying.

The other day I followed a wagon with a piano and a singer. In four hours the pair sold close on to four hundred copies of one song—all they had to sell. The song was not a hit and had not been exploited in vaudeville, but it had been brought to their attention just when they were in a musical mood. And if the music vendors had been handling one of the songs advertised in the Post they would in all likelihood have sold ten times as many, for the dear old public likes to buy the things that are being talked about, be they songs, shoes, or shirts. Perhaps this is the way Feist figures it out, and whether he does or not, he must be getting results, otherwise he would not keep at it. Did you every try it?

WHEN "OVER THERE" WASN'T THERE.

Some say that Billy Jerome is lucky; others hold that he knows the game from beginning to end, but he says you never can tell, as the song game has no prophets. The public is an iconoclast of the worst sort. The other day while his manager, Mr. Frank, was going over a pile of "Over There" orders two feet high, I asked him if it has sold a million copies, and Jerome smiled:

"Not yet, but come around in a few months."

"You were a lucky boy from the start," he was reminded.

He and his manager stared at the same object. Both appeared to be on the verge of talking at once. Finally Jerome said:

"You wouldn't think so if you had followed "Over There" from the beginning. You don't know that Nora Bayes had been singing the song for six weeks before we received one order?"

And I didn't. Did you?

Artistic Effects in Piano Playing for Motion Pictures

WHILE the pianist who plays for motion pictures is hampered by the limitations of the instrument, wonders can be accomplished if intelligent study and conscientious effort are seriously considered.

Many pianists labor under the handicap of poor foundation technique and lack of musical training. Some are not entirely responsible for this as many teachers, anxious to get results from their pupils, overlook and neglect the many small details that are necessary in artistic piano playing. There are many pianists throughout the country today who are striving to overcome the obstacles that have been unintentionally laid in their path by music teachers in the earlier days. It therefore requires much patience and labor on the part of the pianist to overcome these petty hindrances which should have been corrected long ago. Before success can be achieved playing for pictures, a thorough knowledge of the principles of music must be mastered.

While there are many pianists throughout the country without musical training who are fairly successful in their interpretation of music for the film, the fact cannot be denied that the pianist who is a thoroughly trained musician has a distinct advantage over the rival who lacks a thorough musical training.

The question that confronts the untrained pianist is: "How can I succeed in music and make up for the time I have lost?" The answer is a simple one—work and study. Nothing can be gained without effort and work. There are some pianists, however, who believe themselves so far advanced that it is impossible to acquire further musical knowledge. There are some musicians who believe it a waste of time to study or practice. This is one of the reasons for the low standard of music heard in many picture theatres.

Many pianists will ask: "Is it worth my while to study?" "I am getting as much salary as the manager can afford to pay." Salaries are rising in moving picture theatres and a satisfactory musical setting for the film is recognized as an important feature and one that is bound to bring rewards. A careful analysis of the programs of the leading moving picture houses in the large cities will convince the incredulous musician that this is true.

The pianist setting out to correct his playing and to improve his technic must understand that scales are the foundation of study and that they are the basic principle of musical formation. They should be practised daily, repeated and mastered, as they are the basis of a perfect technic.

The quality of practice you do and not the quantity is what counts in the long run. You can sit at a piano an hour and not accomplish as much as you do in fifteen minutes of hard, serious study. Continually playing a piece over and over is not practice. The fingering must be studied and memorized. Without the proper use of the fingers it is often impossible to execute certain phrases correctly. Keep a fresh outlook on your work and remember that attack is highly important. Some pianists attack a number in a careless, indifferent manner and then wonder why they do not get the best results from their efforts. Incorrect scale playing is one of the greatest obstacles of the ambitious pianist. Scale playing can only reach perfection when the hands are supple, elastic and muscular. There are few pianists who possess a hand lending itself to the manifold requirements of an advanced [illegible] The necessity for long practice is therefore self-evident.

The pianist should possess a firm and delicate touch, therefore having such control over the key-board that he can control his fingers to the degree of expressing all his emotions with the shading and coloring necessary when portraying the varied emotions depicted on the screen.

The importance of a well arranged musical program must be seriously considered by the pianist who wishes to interpret pictures successfully. Some pianists are satisfied with a small library and consider the outlay for new music an unnecessary expense. The acquisition of cheap music is an unnecessary expense, but music by the best composers never loses its interest or value to the true musician.

There is much interest and enjoyment attached to the selection of new music for the pictures. The pianist who does not develop his technic is not in a position to learn and appreciate the possibilities of new music. This pianist is in a rut and the only way he can lift himself out and make progress towards better music is to improve his technic so that the difficulties in some of the best numbers are not stumbling-blocks.

A careful and musicianly rendition of "Kamenoi-Ostrow" by Rubenstein is certain to be appreciated by any audience, the charm of this number having a wide appeal. Rachmaninoff's Prelude in certain dramatic scenes is an excellent example of how better music fits the picture. This number is particularly fitted for intensely dramatic action and can be played loud or soft as the emotion demands. Grieg's compositions are particularly adapted to much screen action, many of them possessing the dramatic style that is suitable for emotional scenes. Tschaikowsky has written many compositions that are also very effective for screen emotion. Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn and Shubert are composers who should not be forgotten when selecting music for the film.

Imagination plays an important part in the selection of appropriate music. For example, McDowell's "Witches' Dance" is a most realistic interpretation of witches dancing. The whirring runs in the first part impress one with their weirdness and the quiet middle portion of the number impresses one with awe and grave concern. Chopin's Etude, Opus 10, No. 12 was composed amidst war clouds of grim battle. This picturesque and thunderous piece of music was conceived after the composer had heard that the Russians had captured Warsaw. With the crashing passages, one can almost see the flashes of the battle's fire. From the first sweeping chord to the last harmonic crash, one can feel the strength and power in this masterpiece and the genius of its author.

There is a piece of music that will fit perfectly every emotion portrayed on the screen. It is the pianist who is progressive and ambitious to learn new music who selects and plays the highest standard for his audience. Chopin's waltzes are very descriptive and for woodland scenes, waterfalls and for some scenic pictures these waltzes will be found to fit the action perfectly.

The pianist must realize that these waltzes cannot be played at sight and that much study and practice are necessary before they can be played for an audience. The appreciation and satisfaction derived from the selection of high-class music for the film is well worth the time and effort spent in making the rendition of such music possible.

Exterior and Orchestra Views of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., and Air Washer and Refrigerating Plant

Montgomery Gets One of South's Finest Theatres

MONTGOMERY'S newest motion picture house, the New Empire Theatre, was formally opened to the public a few weeks ago, under the management of H. C. Farley.

The design is in the Renaissance style, with elaborate and artistic treatment, the front faced with stone and pressed brick topped with a handsome stone cornice. The copper Marquise goes the full width of the sidewalk along the entire frontage, 72 feet. Alabama cream marble wainscoat six feet high forms one of the attractive features of the lobby, which is fourteen feet in width and forty feet in length, with ornamental plaster cornices and wall ceiling decorations. Two main entrances lead from the lobby to the auditorium, and the aisles are so constructed as to permit the greatest convenience of ingress and egess. The ticket office is in the centre of the lobby, the ladies' rest rooms on the right side and the gentlemen's retiring room on the left of the lobby. Over the lobby is located the office of the manager of the theatre, and it is so arranged that through a window, from which he can always look, he can see if the operator is throwing the pictures on the screen correctly.

But the interior is a surprising feature. There is but one floor for the audience, no balconies, no steps to climb. The auditorium has a bowled floor with an incline of 7 feet and 6 inches so that those seated in the rear seats of the theatre are well above the heads of those in front of them and their view is not obstructed. The surroundings of the screen are provided with a gorgeous architectural treatment, with niches located on each side of this screen, which are provided with full life-size cast statuary, representing statues of Liberty. The entire color scheme of the decorations was so selected as to give a richness to the interior of the theatre and to do away with the flashy, gaudy decorations often found in picture houses. Throughout the house the color scheme is bronze and gold, the walls shaded down from dark to light gray and the panels decorated in mulberry colors, something similar to damask.

The mechanical ventilating, heating and cooling equipment consists of an air shaft, large intake fan, air washer, twelve-ton refrigerating plant cooling chamber, heating chamber, boiler and general air chamber, all located in the basement, and a seven-foot exhaust fan operated in a pent house above the attic. With this 20,000 cubic feet of air per minute constantly will be taken from the air shaft forced by means of a seven-foot fan through the air washer which in summer is cooled by artificial refrigeration. The same operation of the mechanical plant heats the theatre in winter except that it most naturally forces the air through a heating chamber that has been installed in the basement. All of the machinery is operated by electric motors, and the entire device in addition to its other points of excellence, is found to be absolutely without noise or vibration.

The system of lighting is that of indirect lighting, and has been carefully studied from every angle to obtain the most pleasant and desirable effect for a moving picture theatre, with a four color scheme in the auditorium, which enables the operator to use any color of lighting most suitable for the subject of the screen. The operating room is absolutely fire-proof and by means vent in the top there is an exhaust fan to carry off the hot air as it comes from the machine.

The orchestra, augmented with a pipe organ, is one of the crowning features of the new theatre. It is complete in every detail, and the organist is one of the most capable musicians to be found in this country. The pipes of the organ are concealed in richly decorated chambers on each side of the screen, while the keyboard is operated from the orchestra pit.

Mr. Farley was for many years identified with vaudeville and the old Empire Theatre and the Empress Theatre in Montgomery, Ala. The Empire policy calls for big photoplay features produced by the leading moving picture concerns of the country, all the biggest to be shown as soon as obtainable.

California Sets Pace for West

WHEN the California theatre, at Market and Fourth streets, San Francisco, is opened on November 1, a new standard will have been set for motion picture theatres in the West. Largest and finest on the Pacific Coast, the California will contain the best in theatre design so far in use, and several features of importance of which it alone will benefit.

The newest addition to the rapidly growing list of palatial cinema houses now has been completed, so far as structural work is concerned. Only the finishing touches to the decorations remain, and these will not delay the opening, for which elaborate ceremonies have been arranged.

The Market Street Realty Company, owners of the theatre, have combined in the California the result of experience in the operation of the Portola theatre adjoining, owned by the same company, and itself an example of high-class theatre establishment. Herbert Rothchild is president of the company, with Eugene H. Roth manager. Harry David will be the latter's assistant.

The house in general is conspicuous for the extreme efforts made for the comfort and pleasure of its audiences. Built of reinforced concrete, the equivalent of a building four stories in height, ample room has been provided for the many accessories of entertainment provided. An area of 110 by 170 feet is covered by the building.

The front of the building has been finished in white tiling, and lavish decoration is carried throughout the interior. In the lobby a hand-colored frieze, 72 feet long and 5 feet wide, symbolical of the history of California, has been painted by a local artist at a cost of $5,200. The color scheme of decoration in general is white and green, embellished by free use of gold leaf in high relief.

The total seating capacity of the theatre will be 2,870 seats. Of this the main floor will hold 1,300 seats, in addition to six boxes and six loges of six seats each. In the balcony, which has a tremendous sweep from the equivalent of the second floor level to the top of the building, includes, in addition to ordinary seats, 68 loges and 12 boxes, each with a seating capacity of six. Chairs and furniture for loges and boxes were supplied by the Andrews Chair Company, of San Francisco.

Among the chief features of the building is the largest orchestral organ ever constructed. This instrument, a Wurlitzer organ, costing $54,000, is so large that it was impossible to group the pipes in one section. It has been divided into six chambers around the building, two on each side, with the echo organ placed in the attic space and the main organ carried over the proscenium arch the entire width of the interior.

Dr. Bruce Gordon Kinsley, the famous San Francisco organist, will be master of the keyboard, and will be stationed at a console in the orchestra pit, which console is placed on an elevator so that during the organ recital he may be raised into view of the audience.

So complex and intricate are the organ controls that a special relay room containing them has been placed in the basement. This room is enclosed in plate glass, and will be on exhibition for the audience.

Extensive conveniences have been provided for patrons during intermissions, and while waiting to enter the interior of the theatre. Instead of forcing hundreds to stand in line waiting, an immense loggia, 100 feet long and 25 feet wide, on the Market street side, is provided with lounging chairs; in fact, is fitted up as an indoor garden to accommodate those waiting for seats.

A man's lounge with magazines and smoking materials; and a women's rest room also are large and roomy. In the women's rest room a feature will be six dressing-tables, each fitted with all the accessories to beauty to be found in the star's dressing-room at a high-class theatre.

In the projection booth have been installed three Motiograph machines. Here also a joint control of the lighting system with that on the stage has been located, so that the operator may control the lighting of the house in harmony with the nature of the picture displayed. A circuit switchboard, on which the entire lighting system is arranged in six units, controls the master light, with the color variations of amber, blue, yellow, red and light green.

Electrical installation is believed to be the most extensive of any theatre in the West. Some idea of the magnitude of the installation is gained from the fact that the lighting of the main ceiling is 84 kilowatts. In the main floor of the auditorium over one mile of conduit is carried, this amount being vastly exceeded by the length of conduit in the main ceiling. Motors controlling curtains, ventilating apparatus, stage machinery and elevators develop a total of 57 horsepower.

The design of the theatre, carried out under the supervision of Henry Jacobs, of San Francisco, is advanced in many particulars, especially in the avoidance of any stairways. All approaches to the balcony are by inclines, so that crowds may be handled with ease and lack of danger of accident. Entrance to the balcony is from three different levels, one incline discharging at the front of the balcony, one at the middle, and the third at the rear.

In the operation of the theatre a large force of employes already is being trained in its duties. In addition to the chief executives, 69 people will be employed. These include three assistant managers, four projection operators, twenty ushers, an electrician, two carpenters, four janitors, four maids, four cashiers, a head usher, two door men, four house attendants and two exchange telephone girls.

The orchestra, under Dr. Kinsley's direction, will number 17, with three assistant organists. Eight additional musicians will be there on Sunday concerts.

Building Outlook in West Excellent

J. F. Daly, traveling representative and ventilating engineer, for the Typhoon Fan Company, 1544 Broadway, has just returned from a trip out West where he was visiting architects who are contemplating building new theatres. Mr. Daly states that the outlook for the coming season in the building line is most promising. He also states that theatre owners are giving more attention to proper ventilation than in the past. This he says is because so many exhibitors who have owned theatres found that with proper ventilation it not only increased their business in Summer but that it also meant a great deal in holding a better class of patrons who are always particular about ventilating conditions.

Nineteen years ago

this man started to design and build Motion Picture Projectors for the firm of Blackton & Smith (which later became the Vitagraph Company).

In 1899 he took charge of the projection at the Eden Musee.
During his nine years' connection there he was constantly busy experimenting; tried out every possible device; discarded the unfit, and held fast to that which was good.
As a result, the Eden Musee was acknowledged at that time to have the finest projection in the world—so good that when Charles Urban came over (about 1903) he said: "You are projecting my pictures better than I can do it myself in London."

In 1908 he started the Edengraph, in connection with R. G. Hollaman, who was president of the Eden Musee.

In 1909 Francis B. Cannock (for it is he) was joined by Edwin S. Porter, and the two together invented and designed the Simplex.

She Sought to Defeat That Thing Called Love

ALL her life a beautiful woman stifled the impulses of her heart. She would not believe. She would not trust. She would not forgive the one who had destroyed her faith in man.

Picture Jane Cowl in such a role—beautiful, appealing, powerful. A woman of charm and emotion; a woman to set men's hearts athrob, but a woman who unyieldingly said to men: "Stand back."

This is the keenest, biggest and most compelling drama that Goldwyn, thus far, has made into a picture. Again you get a great story, featuring a great star by a famous author when

FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD

SINCE the great clash of nations made patriotic drama a subject for the motion picture screen, there has never been such a photo-panorama as "FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD," Captain Edwin Bower Hesser's soul-gripping story of humanity in its grapple of life and death.

In this mighty eight-reel production you see feats of human courage almost beyond credence—how your American youth and manhood behaves under fire—how your Canadian neighbors to the north of you mobilized and went into action in behalf of the Motherland.

Watching the patient, brave women of the Red Cross take their places of duty near the men of the Allied Armies you thrill as the entire American nation thrilled as 30,000 women paraded down Fifth Avenue, New York, proving woman's gigantic role in the present world-conflict.

Feats of daring to set your blood a-tingle; thousands of men giving their all in defense of a nation's honor; a great crisis that made even cowards transform before your eyes into heroes deserving of decorations for bravery.

Under a policy of wide open bookings every exhibitor in America has an equal chance to get this great production for his theatre, and a prompt decision now makes "FOR THE FREEDOM OF THE WORLD" available in any Goldwyn exchange in North America.

Magnificent lithographs and accessories will enable every exhibitor to challenge the attention of the public and bring audiences flocking into picture theatres everywhere. This big feature can be booked only through the offices of

"In 'Magda' Miss Young swept everything before her. It is the most convincing performance she has ever given."
——New York Tribune.

"The most forceful emotional role she has appeared in."

My dear Mr. Brenon:

Of all the publicity matter coming to my desk there is none that gives me as much pleasure as that sent out by yourself and Mr. Johnson. I thoroughly agree with your idea of making the Director responsible for his production and then giving him the credit. We have played all your productions up to the date and shall never forget that rare old classic made abroad "Ivanhoe." Your last production we played three weeks ago and it went very well. Three of four of these productions and three would be no need of advertising a star, the name of Brenon would be enough. We featured it in all our advertising of "The Lone Wolf" and fully believe that the next Brenon picture we show, that your name will draw just as well if not better than the Stars.

We are much interested in "The Fall of the Romanoffs". Will you kindly advise us when you know who is to be the purchaser in this territory.

With kind personal regards and wishing you the best of success in your coming venture, I am

Sincerely yours,

H. W. LAMB, President

Mr. Exhibitor:

WHAT COUNTS?

CHILDREN COUNT

with everyone more than anything else in the world. Children pictures have a magnetic attraction that draws all ages. Did you read what Marion Howard, the famous Boston moving picture writer, says of the twelve 25 minute dramas.

"Do Children Count?"

LITTLE MARY McALISTER

"Why do not all first class theatres put on the 'Do Children Count?' series? What excuse is there for denying your public the right to see something more than worth while? The very title is of itself an advertisement, for intelligent persons know well that children do count everywhere, and these pictures point it out dramatically. Adults and kiddies alike are enjoying the series, which are a credit to Essanay and to the theatres showing them."

Hammering at the Main Point

IN one mail two letters arrive giving typical expression to the variance of views among exhibitors regarding our recent editorials.

We stated that internal conditions—high rentals, etc.—had brought on an exhibitor crisis. Later the levying of war taxes gave strength to our words; external pressure has been brought to play in a situation already critical and now doubly so.

We declared it our belief that if exhibitors were to weather the crisis the first necessity was better retailing. And better retailing, we asserted, meant eventually and now—higher admission prices. As means to that end we listed more efficient advertising, more skilful presentation of pictures, and more thorough study of his place and power in the business scheme of the film world by every exhibitor.

That is the text we have been preaching and pounding. Which brings us back to the two letters we have labeled typical.

One is from an exhibitor in a small-sized New York State community. After an extended absence from his theatre he recently returned with somewhat of an outsider's viewpoint. In his absence competition had become keener, and all was not well.

Two weeks close to the ground investigation before resuming actual management of his theatre causes him to write, "I am beginning to learn what you mean by better retailing. I have not been a good retailer. There were loose ends everywhere."

There is more to the letter—three typewritten pages of first-hand facts. This expression of one angle of reader opinion we shall leave for more extended discussion later.

* * * *

THEN there is the opposing view.

Quoting a trade paper declaring more quality productions to be the need of the independent market, our reader adds: "This is the kind of dope that the boys in the bushes like to read. You take the stand that the exhibitor is all wrong if he does not put his pictures over. You also infer that every picture is good and that the theatre manager is the only guy who does not know his business."

You are wrong, Kind Reader—and we hesitate to say it in the face of your accusation.

We don't believe that "every picture is good"—because we are not blind.

We don't believe the "exhibitor is all wrong"—or we wouldn't be publishing a trade paper aiming for his interest and support.

We don't believe the "exhibitor is the only guy who does not know his business"—because, well, we have even heard manufacturers admit that they don't know theirs.

And not believing these things we would not attempt to tell them to our readers—because we are not fools, and we don't believe they are.

* * * *

WITH all this said and done, we must repeat—you are wrong, Kind Reader. You have missed the point of all the hammering we have been doing.

The outstanding fact, and one really necessary thought, the jarring idea that will shake from the rut is this:

The Coming year marks an exhibitor crisis.

The manufacturer will have his problems to solve—let him suffer if he fails.

But the manufacturer—individually and collectively—can suffer and still weather the storm.

Not so the exhibitor. Not so the theatre man with his realty holdings, his mortgages, his rent, his bread and butter wrapped up in each day's receipts.

For him—we will repeat again—external and internal conditions have created a crisis.

It is his crisis, his fight.

He may be aided or hindered by other branches of the industry—but that is beside the question. Others may hire the undertaker for us, but we must live our own life.

* * * *

LET us forget for the time being higher admissions, better showmanships, more intensive advertising.

Those are the means we believe necessary to handle the crisis. But let it suffice if we can drive home realization that there is a crisis.

Let it suffice if the exhibitor will realize that this year more than ever he must rely less on "picture luck" and more on his own brain and efforts.

Let it suffice if the exhibitor will face blunt facts plainly and realize that he and he alone can work out his own salvation.

Speaking Editorially:

Box Office Reports on the War Tax

THE suggestion made by Manager Pettijohn, of the American Exhibitors' Association, that all exhibitors make a complete report on the box office effects of the admission tax, seems a good and practical one.

Mr. Pettijohn recommends that reports be made thirty days after the law goes into effect—which would make December 1 the day for filing; and he asks that exhibitors file these reports at the headquarters of both National Exhibitor organizations.

These reports, we take it, should give the comparative receipts at the box office before and after the law was effective. The months of October and November might be set against each other in this respect. Weather and other good or bad conditions should be noted; also, of course, the raising or lowering of admission prices, etc.

Mr. Pettijohn's idea is, provided a sufficient number of reports are received and the figures are important, to use the evidence at Washington in December as a basis for a repeal or change in the present law.

Motion Picture News offers its services in the securing of these box office reports. We will be glad to assist in the preparation of them and will receive them and forward them to both of the National associations of exhibitors.

We believe, as we have often stated, that box office facts and figures would have won the tax fight for the exhibitor in the first place. But it is not too late. In fact, now is the time to prepare them.

Let every exhibitor think over the matter earnestly. Send us these box office reports; or file them directly with your local, state or national league. Begin making them out on November 1.

The Government requires a report anyway for tax-fixing purposes. This report will simply give the bare facts of box-office receipts.

The argumentative report, required for the purpose of changing the law must be analytical and comparative—all to the end of showing just what effect the tax has had upon the exhibitors' business.

A High Light on High Rentals

B. F. OXLEY, of Bradford, Pa., and J. F. Crossley, of Middletown, Ohio, are two exhibitors whom we feel it necessary to list in the roster of "good retailers." Both have favored us with communications regarding our recent high rental discussion.

Since the point made by these exhibitors is the same, and the views so representative of those held by many exhibitors, we shall allow Mr. Oxley to express the case:

"One thing to bear in mind," he declares, "is that in a city of this size we are obliged to contract for fourteen stars of one program when there are but six that ever have been box-office attractions here. The eight have always been losers because patrons do not like the regular types that these have uniformly portrayed. The prices for the big ones could be afforded were it not for the joker attached—you must play them all. You can't make enough on the good ones to carry the overload of the weak ones."

The problem then is found in the productions listed as "losers" by Mr. Oxley and Mr. Crossley.

They are even more the manufacturer's problem than the exhibitor's. Are they "losers" by predestination? Or will service and advertising backing bring them into the winning column?

A Patron Tax—Not a Theatre Tax

S. A. MORAN, president of the Michigan Branch of the American Exhibitors' Association, has a message for exhibitors regarding the war tax that cannot be given too much prominence.

"Urge all exhibitors," he declares, "to begin at once a campaign of enlightenment among their patrons so that the theatregoers generally may understand that the exhibitors are not shifting any of their burdens onto their patrons. The Government clearly intended that the dear public should pay this tax, so that in no sense of the word can anyone rightfully assume that the exhibitor is shirking his duty in not paying it. The exhibitor has no right to pay it even if he were disposed to do so, for the law clearly states that this tax is aimed directly at the patron."

Mr. Moran's point is that the only connection the exhibitor should have with the tax is the trouble and inconvenience of collecting it. He should not make any attempt to collect it. It is not a theatre tax—but a patron tax.

The point is well taken. Education through cooperative effort by the exhibitors of each section will do the job. And the patron, as Mr. Moran declares, once he learns the Government's intention and is assured that he is not paying the exhibitor's bill, will not be a slacker.

"The New School of Trade Journalism"

WE have often wondered just what was meant by the "new school of trade journalism" so volubly exploited by a certain apostle; and being interested in all progressive phases of the publishing business we have waited patiently for a detailed explanation. Somehow or other we have placed the matter side by side with orator Bryan's crown of thorns speech and his failure thereafter to apply it to the country's banking system.

The explanation seems to have come from the practical newspaper mind of Editor Nutting of the Canadian Motion Picture Digest.

The aforementioned apostle wrote a long "news" article on the recent convention of the exhibitors of the Maritime Provinces. The greater part of the article is devoted to the apostle's own speech, which Mr. Nutting finds must have been written after the convention, since he cannot reconcile the written with the spoken utterances he heard. The "news" part of the article deliberately ignores, says Mr. Nutting, all the news of the convention except that which apparently was of personal interest to the reporter.

We are indebted to Mr. Nutting for the lucid explanation of the "new school of trade journalism."

Hammering at the Main Point

(Concluded from preceding page)

Let it suffice if one exhibitor is shaken from the easy going of the rut to the thick underbrush of thought and study.

His thought may lead to—who can tell?

Perhaps it hurts to be told that the majority of exhibitors will need higher admissions and better retailing to meet the crisis.

Perhaps it will be more pleasant for this majority to work the lesson out themselves and learn that they must get higher admissions and become better retailers.

Tax Affecting Admission Explained—Effective Nov. 1

Exhibitors Must Be Prepared with Daily Reports on Box Office Receipts On and After Nov. 1—Penalty of Twenty Years in Prison for False Report—Eastman Charging One-Fourth Cent on Raw Film

WITH little more than two weeks remaining before theatre managers throughout the country will be obliged to take heed of the significant passages in the Internal Revenue Tax Bill which was signed by President Wilson on the 3d day of October, 1917, to take effect on and after the 1st day of November, 1917, it becomes most important that those upon whom the Government has cast the burden of seeing to it that the amusement tax is collected, acquaint themselves with the various passages which bear directly upon the tax laid upon amusement admissions.

Everybody Hit

Those specifically referred to are the managers of motion picture theatres. As a matter of fact every man, woman or child who is a manager or owner of a place of amusement, whether it be a motion picture theatre, a theatre given over to the spoken drama, an opera house, cabaret, circus or what-not in the guise of a place of amusement where an admission price of more than five cents is charged and the amusement is not given for the benefit of religious, educational or charitable purposes or for social or fraternal organizations, is obliged to take cognizance of this law, because he or she is obliged to make monthly reports to the proper Government officers, of the box-office receipts for the month passed.

In last week's issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS the important passages in the bill were explained, relating to the motion picture industry, in a general way. Since then the writer realizing the great importance of the bill and appreciating the marked effect it was to have on the industry and the motion picture theatre in particular, has conferred with Mr. Lignon Johnson, general counsel for the United Managers' Protective Association of the Amusement Interests of the United States and Canada, for the purpose of making clear those clauses in the bill which, at first reading, present a more or less technical question to the layman. Mr. Johnson has made a careful study of the clauses in the bill relating to the tax on amusement admissions and his construction on the various passages which present legal questions, is given in the following passages, as interpreted by the writer.

Public Pays

One of the most important features of the bill is the passage which relates to the collection of the tax. In reading the bill, as signed by President Wilson, one would interpret the clause which provides for the collection of the tax, as meaning that the manager of a theatre or place of amusement, was obligated to collect the tax from the patron. Of course, whatever way this is done, the public is the one that pays the tax, but it can be so arranged by the exhibitor that the patron, although paying the tax, will not be paying any more actual money than he or she did before the tax law was put into effect. For example: The exhibitor's admission price has been fifteen cents. At the end of the month of November he will be obliged to report to the proper Government officials, an accurate statement of the box office receipts for the month of November. If such exhibitor desires to still charge his patron fifteen cents instead of seventeen cents, which he has a right to do, he must, in turning in his monthly report, show that his admission has been thirteen cents and his tax two cents. And he must show and advise the public that he is charging a flat rate of fifteen cents, and that it includes the admission price and the Government tax.

Must Tell Patrons

This is important because the exhibitor may get the impression, from reading the bill, itself, that he must charge the two cents in addition to the usual rate. It should be noted that if the exhibitor wishes to pay the tax himself, as he will be doing if he follows the above plan, he must advise the public of the admission charge and the Government tax. In short, the exhibitor, if he so desires, can pay the tax himself—that is—he can still charge the regular admission price, but the tax, whether it be one, two, three or fifty cents, must be deducted from that amount and the public must be so advised, and when his report for the month is turned in, it must show that his admission charge is thirteen cents and the tax two cents.

Another important clause in the bill relating to admissions, is that referring to the tax on the admission price for children. Where children, under the age of twelve years, are charged admission, the tax on such admission price is one cent, regardless of the amount of admission. This differs materially from the regulation of the tax on admission prices for adults and all persons over the age of twelve years. This means that even though a child under the age of twelve years, be charged fifty cents, the tax on such admission is one cent—no more and no less. In the case of adults, it will be remembered that the tax varies with the price of admission—one cent on every ten cents or fraction thereof greater than five cents, two cents on every fifteen or twenty cent charge and so on up the scale.

Passes Subject to Levy

The clause relating to the tax on season passes, complimentary tickets, etc., is very important. This clause was explained in the issue of last week, but it is well that it be mentioned here, for the reason that, it presents a question which seldom comes up for discussion in this connection, if ever, and it cannot be too carefully noted. Persons using passes, complimentary tickets or gaining admission to a theatre under any circumstances, excepting in the capacity of bonafide employees and municipal officers, must pay the same tax that they would have paid, if they had paid the regular admission price. For example: If a person gain admission to a motion picture theatre by virtue of a pass or other means through the compliment of the manager or owner, and the admission price to that theatre be fifty cents, that person must pay a tax of five cents.

No Tax Tickets Ready

Since the admission tax is to take effect at such an early date, November 1, 1917, Government officials have found it impossible to make arrangements for a uniform ticket, to be placed on sale. It was suggested by prominent men of the industry that the Government issue specially prepared tickets which would obviate all inconveniences in the way of collecting the tax. It has been explained that the Government Printing Office, at Washington, is so rushed with work, that this procedure could not be followed. It is stated, however, that after investigation by Gov-

TAX EFFECTIVE NOVEMBER 1

The internal revenue tax on amusement admissions will go into effect on the first day of November, 1917. Contrary to statements made in the daily press and in the various trade publications, last week, the time from which the amusement tax will date is November 1, not December 1. Officials in Washington were themselves uncertain as to the date. The lawmakers' intention was December 1, but an engrossing error made the tax bill as passed by Congress and signed by President Wilson specifically state that the tax shall be collected on and after the first day of November. This statement is made because, during the past week, the opinion was general that the tax bill was not to take effect until the first day of December.

Eastman Adds Cost

The Eastman Kodak Company last Thursday began charging an additional one-fourth cent for the tax on all film.

Northwest Exhibitors Recover from War Shock

Experienced Best Summer Business on Record and Autumn Business Looks Mighty Good—Draft Has No Bad Effect

FEAR of exhibitors throughout Nebraska, Iowa and the Dakotas that the leaving of so many young men for war would seriously hurt their business, has proved groundless. The best summer business on record, an autumn season rush that equals and in many instances surpasses any on record, and an optimistic outlook for the winter months marked the opinions of a number who were in Omaha last week.

"The people tell me they find all war interests of such a nature they are glad of an opportunity for diversion," said G. T. Stapleton of the Empress, Nebraska City, Neb. "They realize the war is a serious thing, and they give it serious attention. They need the change. That, coupled with the good crops, plenty of money, the better quality of shows and the growth of the motion picture business in Nebraska, is why my business is so good."

Mr. Stapleton had just booked the Billy West comedies. "Comedies are needed throughout the Middle West," he declared, "and I'll bet they are needed all over the country. I look upon it as a patriotic move to show comedies or something that will give the people of America a more optimistic outlook."

R. P. Booth of the Paramount theatre, Nebraska City, said he would have to enlarge his house if business kept growing. "It was never better in Nebraska City," he said. "I am showing the best pictures I can find and I am making money. I am getting more people from the country than ever before; probably because there are more automobiles in our county than ever before. My advertising is also intended to appeal to the farmer as well as to the town folks."

"It was the best summer I ever had and at the close of the fall season my books are going to show the best autumn season I ever had," said Mrs. R. A. Garmon, who owns the two theatres in North Platte, Neb. "The progress of better pictures in Nebraska is one reason. I have noted with delight that better pictures are being shown, better prices charged and better conditions in general maintain in the motion picture business in our state. Our exhibitors as a class are a higher grade of men. The public knows the picture has come to stay and with such people promoting the business they can depend upon its merit."

"I pay $700 a month for a downtown house seating 410, on which a man lost $13,000 last season," said F. A. Van Husan of the Hipp, big downtown house in Omaha, "and I am making money. Last week and this week are the biggest we ever had, and they are going to be bigger. How do we do it? We show Bluebirds, Butterflys and Vitagraph pictures every week. We realized we had to give a program that was good, and keep it there. Every show announces those in advance; like today we are saying, "Ethel Clayton Next Monday." Give the public a tip on what is coming in the future. I don't believe exhibitors impress this strongly enough. Every Friday and Saturday are Butterfly days, and the people are certain they will see Butterfly stars and plays on those days. Our admission price is higher than ever before and business is growing better every day."

"Business is so good I can be gone seven or eight days and it still will be making money when I get back," said Exhibitor H. J. Lego of the Majestic, Fort Dodge, Ia., in Omaha the other day.

"I had to turn them away when I showed 'Mother O' Mine" last week," said M. B. Nielson of the Majestic, Wayne, Neb. "I have made more money this year than in any two previous years. I never saw winter prospects better. There was a time when I thought business would be badly hurt by so many of our boys going to war. But it hasn't. The others come more than ever and more are coming every day."

Exhibitors of Six States to Meet in Boston

Six New England states will be represented at a convention of exhibitors affiliated with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which is scheduled for Tuesday, October 23, in Boston, and which is expected a formulate a closer unison and get-together spirit among the New England moving picture men. Various subjects and propositions affecting the industry are slated for discussion at the meeting, conducted under the auspices of the M. P. E. L. of A.

The six states, Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island and Connecticut, will hold separate meetings in the State suite of the Copley Plaza Hotel in the afternoon of October 23, and in the evening a joint session will be called in the grill room. A dinner is also planned for the evening.

Among the speakers who are expected to address the assemblage are Mayor Curley, of Boston; William A. Brady, presiwent of the National Association; Lee A. Ochs of the M. P. E. L. of A.; Alfred S. Black, president of the Maine branch of the League; Charles H. Bean and Ernest H. Horstmann.

France Film Company Selects First Release

Charles H. France, president of the recently formed France Film Company, Inc., announced last week that "The Natural Law" will be the first release of the new organization, which has established offices in the Candler Building. The production will mark Mr. France's debut in the independent field.

"The Natural Law," which will be made in eight reels, will star Marguerite Courtot, with Howard Hall in the role of the doctor. George Larkin plays the juvenile lead, and Maggie Holloway has been given a character part.

The release date of the feature has not been announced.

ernment officials, into this matter, and it is thought advisable and expedient, such procedure will be followed and there will be a uniform ticket issue. But until further notice the exhibitor will have to arrange this matter to suit his own convenience. The Government is not particularly interested in how the exhibitor collects the tax so long as the tax is collected and the exhibitor makes his box office returns, as prescribed in the blanks which will be issued for this purpose.

The house manager must collect the tax on all tickets sold and all passes used. The Government advises that daily box-office statements should be kept and signed by the theatre and company managers. These statements should show the important details, in itemized form—the number of tickets sold, and if there be more than one price the number of tickets sold at each price, and the number of passes honored together with the box office price of the seats to which the pass entitles the holder, so that the tax due under such pass, shall be specified.

Daily Statements

These daily statements, taken together, can be used to make out the monthly report which the Government requires each exhibitor or manager to submit, on regulation forms to be issued by the Collector of Internal Revenue. These monthly statements must be acknowledged and sworn to by the theatre manager, and the daily box-office statements must be kept and open at all times for the inspection of the duly authorized internal revenue inspectors or other officers, designated by the Government to do this work. Settlement will be made in December for the Novem-

Chadwick Issues a Statement

In our issue of October 20 appeared an advertisement of the Iliodor Picture Corporation in the form of a letter addressed to it by O'Gorman, Battle & Vandiver, Esqs., its attorneys, in which was stated, among other things, that Isaac E. Chadwick was one of the defendants in the action of the Iliodor Picture Corporation against Ben Blumenthal and others to restrain the use of the title, "The Tyranny of the Romanoffs with Iliodor." The last paragraph in the letter quoted from the opinion of the court is as follows:

"I am satisfied that the defendants have pirated one of the plaintiff's copyrighted photographs of Iliodor."

Mr. Chadwick wishes to explain by stating that in the suit in question there were many defendants, but that he was not one of those intended to be designated in the group of defendants mentioned in the last paragraph above quoted; that he merely contracted with the Export and Import Film Company for the distributing rights for New York and northern New Jersey, and had nothing whatever to do with the manufacture of the photoplay in question or its distribution by state rights, and therefore has done nothing in the premises which can be designated as pirating the Iliodor Picture Corporation photographs or property.

Exhibitors Boosting Prices—Many Hesitate in Tax Crisis

Los Angeles Men to Raise Admissions all Around—Uncertainty of Tax Operation Causes Many to Delay Action—Confusion Arises Out of Harrisburg, Pa., Attempt at Increase

WHILE the dogs of war are keeping many staunch American exhibitors awake nights, worrying over the calamity that has overtaken them in the shape of the drastic admission tax, some few bolder spirits are grappling with the situation, throwing their fears overboard and adding a nickel and a dime here and there, confident in the belief that the American public is not and will not show cheap-skate tendencies.

Those who have raised admissions report that business is booming. And their unanimous attitude is—let the tax fall where it will. The way the tax swooped down upon them, catching them as a national unit, unprepared, has left the majority of exhibitors gasping for breath.

Los Angeles Is Over the Top

The spirit of unified price boosting caught on most tellingly, from all reports, in the city of Los Angeles. Meanwhile, reports from other centers are gradually straggling in.

Fifteen cents is to be the lowest admission price for any first run down town Los Angeles theatre, beginning November 1st, or thereabouts, according to plans made by the theatre managers. This bottom price may later be increased to twenty cents, is the prediction.

The theatre men who own and manage the Broadway theatres have all come to the conclusion a price increase is necessary because of higher costs of conducting the theatres and the added burden of taxation which is shortly to become effective. No organization has been perfected by the theatre men, but at meetings recently held, when all owners were present, a gentleman's agreement was reached.

At several or the theatres this action will not mean any increase, as some are now charging twenty cents for the seats in the front half of the theatres and thirty for the seats in the rear of the houses. At others it will raise the price for the front seats from ten to fifteen. The number of ten-cent seats at the present time is very small, and there is a probability these will be eliminated altogether.

Old Price for Poor Seats

While theatre men will not make a definite statement, it is believed twenty-five and thirty-five cents will shortly become the prices at the greater number of theatres. Some managers may retain the fifteen cent price for the most undesirable seats.

Theatre men must increase the admission prices if they wish to succeed, for almost everything needed at the theatres now costs more money than previously, is the opinion voiced by C. F. Glimm, manager of Caulfield's Garrick Theatre, Los Angeles. This theatre has 708 seats, and the present prices provide ten cents for the front 198 seats; twenty cents for the middle 370 chairs, and thirty cents for the 136 in the rear of the house.

"The tax imposed by the government will mean theatres must increase their prices," Manager Glim said in speaking of the fall outlook. "The public wants amusement, and the people are willing to pay better prices, for they fully realize the costs imposed upon the theatre manager. Fifteen, twenty-five and thirty-five cents are not so high they will keep away business, and they are the logical prices for Los Angeles."

Manager Glimm has booked all the Hart and Fairbanks reissues, together with "Efficiency Edgar," Perfection release, and will have the last Mutual Chaplin subject the week of Oct. 21. This week he is showing William S. Hart in his first five-reel Western, "The Bargain," for about the fifth time in a first run Los Angeles house. The business is reported very good.

"Comebacks" Draw First Money

Showing "The Whip" first for three weeks at fifteen, twenty and thirty cents, and a few weeks later for twenty and thirty cents, caused Manager J. A. Quinn of Quinn's Rialto Theatre at Los Angeles to adopt the higher prices permanently. The two runs of "The Whip" were made in July and August, the poorest season of the year in Los Angeles, and the fact that the last engagement at the higher prices had greater attendance, points out that admission prices really make little difference when the people actually want to see a show.

There is a grave danger of getting prices too high, acording to Manager Quinn. His contention is that motion picture theatres are for the masses, and if more than twenty-five and thirty-five cents is charged, the theatres will lose their greatest patronage.

Price Boost in Northwest Follows Good Crops

Exhibitors Begin to See the Silver Linings in Lifting Clouds—Better Run of Programs Is Attendant Result

THE clouds are beginning to lift for the exhibitors of the Northwest. With $2 wheat and a bumper crop of potatoes, the country districts began picking up on October 1 and the general prosperity is beginning to tell in the cities.

Prosperity, however, must be balanced, and many of the exhibitors asserted their rights and raised admission prices. First-class theatres in the towns are charging 15 cents for their regular attractions and this is the prevailing price in the cities.

In Minneapolis, however, but one theatre has raised the regular admission to 20 cents. This theatre is the New Garrick, one of the Ruben and Finkelstein houses, and the largest in the city. No one has resented the change apparently for the house is doing a good business, running the best films the market affords. Any further change in prices will be upward, though that is remote at present.

A year ago the standard admission was 10 cents, but now many of the outlying houses have followed the example of those who raised prices and are charging 15 cents. The Lyric theatre is charging 15 cents for all seats and the Strand the same. The New Unique and the New Aster are both charging 10 cents, as is the New Garden. All are doing a better business than they expected a month ago. This list includes all of the larger downtown theatres, and the smaller ones are charging 10 cents.

While every exhibitor showing high-class films on first-runs believes he should have at least 25 cents, the managers generally are in favor of giving the patrons time to realize that business conditions are settling before attempting a further increase.

Saturday and Sunday theatre crowds are returning to normal size in both Minneapolis and St. Paul, and on the last few Sundays patrons who arrived after 10 p. m. had to wait from ten minutes to half an hour for seats. The fact that they waited, and did it cheerfully, is the best sign the exhibitors have had of the revival.

One thing that has resulted is a better run of films. The old saw that better stories may be written of Mary Ann than were ever written of Queen Anne is coming true. Northwest audiences seem to have had enough of war, tinsel, mortgage villains and sex problems. Good, wholesome stories, free from film ranting, as it might be called, appear to be winning out.

Buffalo Theatre Raises Prices

The New Victoria theatre, at West Ferry and Grant streets, Buffalo, N. Y., and which is one of the largest neighborhood houses in that city, has raised its prices of admission, beginning October 1. The new scale is 10, 15 and 20 cents, and the house is open in the evening only with the exception of a matinee on Saturday, at which the old prices prevail.

Manager Edward Hyman declares that increased cost of operating demands the increase in admission prices, and he believes the public will willingly pay the new rates, considering the excellence of the program offered.

West Texas Farmer Almost Utterly Destroyed

In the fourth of a series of articles on conditions in the drouth stricken sections of West Texas, W. G. Sterett is authority for the statement that the West Texas farmer is utterly destroyed, although the stockmen may save remnants inasmuch as they are better able to stand the shock of disaster. Among other things, Sterett remarked that "At present the stock grower is decidedly up against it. His pastures are gone, Winter is coming and his stock is poor and famishing. But to the farmer there is not even small consolation. All in all, he is utterly destroyed."

Artcraft Restrained from Showing Wm. Hart Picture

New York Motion Picture Corporation Gets Temporary Injunction Tying Up the Star's First Artcraft Production Until Court Decides Point in Litigation—Ince Withdrawal Figures in Case

DEVELOPMENTS in the plans of Artcraft Pictures Corporation to shortly release a motion picture production starring William S. Hart for the first time under that banner took an interesting turn last week, and, incidentally, recalled events connected with Thomas H. Ince's withdrawal from Triangle some time ago, when the New York Motion Picture Corporation, through its attorney, brought suit in the courts to suppress in New York State the initial picture which the well-known player of Western characters is making for Artcraft.

Although the plaintiff, through Attorney Walter N. Seligsberg, asked only for a temporary injunction covering New York State on the production in question, called "The Narrow Trail," it is expected that the corporation will start similar injunction suits in other states where the picture is announced for presentation.

Ince Gets Limelight Again

The case, which is directed against Artcraft Pictures Corporation, C. Gardner Sullivan, Lambert Hillyer and Thomas H. Ince, appears to put the latter directly in the limelight again, although the reason assigned for the suit was "to restrain all of the defendants named from further interfering with the business of the plaintiff."

The obvious cause for the concentration of the calcium glare on Ince's much litigated name is found in the basis of the suit, where the allegation is made by the New York Motion Picture Company that Ince, as general manager of the company prior to the first day of July, last, made contracts on behalf of the organization with Messrs. Sullivan and Hillyer and many other employees, and that when he left the employ of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, Mr. Ince induced many of its employees to leave, withdraw or quit, and among them the very persons with whom he made contracts on behalf of the company. It is further claimed that he knew these contracts had not expired when the parties in question withdrew from the company.

The suit thus far recalls the previous court action which Triangle instituted against Ince some time ago, and which was threshed out favorably for the latter, after affording both parties concerned oodles of advertising in the news columns.

Sullivan Wrote the Scenario

It is cited in the New York Motion Picture Corporation's plea for the suppression of Mr. Hart's initial Artcraft feature that C. Gardner Sullivan's contract with the corporation had not expired when Ince withdrew, but that Sullivan continued to work for the plaintiff while at the same time it is alleged he had an office with and drew pay from the Ince organization, and that he wrote the scenario upon which the first William S. Hart release for Artcraft, and made by Ince, is based. The scenario, it is claimed, was and is known as "The Narrow Trail," the same title as the completed product will be known under should it be permitted to be shown. It is further claimed by the plaintiff that not only was "The Narrow Trail" based upon Sullivan's scenario but it was directed by Hillyer and acted in by Sylvia Bremer, both of whom were under exclusive contract to work for the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and that all of these facts were known to all of the defendants.

It is this part of the action that is causing the greatest interest within the motion picture industry, inasmuch as it is one of the first cases to include such a number of picture employees under supposedly binding contracts. The outcome should make history for the pages of the industry.

Supreme Court Hears Arguments

When the application for the preliminary injunction came up on Thursday, October 11, argument was presented in the Supreme Court by Martin W. Littleton for the New York Motion Picture Corporation, and Elek J. Ludvigh for the Artcraft Picture Corporation. The application then went before Judge Whitaker, who granted a preliminary restraining order or injunction against the showing of the picture in the State of New York. A further hearing was set for Monday, October 15. The New York Motion Picture Corporation filed bond for $7,500 the same day the preliminary injunction was granted, automatically stopping the showing of the film in question until the case is finally settled.

One of the bookings to be affected by the injunction was the Rialto theatre, New York, which had announced William S. Hart in "The Narrow Trail" for this week. A Charles Ray feature has been substituted at this theatre.

At the office of the New York Motion Picture Corporation this week it was stated that similar injunctions might be expected wherever "The Narrow Trail" is being announced for presentation.

Vitagraph Officials Making Tour of Country

Entire Vitagraph Distributing Organization Working at Top Speed and No Chance for Let-up Will Be Permitted

WITH the entire Vitagraph distributing organization working at high speed, owing to the extraordinary number of bookings on its various units of service, A. W. Goff, assistant general manager, the eastern division manager and the western division manager have gone into the field on a general tour of inspection. In many places the Vitagraph branches are working night and day in order to keep their prints moving and the purpose of the sales chiefs in making their trips at this time is to see that there is no let-up in the working of the machinery.

One of the chief contributing factors in the Vitagraph volume of business, according to an announcement made by the company, is the extraordinary number of bookings on "The Fighting Trail," the big outdoor serial which was started on its fifteen week course September 10. It has been booked or shown in every town of 10,000 population or more in the country and extra prints have had to be made in order to supply the demand.

"Vengeance and the Woman," the next Vitagraph serial, will follow closely on the run of "The Fighting Trail," being scheduled for release late in December, and a great many exhibitors have already begun booking it on the strength of the success of "The Fighting Trail."

Mr. Goff, who will combine inspection with exhibitors' meetings during his trip, left New York last Wednesday afternoon on board the Morgan Line steamship Creole for New Orleans, and expects to arrive there Monday. From New Orleans he will go to Atlanta, then to Philadelphia and Boston. Before leaving he stated that the Vitagraph organization was now working at the highest speed in its history, every part of the program being continually in service. In addition to two reels of "The Fighting Trail," Greater Vitagraph produces each week a five-reel Blue Ribbon feature, one reel "Big V" comedy, one reel Bobby Connelly picture and three reels in the Favorite Film Feature service, and Mr. Goff's tour is for the purpose of keeping things humming.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the distributing organization, gives as one of the important reasons for the Vitagraph sales managers taking the field at this time, the fact that they can be of service to the exhibitors at this time in connection with the problems that they will be called upon to meet as the result of the new Federal tax. He feels that the manufacturers and distributors should give the exhibitors, especially the smaller theatre owners, all the help possible in this crisis, and Mr. Goff, with his two chief aides will devote much of the time they are in the field to conferring with exhibitors on this subject.

The Vitagraph representatives will advise the exhibitors on every detail of the new law and will help them in the readjustment of their business methods to meet the new conditions.

Ernest Shipman Moves to Permanent Quarters

Ernest Shipman, who was temporarily located at 70 West Forty-sixth street, moved October 15 to permanent quarters at 17 West Forty-fourth street, where he is occupying suite 803-804.

Davidson Wants to Camouflage the Enemy

David Davidson, a member of the art staff of the advertising department of Greater Vitagraph, is the latest member of the organization to be drafted for the fighting ranks of Uncle Sam. Mr. Davidson has made application for a place in the First Camouflage Division of the United States Army, and Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the distributing organization of Greater Vitagraph, gave him a letter of recommendation as an artist and a man in order that he might enter the branch of the National Army where he could be of the greatest service to his country.

Harrisburg Exhibitors Not to Use Copyright Music

A sort of gentlemen's agreement has been established among the motion picture exhibitors of Harrisburg, Pa., and vicinity, not to use the music of the American Society of Composers and Authors in their theatres, at least until it is determined more definitely what the rights of the members of the society are in the matter of collecting royalties for the use of the music controlled.

While the Harrisburg local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has not taken formal action committing the organization to one side or the other of the controversy that has arisen out of the court victories thus far gained by the composers, at recent meetings of the local the individual members have engaged in lively discussions of their own rights in the matter.

The result of the informal, but nevertheless emphatic, exchange of views on the subject has been a practically unanimous agreement among the exhibitors to use only such music in their theatres as is free from the tax imposed.

Newark Is Scene of Exhibitors' Convention

The convention of the New Jersey League of Motion Picture Exhibitors, affiliated with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, at Newark, N. J., on October 17 promises to be one of the biggest events held in the East in some time, as far as exhibitors connected with the order are concerned. President Charles H. Hespe, of the New Jersey League, has tentative promises from Governor Edge and others prominent in political circles to be present at the convention. Several speakers prominent in the motion picture industry are also scheduled to address the meeting.

The opportunity to present to the Legislatures the advisability of repealing the moving picture tax, the presenting of the reasons for Sunday legislation to the Government and the politicians of the State, and also the chance to show patriotism are appreciated by the exhibitors without an exception and a record crowd is expected. Last, but not least, the music tax situation will be thoroughly gone over.

The meeting is scheduled for 11 o'clock on the morning of October 17 in Achtelstetter Hall, Newark.

Airship Defeats Express Embargo in Buffalo

Buffalo Triangle Manager Uses Aeroplane to Deliver Film to Rochester Theatre on Time

GENERAL Manager John J. Farren, of the Victoria theatre, Rochester, had an anxious half hour Thursday afternoon. He had billed a five-reel feature for a change of program at 1.45 p. m. and at the last moment he learned that an embargo on express had delayed the arrival.

H. E. Lotz, branch manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, Buffalo, got Mr. Farren on the 'phone. "There is no train now that will get the reels to you on time," he said. "I've tried to get you for a half hour, and meanwhile I cannot find a chauffeur who is willing to break the speed laws."

"Have you tried the airship?" asked the Rochester man, more as a joke than anything else. That gave Mr. Lotz all the idea that was needed.

Ten minutes later C. W. Webster of the sales department of the Curtiss Aeroplane and Motor Corporation of Buffalo was listening to an excited man on the telephone. He wanted five reels delivered by airship in Rochester in less than an hour.

"It will cost you $100," Mr. Webster snapped, hoping the price would save the instructor pilots at the Curtiss school an extra trip on the cold afternoon.

"That's fine," the film man said. "I'll be out at the field in half an hour."

At ten minutes to three Roland Rohlfs, son of Anna Katharine Green and one of the pilot instructors at the Curtiss school, ascended at the boulevard field with the five motion picture reels safely stowed in the cock-pit of the training biplane tractor. It was a mighty cold day for cross-country work, but Rohlfs' engine was behaving as perfectly as a motor on block test and in a few minutes he was lost to sight in the gray cloud curtain speeding toward the east.

At the state road and New York Central tracks, a few miles out of Rochester, Rohlfs descended in a clear field just 51 minutes later. There he was met by an automobile carrying the manager of the Victoria theatre. The motion picture reels were transferred from the airship to the automobile and Rohlfs turned out to head the cold, low-slanting rays of the sun. He flew high without the same attempt at speed for the return, circled over Buffalo and descended perfectly at the Curtiss field on the Niagara Falls boulevard 57 minutes later. He had made the round trip in exactly two hours and fifteen minutes and a minute later was at his work again training pilots for the warcraft of the United States aerial service. That was at 5:15 o'clock.

Ohio Town May Open Sunday Shows for Soldiers

Prominent Men Start Movement in Ohio to Provide Sunday Amusement in the Theatre for 40,000 Men in the New Army

THE business men and newspapers of Chillicothe, O., are getting behind a movement to permit the operation of motion picture theatres on Sundays for the accommodation of the 40,000 drafted men of the army now encamped at Camp Sheridan, near there. There are hundreds of these men off duty on Sunday, and it is believed that the picture shows would provide good entertainment for them.

Under a two-column headline on the front page the Scioto Gazette, said to be the oldest newspaper in Ohio, says: "Why not open the picture shows to the soldiers on Sunday?" Continuing the Gazette said: "Is Chillicothe so rock-ribbed in its puritanism as to fail to grasp the situation which confronts it, or are the managers of the picture shows here too scared, too proud, to run the places on Sunday to make an effort to relieve things?

"That the picture shows should be open on Sundays for many reasons is a most potent fact. First, there is the amusement that could be given to soldiers, and secondly, with inclement weather coming on, the picture shows will afford an indoor refuge for visiting men and women who come here to visit the soldiers. They would afford a fine place for the soldier and his women friends to visit. Of course, the fact is staring us in the face that the laws of the state are against the conduct of picture shows on Sunday, and that the question, carried to the higher courts from here, has been settled adversely, but is it not possible to have this community waive this point under stress of military necessity? Surely Chillicothe can be broad-minded enough to promote the army and community welfare along these lines."

Sunday motion picture shows are given without molestation in Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Toledo, Sandusky, Dayton, Springfield and other Ohio cities, and it is expected that the bars will be let down in Chillicothe. Army officers at the camp are in favor of giving the boys clean, wholesome amusements on Sundays and they believe that motion picture shows are the best form of amusement for the soldiers in training.

Wisconsin Fears No Censorship at Present

Unless the unforeseen happens, Wisconsin exhibitors will not be bothered by any anti-movie or censorship laws of any sort during the year, according to the opinion of persons in a position to know. The Legislature will not be in session again this year unless a special session is called, and then it would only convene to consider a limited number of subjects.

Thanks to the liquor fight and the war, Wisconsin exhibitors need have little fear of any adverse legislation directed against them during the coming year. It is believed that the Wisconsin exhibitors can safely forget the state lawmakers for the next twelve months. Anti-movie exhibitors and those who have been pouncing upon the exhibitors at every opportunity will be too busy dodging the prohibition issue and helping fight the war to have any time to spend harassing the exhibitor.

Restrain Alleged Imitators of Chaplin

Sweeping Action Is Started to Secure Permanent Injunction and Recover Alleged Damages—Chaplin Signature on New Features

WHAT is considered in motion picture circles as the most sweeping court action against alleged imitators of a motion picture star yet started was the filing last week in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York of a suit to stop, if legally possible, further alleged imitations of Charlie Chaplin and the release of what is claimed to be spurious films in which the comedian is supposed to appear.

The action was instituted by Nathan Burkan, the lawyer, in behalf of Charlie Chaplin, and was directed against the Otis Lithograph Company, Oscar J. Lynch, Motion Picture Film Company, Gunby Brothers, Inc., Bertha Gunby, Charles A. Gunby, James W. Gunby, Big A Film Company, Sam Epstein and Nathan Draplkin. A permanent injunction against imitations of Chaplin and to suppress the release of pictures in which Charles Chaplin supposedly appeared is asked, in addition to alleged damages in the sum of $250,000.

Coincidental with the filing of the suit, another action was begun by Nathan Burkan in behalf of Chaplin against the F. F. F. Amusement Corporation and William F. Short, its president, the owner of the Crystal Hall Photoplay theatre, New York, for the alleged presentation of what is claimed to be the spurious Chaplin picture called "The Fall of the Rummy-Nuffs."

These actions are said to be only the beginning of a well organized campaign to suppress what is claimed to be the unfair and dishonest use of Chaplin's name, not only against the producers of alleged fake Charlie Chaplin films in which alleged imitators are featured, but against the owners of the laboratories in which such films are made, the distributors of such films, the printers who print and supply the posters and each and every exhibitor who undertakes the exhibition of the pictures.

In the first-named action started by Nathan Burkan, against the Otis Lithograph Company and others, Judge Mayer, of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, granted a temporary restraining order enjoining the defendants named from releasing the photoplays respectively titled "The Fall of the Rummy-Nuffs," "The Dishonor System" in two reels, and "One Law for Both," in two reels. It is claimed that in advertising these films the name of Chaplin was used as the star. The restraining order also forbids the removal of the films named above from the jurisdiction of the court, and temporarily stops the release of any photoplay containing in the title or subtitle the names Charlie Chaplin and Chaplin, which was not in its entirely produced by Chaplin. The injunction further stops the assembling of any scenes produced with alleged imitators, and forbids placing before the public any poster containing any statement that Chaplin produced, directed or acted in the three pictures named above, in addition to which it is ordered that no poster be issued bearing Chaplin's name or photograph unless in connection with a genuine Chaplin production.

The complaint charges that the defendants entered into a conspiracy for the purpose of injuring Chaplin in his reputation and business and to defraud and mislead the public.

An injunction has also been issued against the New Apollo Feature Film Company, it is announced by Nathan Burkan, which restrains the company from releasing "Charlie in a Harem" and "Charlie Chaplin in a Son of the Gods."

Following closely on the heels of the institution of the court actions, comes the announcement from the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., which will handle the new and genuine Chaplin features, that a way has been found to surmount the difficulties arising from the machinations of alleged imitators. The plan is simple—Chaplin is to be the first motion picture star to follow the universal custom of the brush artist by signing his works as proof of their authenticity. Beginning with his first production for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., scheduled for January 1, the signature will introduce itself. Posters will be treated the same as the films, and will bear the signature.

This is expected to give the Chaplin press agent a new idea in picture circles, but old in the world of commerce: "Refuse all substitutes. None genuine without this signature."

Rowland, of Metro, Says Not to Worry Over Tax

President of Metro Says That Although Tax Will Work Hardship, the Money Is Needed by Uncle Sam and Everyone Must Stand by Him

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, sees no reason why the industry should worry over the war tax. In the following interview, Mr. Rowland gives his reasons:

"While the taxes are heavy, and in some cases, undoubtedly a burden, I see no reason for worry. As with everything else that is taxed, the ultimate consumer, the public, will foot the bill. If the manufacturer, now selling at the lowest price he can in a market, keen with competition, is forced to spend more money, either in taxes or productions, the price of his product must go up or he must cease to do business.

"Congress has seen fit to impose special taxation upon the motion picture industry and that settles the matter. The motion picture industry will pay the taxes and the patriotic thing for us all to do is to see that the Government gets as large an amount from the industry as it is possible to pay.

"Therefore, it will, of course, be necessary for the manufacturer to increase his price to the distributor, and the distributor must advance his price to the exhibitor, and the exhibitor must increase his price to the public.

"In my opinion a five-cent raise in the price of motion picture theatre admissions will cover nicely the footage and the admission taxes, and not impose a real hardship upon anyone. The advance to the exhibitor will not exceed ten cents a reel per day, and ten five-cent admission advances will cover the feature show tax. This leaves all the rest of the admission advances for the theatre, out of which their own tax can be met. The situation lays the foundation for an advance in motion picture theatre prices which is already needed, to continue after the war.

"The whole matter in a nutshell is that the United States needs money and needs lots of it. We, as Americans, will endeavor to see that Uncle Sam gets as much as possible."

Intensive Campaign Begun by Maryland Exhibitors

Members of the Maryland Branch Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America held a meeting Sunday, October 7 for the purpose of maping out a campaign for the fall and winter. A campaign for membership will also be inaugurated. The League now has about 75 per cent of the motion picture men now but they will make a drive for the remaining 25 per cent.

First National Exhibitors' Exchange, Inc., Organized

J. D. Williams, vice-president and general manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, announces that incorporation papers have been taken out under the laws of New York for the First National Exhibitors' Exchange, Inc., to handle the New York franchise of that organization. Offices will be taken on Fifth avenue. The exchange will have a private projection room and will occupy two floors. It will be under the personal supervision of Mr. Williams. The officers of the new exchange are, S. L. Rothapfel, president; J. D. Williams, secretary, and Ralph Clark, of Turner and Dahnken Circuit, San Francisco, treasurer.

Negotiations are now under way for the establishing of a branch exchange in upper New York State. It has not been decided in what city the exchange will be located.

"The New York exchange will handle all matters coming under the New York franchise," said Mr. Williams, "and we expect to make it one of the best equipped and most up-to-date exchanges in the country. The establishing of an exchange in New York was, of course, a necessity, but the officers have delayed making the announcement because they wanted to feel sure that everything was in readiness and that there would be no possibility of a slip before the announcement was made. It is now assured and excepting for the fact that we are not in a position to announce the exact location of the exchange, every detail has been considered and it will be in full working order before November."

What To Do with Cigarettes and Pennies

1. Pack cigarettes carefully in boxes of 100 (boxes can be secured from local tobacco stores) in which slightly moistened blotters in envelopes are placed to prevent cigarettes from drying.
2. Arrange with the commissary department of the camp where men from your section will go for distributing the cigarettes contributed at your theatre.
3. In case this is impossible, or in case you have superfluous cigarettes, send them by parcel post, carefully packed, directly to Motion Picture News, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.
4. Pennies and other coins collected should be deposited at your bank and a check for the amount sent weekly, made payable to Motion Picture News. These checks will be turned over to the Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund for purchasing tobacco and cigarettes to be sent to our soldiers in France. Receipts for these packages (every 25 cents you send buys 45 cents worth of tobacco) will be sent to you directly by the soldiers who receive them. You will receive a postcard message of thanks directly from the trenches for each 25 cents you contribute.

   For example: If your cash contributions amount to $100 weekly, you will receive 400 cards. These should be displayed in your lobby or, better still, sent out to your mailing list.
5. Keep closely in touch with your local newspaper. Let the editor know your results and urge him to co-operate with you. It will mean more subscribers for his paper—more patrons for your theatre.
6. If you haven't sent for a "Drop a Penny" or a "Drop a Cigarette" card, send for it—NOW!

As has been explained in the News, it is practically impossible to forward cigarettes in other than original packages from the factory, to the boys on the other side. Under the circumstances it really is necessary to send the miscellaneous packages to the boys here, and this suggests the advisability of the various collecting theatres sending them to their nearest cantonments. Such as come here are sent to Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund and by them distributed to the soldiers and sailors in this country.

Crandall's Knickerbocker Opening Gala Event

Beautiful Playhouse in Capital Is Initiated with Many Prominent Film People in Attendance

OCTOBER 13 held no ill omen for Harry Crandall, in the opening of the Knickerbocker theatre, the fifth link in the chain of houses in Washington under his control. The crowd was so great that it demanded the attention of the police to keep it within the lines of pedestrian travel for some distance on both Eighteenth street and Columbia road, at the junction of which the Knickerbocker is located.

The event caused a stir in picture circles from New York to Atlanta, from the number of picture stars who appeared in person, the officials of the various producing companies, the representatives of the trade and dramatic papers, as well as managers of the local exchanges and men and women of prominence in the affairs of the national capital.

Among the stars who appeared in person to greet the patrons of this amusement were Francis X. Bushman, June Elvidge, Carlyle Blackwell, Beverly Bayne, Belle Bruce and Rose Tapley and Alice Brady.

Among the out-of-town guests were: Adolph Zukor, Walter S. Greene, Albert Lichtman, of the Paramount and Artcraft Companies; William A. Brady and George Schaefer, of the World Company; Samuel Goldfish and William Warren, of the Goldwyn Company; Louis J. Selznick, of the Select Film Company; Walter W. Irvin, of the Vitagraph Company; Joseph Lee and Felix Feist, of the Metro Company; Charles J. Pettijohn, of the American Exhibitors' Association; Samuel Spedon, of the Moving Picture World; William A. Johnston, of the Motion Picture News; William H. Donaldson, of the Bilboard; Stephen Bush, of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, dramatic editor of the New York Telegraph; Wid Gunning, of Wid's Magazine; Jake and Otto Wells, of the Wells Circuit; Harry Bernstein, of the Colonial Theatre, Richmond, and Guy Wonders, of the Wilson Theatre, Baltimore.

Mr. Crandall's evening's triumph closed with a buffet supper served in the lounge of the theatre building, at which the picture stars, the visitors from out of town and a number of local guests of importance were present.

Ouimet Defends Canadian Film Distribution

Does Not Deny Excessive Amount of Product in Provinces, But Claims There Is No Overloading of Films Public Wants

L. ERNEST OUIMET, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., sole distributors of Pathe films in the Dominion of Canada, with headquarters in Montreal, has issued a statement in reply to the recently published article of W. A. Bach, "Canada Overloaded With Films—Business Poor."

In his refutation of the majority of charges made by Mr. Bach, Ouimet defends the distribution of films in the Dominion, but does not deny an excess of pictures which the public has decided to forego.

Beginning, Mr. Ouimet said: "We will admit that there is an excessive amount of films on the Canadian market, but there is absolutely no overload of films that are in public demand. There is an overload of films which the public do not demand, and there always will be, for, as in the United States, there are a lot of films being made that are not worth printing on the raw film, and, as in the States, there will always be outside parties, who do not know anything about the moving picture business, who will invest a few thousand dollars in any film that a regular moving picture business man would refuse to buy. About all such people are good for is to help to create revenue for the Government by paying quite a bit of duty and war tax.

"Almost every firm in Canada that is importing films which are in public demand is enjoying an era of unparalleled success in the annals of the moving picture industry since its inception, also they are looking forward to one of the most successful seasons in their history.

"Previous to January, 1915, Pathe films had disappeared from the Canadian market for two or three years. At that time having the growing demand for really good films, I commenced to reintroduce Pathe films. While I was releasing only one print for every subject then, I am today releasing three and four prints on every subject. In 1915, when I came in the market, there were those who claimed that Canada was overloaded with films, and we found the contrary, the Pathe releases having to increase from one to three prints in 2½ years' time.

"Mr. Bach evidently prepared his article about three months ago, as he stated that the St. Denis theatre was closed and would not reopen until after the war. It has been reopened and running for the past three weeks and is looking forward to very good business. It seems absurd for a man so well versed in the film game in this country to come out publicly and state that business is poor, and the outlook bad. During the past Summer, when many of the film exchanges were complaining of poor business, my offices were increasing their receipts every week, and I am proud to be able to state that business is still better.

"Films are not unlike other ordinary lines and classes of merchandise; unsold and unwanted merchandise lines are similar to the white elephant films which no one wants at even his own price. So long as the handlers of inferior films help to increase the revenue of the Government by paying duty and war tax on unworthy film products, I am content, but Canada is not overloaded with proper films and proper distributing sources. The steady increase of the Pathe films has never met obstacles, despite the fact that a line-up of competitors have come to Canada representing different brands of films. We must admit that many of them have absorbed good capital and have met forfeitures; some others have changed hands by being transferred from one syndicate to the other and are still on the eve of further moves."

Nicholas Power Installs Many New Machines

The past week has been a very active and successful one for the Nicholas Power Company, which reports the installation of several new machines in that time. Among them are: National Y. M. C. A., at Petersburg, Va., eleven machines; Camp Meade, Baltimore, ten machines; Fort Riley, Kan., four machines; United States Interment Station at Hot Springs, Ark,; Camp Mills, Hempstead, L. I.; United States steamship Bridge, Brooklyn Navy Yard; Fordham theatre, Bronx, N. Y., and Rockaway theatre, Brooklyn.

The Nicholas Power Company is also causing much favorable comment to circulate concerning its display at Booth 39, Grand Central Palace, where the Electrical Exposition and Motor Show is in progress, opening October 10 for a run of ten days. A. J. Lang is there to give the glad hand to callers, and A. L. Raven, F. J. Bird and G. W. Landon are in charge of the work in the booth.

Chas. Wallach Takes Up Duties in Signal Corps

Charles Wallach, who has acted as assistant to Jack Cohn in the management of the Universal Animated Weekly since its inception, left for Washington, D. C., last week to take up his duties in the U. S. Signal Corps. Wallach received his appointment as sergeant, with a notice to the effect that he would be subject to court marshal if he failed to present himself at headquarters within forty-eight hours. This necessitated a hurried getaway, but being a veteran newsgatherer for the films Wallach was equal to the occasion, and beat out the threatened court marshal by twenty-four hours.

On the evening prior to his departure, the staffs of the Animated Weekly, Current Events and Screen Magazine gave Wallach a farewell dinner, followed by a theatre party at the Morosco theatre.

A. G. Buck Leaves Kleine

Mrs. Dessez Reports Favorably on Community Service Work

Mrs. Elizabeth Richey Dessez who has for some months been directing her activities toward arousing public interest in a program of pictures which are arranged with the special intent to present entertainment suitable for the family group, announces that great progress has been made along this line. Mrs. Dessez, assisted by Mrs. Phillip Speed, has made a specialty of community service work through the medium of the motion picture. For the past few months she has been working in the interest of the Conquest Pictures, now distributed by George Kline. The Conquest Pictures are produced with the main purpose of putting out a program, arranged in such a way as to provide entertainment for adults and chilldren.

Mrs. Elizabeth Richey Dessez, Working in Interest of Conquest Pictures

The work that Mrs. Dessez has taken up, has been tried in a small way before by others but never on such a large scale as she is working. It is her intention to visit every city of importance in the United States and put her plan to the test. She personally supervises the preliminary steps, and where it is possible she places the program with the exhibitor as a complete day's run.

Kalem Aids Liberty Loan

The Kalem Company and General Film Company, producers and distributors of the "Grant, Police Reporter" and "A Daughter of Daring" series, are co-operating to help push the second Liberty Loan drive to a successful conclusion. The former is issuing patriotic trailers for all its General Film releases, in which stirring appeals are made to enlist the support of the picture fans. This method of boosting the Liberty Loan has met the approval of the authorities and is expected to aid materially in making the present drive a record breaker. Exhibitors using Kalem-General releases make favorable reports.

Florence La Badie Dies of Auto Injuries

Florence La Badie, former Thanhouser star, and who was last starred in motion pictures under the Pathe banner, died Saturday, October 13, at the Ossining Hospital as the result of internal injuries she suffered in a motor car accident about two months ago.

Miss La Badie had been in Thanhouser and Pathe pictures for the past five years, and was one of the best known and most popular players on the screen a few years ago. Her last picture was "The Million Dollar Mystery," a Pathe serial. She was twenty-four years old, and is survived by her mother, with whom she lived in New York.

Marion Takes Berst's Place as Commissioner to Italy

The personnel of the National Cinema Commission, appointed by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, with the consent of President Wilson, to take charge of the distribution of American films in Russia, Italy and France working in cooperation with the National War Work Council of the Young Men's Christian Association, has been changed by the substitution of the name of Francis Marion, of the Kalem Company for that of J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., who was appointed to represent the commission in Italy. The other commissioners are: P. A. Power, treasurer, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, to France, and Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph-V-L-S-E, to Russia.

Paramount-Artcraft Advertising Drive Begins

Big Campaign in Newspapers Launched Simultaneously from Coast to Coast—Magazines to Take Up the Work Shortly

THE recently announced "big push" of 1917-18 for Paramount and Artcraft pictures is on.

The first barrage was sent across on October 8, when newspapers in New York, Brooklyn, Omaha, Chicago, and other cities carried the five-column page-deep advertisement with the headline, "Have You Lost Your Make-Believe?"

This was the actual beginning of the million-dollar campaign. It was more than that—it was the start of one of the biggest undertakings in the motion picture industry that has ever been attempted. It was a direct and conspicuous testimony to the confidence that has been developed in this industry, and this newspaper advertising campaign is soon to be extended to the national magazines and to the most important electric sign boards as well.

On October 9 the same advertisement was carried in still more papers throughout the country, and this was repeated in another section on October 10 and on days following.

In strict war parlance, a barrage precedes an infantry attack. In this case the motion picture exhibitors of the country represent the infantry. As Paramount and Artcraft explain, they have the way prepared for them by a bombardment (a friendly one, to be sure, but effective) of the public. It is their opportunity to link up their advertising in their local papers with Paramount and Artcraft advertising in the dailies, to use the identifying trade-marks, which are obtainable from the company's exchanges to let their patrons know—and the people who are not their patrons—that they are exhibiting these pictures.

Already the offices of Paramount and Artcraft are being flooded with not only congratulatory telegrams and letters from film showmen who recognize the value of the campaign to them, but by requests for service and those who can are being advised to apply directly to their local exchanges, in order to facilitate matters and relieve the pressure on the main offices.

The general consensus of opinion among exhibitors, gathered from the many messages received, is that it is not so much the amount that is being spent by Paramount and Artcraft in this big newspaper drive, but the way in which it is spent that counts. They declare that it is a message to the people who are not "fans," particularly. There are thousands of persons who are not film patrons strange as it may seem, and these are the ones the exhibitors are anxious to reach in order to create new patronage. They say without hesitation that this campaign will not alone popularize Paramount and Artcraft pictures immeasurably, but will also elevate the tone of the industry, place it a good many notches higher in the rank of great enterprises and give to it greater dignity and prestige.

"Paramount and Artcraft," writes one exhibitor, "are pioneering, and, like all pioneers, they must bear the brunt of the expense and the work. But they will profit by it because there is no doubt in my mind that the demand for their pictures will be increased a hundredfold. I have been showing these pictures for some time—ever since the Star Series Selective Booking plan went into effect, and with genuine success. But I know that even in my city there are a lot of good people that I haven't been able to reach. I have written them and I have advertised. But they seemed to be unapproachable by any ordinary means. I am as sure as I am of anything that as soon as this campaign begins to make itself felt, as soon as they begin to see the names Paramount and Artcraft in their big papers and magazines, they will begin to wake up. I am preparing to follow right along with advertising in local papers.

Fox Gets an Injunction Against "Honor" Film

Claims Publicity Concerning the Picture, "A Convict's Honor," Was Infringement on Fox Feature, "The Honor System," Widely Booked

ON the ground that William Fox's rights to the title, "The Honor System" have been infringed in advertising another picture at Richmond, Va., the State Court, sitting at Richmond, has granted the Fox Film Corporation a temporary injunction restraining the use of such advertising.

It was alleged on behalf of the Fox interests that in giving publicity to a film, "A Convict's Honor," the original title was subordinated and so emphasized the honor system idea as to mislead the public into the belief that the Standard picture, "The Honor System," really was being shown. The plaintiff's contention was that the defendant was playing upon the publicity given to "The Honor System."

The matter was first directed to the attention of the Fox branch office in Washington by Fox exhibitors in Richmond, who had shown "The Honor System." Notice was promptly sent to William Fox in New York, and he immediately sent attorneys to Richmond to begin action to protect his interests and those of Fox exhibitors. The lawyers were assisted in the collection of evidence and otherwise by Jake Wells and other exhibitors who volunteered their services.

When the case was brought to the attention of the court, a temporary order was issued in line with the request of the Fox attorneys. Subsequently, on motion of the defendant, the matter was again in Court, and at that time the judge declared that the "advertising matter or literature of the defendant should be worded and arranged, especially in the use of the term 'Honor System,' so as not to allow the inference to be drawn therefrom by the public that the picture of the defendant is not merely illustrative of the general subject of the honor system, but is in fact the play itself, of the plaintiff, known as 'The Honor System.'"

As an evidence of its good faith, the Fox Film Corporation has deposited $2,500 with the court and announcement is made from the New York offices that the case is to be carried into the United States courts and prosecuted for a permanent injunction.

"This is in line," declared William Fox, "with our policy of standing squarely behind our exhibitors in all matters affecting their interests. We do not intend to allow anyone to trade on the advertising or publicity efforts of Fox exhibitors or of the Fox Film Corporation. We want all exhibitors to understand that our attitude in the Richmond case is a fixed policy marking our determination to appeal to the courts, to spend money freely, or otherwise to fight in their behalf whenever the necessity arises."

Marc MacDermott Helps Second Liberty Loan

Writes Article Asking Every Man and Woman to Put His or Her Shoulder to Wheel—He Brooks No Excuses

MARC MacDERMOTT, one of Greater Vitagraph's players, has taken up his pen for the nonce in aid of Uncle Sam and his current war. He has written a plea for each man and woman within hearing of his voice, or rather within reading distance of his appeal, to jump into the fray and put the dollars behind the men who will win the war. His article follows: "Let no man plead as an excuse that he cannot afford to buy a bond in the second Liberty Loan.

"The facts are these: In the present crisis, if we cannot afford to buy a bond, we cannot afford even the barest necessities of life. We cannot afford a roof that does not leak; sufficient food to keep us fit for work; enough clothing to keep us warm; we cannot afford luxuries, such as tobacco, drinks, amusements, charities or relaxations of any kind, for unless this war is won by the allies, we may, thousands of us, be not only without the pleasant things of life but the bare necessities also

"The Government under which we have elected to live, the country with which we have cast our lot, is going to ask each and every person to put his shoulder to the wheel and roll to success the second Liberty Loan, by taking a bond.

"The problem to be solved by each intake a bond, but the amount of the bond he dividual is not whether he can afford to can afford to carry, and even if the buying of a small bond on the instalment plan becomes a strain on the weekly purse, let us regard it as necessary to life, health and happiness, as we would the rent, food, doctor's bill or our clothing.

We will sink or we will swim. We will win this fight for liberty and freedom or we will lose it. Are we each and every one of us going to do "our bit" and hold up our individual end of it, or, are we going to let some other country protect us on on the sea, until she, too, is pulled down by the (our) extra weight or let some other man shoulder our financial responsibility to our country until perhaps he, too, is pulled down by our failure to respond? What is right for the whole is right for the individual. Don't shirk your shares of the responsibilities.

"The Government asks you to take a bond. Respond to the call like loyal citizens.

"Buy a bond, be it big or little. It's the spirit that counts, and 'where there's a will there's a way,' and to the very poor man or woman let me say, if you buy a bond on the instalment plan, and should afterward be unable to make your payments through dire distress, you still will not have failed, for there will have been born in you a pride of country, a love of fair play, a self-respect for assuming your share of the Nation's responsibilities that will build for you a character that will draw and attract unto you success and victory."

Hearst-Pathe Representative Now Army Lieutenant

W. S. Clime, Washington representative of the Hearst-Pathe News, has been given a commission as Lieutenant in the Signal Corps. He was one of the best-known motion picture men in Washington. Whenever official news pictures were to be made, Mr. Clime was always selected as the representative of the news weeklies.

C. J. Hubbell, who was recently sent to the Cleveland territory, will succeed Mr. Clime in Washington. V. O. Kubes, one of the Chicago representatives of Hearst-Pathe, will be transferred to Cleveland to take charge of the gathering of film in that vicinity.

Gallagher and Hoffman Leave for Front

The latest men to bid farewell to their associates in the Greater Vitagraph plant in Brooklyn are T. J. Gallagher, of the Purchasing Department, and D. Hoffman, of the Receiving Department. Both are Sergeants in the new National Army now under training. Sergeant Gallagher left early last week for Yaphank and Sergeant Hoffman went to Camp Dix.

Gaumont Cameraman Enlists in the Army

Willard Van der Veer, cameraman, who recently returned from a trip through the West Indies for Gaumont Company's magazine, "Reel Life," is the latest to enlist. He is now sergeant in the cinematographic section of the Signal Corps, and expects to start for France at once.

Gaumont boys have certainly done their bit so far. More than three-fourths of the employees at the Flushing studios and laboratories enlisted.

Triangle Employees Harken to Bugle

Triangle last week lost an assistant director through the selective draft, and another employee has been ordered to hold himself in readiness to go.

Bert Lund, former assistant to Director Harry Williams at the Triangle-Keystone Studios in Los Angeles, was called last week. Duke Reynolds has taken his place as assistant director.

Joseph Roach, a member of the scenario force at Culver City, has been told to be ready to join Uncle Sam's National Army at any time.

Washburn Strikes Snag in Draft Exemption

The United States Government, through its representatives in Chicago, last Thursday appealed the exemption granted to Bryant Washburn, former Essanay star and recently signed up with Pathe. Morton Cressy, who represents the provost marshal in Chicago, said that the case had attracted so much attention that it was deemed advisable to take the action of an appeal.

Washburn made a hard fight for exemption from the draft on the grounds that he had a dependent wife and child. Investigators eventually granted that this claim was just.

Personality in Your Advertising

How to Make Exploitation Distinctive Without Great Expense—Individualizing a Feature To Worry About

PUTTING personality into your theatre doesn't mean that all you have to do is to stand in front of your door and welcome each patron, asking the mothers about the health of the children and questioning the fathers about the latest developments in politics.

Personality in your theatre means that you should make every part of it stand out as something that "belongs." Some weeks ago we printed here suggestions that the exhibitors should make the names of their theatres distinctive, to make them carry a certain appeal, to make them FIT. "Magic" and "Gem" and "Bijou Dream" had their day in the time of the nickelodeon.

One of the principal ways to put personality into your theatre is through your advertising. "Cold type" can be very human. If you are building a new house, first select a name for the theatre that really does mean something and then plan yourself a program of exploitation that will immediately associate your house with every piece of advertising that you do. Then you will have achieved the first step in making the public recognize your work without having to hunt through the pages of newspapers for the particular theatre that they wish to find.

And this does not require any elaborate equipment. On the opposite page there are illustrated a number of name designs of theatres which are used in every advertisement that these theatres publish. These should be made in one, two, three and four column sizes, according to the amount of advertising that you do. Any theatre can afford to buy these. If your newspaper has a stereotyping plant, and most of them do, except in the smaller towns, you need get only one set of cuts and you can have innumerable other "casts" made from them. Then leave a set of these with the advertising foreman on each paper.

Best advertising calls for the display of the name of the theatre prominently, preferably at the top of the display. You want to drive home the name of your house with every cent that you spend, you want to associate the name of the theatre so strongly that when a person thinks of a motion picture exhibition he immediately thinks of your theatre.

When you have a set design for the name of your theatre you won't find it necessary to use huge type, for the design itself will stand out as distinctive and it will attract twice as much attention as "box car" letters of black type, which are too strongly reminiscent of the bargain store sale to have any place in connection with modern showmanship.

You should be prepared with these designs before you undertake to use any of the advertising aids that are sent out by the producers. Some of these companies design splendid advertising, with the exhibitors' real interest at stake. Others seem to think that the theory of advertising is to play up the name of the producer and give the name of the theatre that is showing the production scant attention at the bottom of the advertisement. One of the producers, for instance, in his specimen advertising, uses bigger type for his own name than he does for those of the star or the production.

Of course the local exhibitor wants to take advantage of the work of the established and successful picture makers, but he must remember that before he advertises any other person he must advertise himself, his own theatre.

These designs which are reproduced here, taken more or less at random from a number of newspapers through the country, will readily suggest ideas to you. Some of these will be seen, at a glance, to be in harmony with the name of the theatre, its location or its particular appeal.

Many of these use a standard descriptive phrase in connection with the designs, but here one should avoid the flamboyant—the circus style of advertising that swings the superlatives with the abandon of a gymnast.

This name design should be used not only in the newspaper advertising, but in every piece of printed matter that you put out. It can be modified somewhat for your program; in smaller size it should be carried on your letter heads and your envelopes and, if you have your tickets specially printed for you, on them.

Always the clearest advertising is the best. And there is an appeal to the sort of advertising that does not make the eye hunt for the name, but immediately associates the advertising with you.

As a general rule the advertising that catches the eye first is going to have the strongest appeal. When you get the public to reading your advertisement first the chances are mighty good that you are going to get the biggest share of the business. A designed advertisement does attract the attention to your display first, and if you have as good productions as the other man you are going to sell a great many more tickets than the man who lets the printer set his advertising up "just as he pleases."

Carrying this advertising idea still further, the exhibitor should use a distinctive "border" around his display. Note on several of the advertisements reproduced on the opposite page how the borders fit in with the design and how much more distinctive they make the appeal.

These are not expensive, especially in the cities of medium and larger size, where the better newspapers own monotype machines. Where such is the case you have only to pay for the "matrices" of the design that you select and any quantity of the border that you are using can be cast for you as you need it. One set of matrices will do for all of the papers and will last forever.

Select designs that no other advertiser is using and have these reserved for you.

With these designs for the theatre name and your borders, you now have, at an expense of a few dollars, complete equipment for making your advertising distinctive.

Now start in your campaign, and whether you use a space two inches deep or a solid page, you will be able to make your theatre "different" from all of the others.

Some theatres have gone even further than this and use special designs of type for their display. This can be done on the same principle as the borders, as the newspapers will agree to use this type for no other advertiser—if you pay for the type. But you are going into a considerable expense here, and one which only the larger exhibitors could afford. And, again, in that case line work or half tones are generally used in place of the actual type.

But in the course of individualizing your advertising you can adopt a general style of typing that will be immediately coupled with your theatre. Go to the foreman of your newspaper composing room and discuss with him the types that are available for your use and list these for use in your displays.

Type selection is an art.

In the first place get away from the idea that you have to use enormous black type to attract attention. Any person with any discrimination will immediately associate a patchwork of big letters with the cheap and sensational in motion pictures. Try this plan for awhile. Let your competitor use the superlatives in expression and in type effects for awhile, and keep up your plan of following the same general style in your advertising, and you will soon find that your advertising has the CLASS.

Of course we do not mean that one advertisement should be made exactly like the other. Nothing is further from the idea. But we do mean that there should be put not only into your wording of the display, but into the mechanical side of it the sort of an appeal that is immediately associated with your theatre. It is a difficult thing to define, but once you get the swing of it you will be surprised at the quickness with which the public recognizes your work. And you will find that the sort of a display about

Getting Individuality Into Theatres' Newspaper Advertising

These specimens show how various theatres are making their displays distinctive, some by the use of name designs and others by using special borders. Six advertisements are reproduced in their entirety, showing how the borders are worked in with the name design, while in the other cases only the reproductions of the theatre names are shown.

Three Views of Lobby Display Made by M. Kashin on "Rasputin"

During Its Recent Showing at Fox's City Theatre, New York

Kashin Creates Real Atmosphere in Lobby Exhibit on "Rasputin" at City Theatre

"RASPUTIN" has furnished M. Kashin an opportunity for a remarkable lobby display at Fox City Theatre, Fourteenth Street, New York. We say lobby display, though it might be better called an exhibit. The splendid power of it is shown by the fact that the theatre was constantly packed and it was almost impossible to make one's way through the lobby during the time the exhibit was being shown.

This setting might properly be described as a stage brought to the lobby, for the settings are so entirely different from the ordinary display. Mr. Kashin succeeded in creating a receptive atmosphere for those who enter the theatre. There was none of the poster effect or the open appeal to the sensational, yet the whole effect was one of the most dramatic. It represents this master of lobby work at his best.

The entrance to the City Theatre is in the form of an arch. In the center of the lobby and usually hugging the side is the box office. On both sides of the wall there are usually frames with photos, three sheets and six sheets, advertising the current attraction. This is what Mr. Kashin did to the lobby and how he did it.

On each side of the entrance to the lobby he placed half-hidden figures of a giant Cossack. Each held a spear and these crossed at the top of an arch after piercing a giant and terrifying head of Rasputin, the Black Monk. The box office was turned into a sentry box, with its black and white stripes, and bearing in small letters "An exhibition of the relics of the Romanoffs." A real Russian, in Cossack uniform who walked up and down in front of the theatre added to the effect.

The remainder of the display was confined to the two side walks of the long lobby. One of these dealt with Rasputin and the other with the Romanoffs. Each wall had a background of heavy red velvet hangings and in the center were a pair of large columns with huge canopies and draperies and between each an overthrown throne. In the case of the side dealing with the Romanoffs there was a cast aside scepter and a battered crown. This effect was emphasized by a beautifully colored hanging lamp and two upright lamps. The base of this side of the lobby was covered with rich rugs. There were also two paintings by Irving Block, one representing a peasant with shackles broken and the other a trackless road leading to Siberia. Legends on marble and metal bore in neat and small lettering the story of the pictures.

On the side dealing with Rasputin the overthrown throne was of the church type. Close by the side were a skull and a whip. On each side of the marble columns burned huge candles and over the throne there swung a censer. Paintings on this side represented a Cossack whipping a peasant and on the other Rasputin blessing one of his rich followers.

The lines used by Mr. Kashin in his atmospheric advertising are well worthy of repetition and they may be found valuable to others who are showing this picture. Here they are:

Picture: Rasputin blessing well-dressed woman.
Lines: "Religion an excuse for the lustral covetousness of a degenerate priest."
Picture: Cossack whipping peasant.
Lines: "Rasputin and his power set blood against blood—compelled brother to lash brother."
Picture: Peasant with broken shackles.
Lines: "Shackles—forged by oppression—instantly melted in the oxycetaline flame of the Revolution."
Picture: Road from Siberia, trackless.
Lines: "Footprints of exiles—silent marks of human inhumanity—forever covered over by the eternal snows of Siberia."
On marble slab near throne of Romanoffs: "The Passing of the Romanoffs"; "'Twas the cyclonic breath of Infinite Justice, Nicholas Romanoff, which hurled thy throne aside. They were the ghostly hands of countless famished and crushed souls which throttled thy despotism and claimed their reprisal."
On marble slab near throne of Rasputin: "No longer are 180,000,000 souls under the sway of uncontrolled ambition and brutish will devoid of fear or conscience—no longer is helpless woman cast under the hypnotic fascination and soulless abandon of the Mad Monk—Rasputin."

HERE'S A SUGGESTION FOR REAL MUSIC IN SMALL HOUSE

Managers who believe that they can do nothing with music in a small theatre may take a suggestion from this.

"Music can play a big part even in a 200-seat house," says Mr. Rothapfel. "If I were managing such a house I would have a grand piano and I would engage a splendid pianist, if I had to pay him as much as $50 a week. I would decorate the house artistically, but plainly, and I would have the music arranged with the pictures as carefully as I do for my orchestra. The manager who tries this and who creates the atmosphere for his house will soon find the distinctive appeal of this theatre, and that is something that every manager, no matter the size of his house, should strive to make. Create the atmosphere and your patronage is assured."

Bugs in the Rug, Take a Jump

DID you ever stand in front of a door and ring the bell?

And then reflect a moment that the party you wanted might not have heard it and ring the bell again as double precaution that your presence would be known?

It's a good idea to ring the bell twice in the motion picture industry. Be sure that you are heard. It may jar a little at first on the person who is answering because you appear impatient, but if your visit is really a welcome one the other party will be glad you rang twice.

BE IMPATIENT.

Don Marquis, writing in the Evening Sun, says that the man who has too much patience generally has little else.

Job broke into print largely because of his patience and his boils.

You may get a lot of kind words from the people in your home town because of the heroic way in which you endure misfortune. It's a very praiseworthy thing for you to bear up under trouble, and all of that, but it's a whole lot better to be so far out in front that the unhappy can never catch up with you.

We would like to see everyone connected with the exhibition of motion pictures dissatisfied with conditions, not because business is bad but because it can be made better. The quicker you get dissatisfied with your own house and start out to do better things, the more business is coming into your cash drawer.

Maybe you are ringing the bell once now. Ring it twice and see the prompter response.

Taking Stock of Betterments

LAST week we referred to the need of every exhibitor "taking stock" of his business. Merchants usually take stock twice a year or oftener to find out how they stand with the world—to learn what they have gotten out of business during the past six months. Let theatre managers all over the country take stock not to find out how much they are getting out of their theatre but how much they are putting into it.

Of course, you've got to make a living for the time, but you owe yourself a whole lot more. There is a constant drift in this industry and the man who does not realize this and prepare for it is going to find himself left behind.

And when we say "drift" we do not mean that conditions are growing worse, for they are not for the intelligent exhibitor. If they are moving toward fewer theatres in some communities it is because the theatres that remain are giving better attractions than the others.

It's a mighty good resolve to start now and find out what you can put into your business to build for the future.

Ask yourself if you are doing the most you can in this direction and in that for more patronage, and then as fast as you ask yourself the questions answer "No" to all of them. Then figure out how you can improve that business. If you cannot see the answer sit down and write the full facts to us and perhaps we can tell you where and how you can broaden your efforts.

YOU remember the old saying about the bug in the rug and how snug he was there. He held on under ordinary process and kept his nice comfortable place. The broom didn't bother him a bit for he had enmeshed himself so tightly in the strands that a little sweeping didn't bother him a little bit.

But then along came the VACUUM CLEANER. And the poor bug where was he?

He wasn't used to modern methods. He was all right as long as his old-fashioned enemy was at work, but when something new came along, he didn't know what to do.

SOMETHING NEW is coming along every day in the motion picture business. Don't get yourself so wrapped up and so comfortable in the view that everything is going to run along in the old-fashioned way. The Vacuum Cleaner may come along in the shape of another exhibitor who is up to date and you will find yourself extracted from your nice comfortable spot.

This is not meant as an alarmist view. There isn't anything in the world to be scared about but yourself. It's simply a question whether you are on the job or not.

That's the reason why we tell you to BE IMPATIENT once in a while. Don't be content with your business as long as it continues to be good. Don't be content until it gets better week after week and you see yourself progressing with the industry.

Every day put something back into your business—not necessarily cash, but some idea, some element of service, some sign of better showmanship.

We want to help you do this. We are devoting a great deal of room in this department to putting before you the best thought of the country, showing you the best examples of showmanship. We believe that the greatest danger that most of the exhibitors face is their content with things as they are.

The Ant Is Worth Imitating

LAST week we spoke about the Whangdoodle and the mourner.

This week let's consider the Ant. He is never content with preparing for the day, but he's always storing something up for the future. You'll never catch the Ant unprepared for sudden storm or bitter cold.

And the Ant can't even think.

Supposedly you can.

Come on and give our doorbell a couple of rings and tell us what you are doing to raise the standard of your house and to bring in more business for the future. Not only are we anxious to help you in any difficulties that you are in, but we are anxious to tell others of your successes and how you are scoring them.

Let us know that you are so active on the job that there is no possibility of a vacuum cleaner coming along and pulling you out of the way.

If you're on the jump all the time you'll find yourself far ahead of any peril, FOR THE PERILS ARE ONLY THOSE THAT YOU SIT STILL AND WAIT FOR.

Your Idea and Ours

THIS theatre has used one of the window cards furnished by Vitagraph in newspaper advertising and with splendid effect. It's a wise manager who goes over all the material that is sent to him and utilizes it in exploitation. One of the strong points about this sort of advertising is that after a reader sees this in his newspaper he will give more attention to the window cards when he passes them by. There is a whole lot in the cumulative effect of advertising—the sort that makes a man say, when he passes a window card that he saw the same thing before in the morning paper.

If your show is of full value, you don't need the premiums. People who are led into a theatre by hope of a prize expect to get junk in the pictures.

FROM the Fairmont, W. Va. West Virginian, we take this example of how not to advertise. The manager of the Nelson seems to base his exploitation on the idea that everyone is looking to see what is the attraction at his house that day. He is confessedly, making his appeal only to the patrons of that theatre for this space will not make the slightest appeal to the irregular patron or to the man who has never entered his theatre. In this advertisement, two columns by three inches deep, there is not only too much reading matter, but there has been no attempt made at display. If the star and the subject are not worth more prominent attention than this the theatre should never have even booked the picture.

A story old but ever new. A beautiful girl wearies of the restraining bonds of a conventional life and elopes with a man she trusts and loves, only to find that she has been deceived by the smooth manner of her friend, and the attractive appearance of the world beyond her. Of course, the story would be incomplete did it not tell of her casting aside her worthless lover and returning to one whom she had misunderstood and misjudged. The story aside from being very exact in its presentation of details has no other feature so worthy of mention as is the star, Gladys Brockwell.

Too many reels brings one mighty close to staggering.

GIVING cash prizes to the youngsters who will make up as the best imitations of Billy West is an old idea that put one of the West comedies over big at the Grand theatre, Sixteenth and Binny streets, Omaha, Neb. The Grand is a neighborhood house. Exhibitor Jules Rachman scattered a number of Billy West cut-outs. Twenty-two amateur Wests appeared.

A man, dressed as Billy West, was hired to be a "Human Fly" and climb the front of the Grand theatre at night. Two men on top of the theatre and a fine wire attached to the "Human Fly" to pull him up, were not seen as the spotlight played on the man climbing upward. The "stunt" drew a big crowd, most of whom saw the picture.

You count up your cash every night, don't you? It's a good deal more important to count up the lessons that the day has brought you.

MANAGER BOSTICK, of the Merrill theatre, Omaha, whose "live-wiredness" has been commented upon many times in these columns, comes to the front this week with a new idea.

Here is a little card that he mailed to his patrons. It had the punch because it was unusual. Everyone who got this little card probably thought it over and a considerable share of them went to see the pictures that were advertised.

Manager Bostick thinks. Do you?

A picture is a picture, so you say, but that's why a "movie manager" is only a "movie manager."

JOHN C. GREEN, manager of the Temple theatre, Galt, Ontario, is handling the territory for "The Great White Trail." He is sending out a number of advertising novelties with the announcement, and these could be used to advantage by the theatres.

The one illustrated here shows the front of a bottle with the two inside pages devoted to an announcement of the pictures and with another display on the back cover, with the top of the bottle brought out in the form of a plug hat and the figure of a man advertising the picture through a legend on his trouser top.

"War and the Women." When the manager of the Fort theatre, Ft. Thomas, Kentucky, booked the picture he knew that the facilities of his newspaper office were limited yet he picked out the best from the press matter and achieved an advertisement that attracted attention without any cost to himself except the space that he bought.

It's an encouraging sign when the smaller houses begin to use the material that is provided for them; you don't have to have expensive engravings and elaborate half-tones to attract attention to your house.

If yours is a "Family" theatre, make it the parlor and not the kitchen.

PERSONALITY, with a capital letter, is brought into this advertisement of the Sun theatre, Omaha. Yet the advertising is confusing, for the portion of it devoted to the supposed personal statement of Margarita Fischer runs into the statement of the fact that she played at the Omaha theatre and into the announcement of the attractions for the latter half of the week.

Managers should make it a point to play strongly the fact that a star is a home

One theatre advertises: "Changed from burlesque to moving pictures." But lots of moving pictures are still burlesque as far as intelligent exhibition is concerned.

LOEW'S Newark theatre did most effective advertising of "Rasputin" when the picture was shown there through advertising it on cards printed in Yiddish on one side and in English on the other. Thousands of these cards were distributed in the Jewish quarter, which is near the theatre and hundreds who would not have read the advertisements when printed in English were induced to attend. The management reports record business, especially on the night when Montagu Love appeared in person.

Conduct your house so that when you sell a lone seat, you don't simply sell a single admission, but a season ticket to that patron.

EXHIBITORS who want to do unusual advertising and at the same time cannot afford to go to the expense of hiring an artist will find the advertising pages of the NEWS most valuable helps. Any of these can be adapted to the use of theatres, and local managers can get the benefit of the high-priced artists. Here is an advertisement of the Standard theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, which is taken bodily from one of the William Fox advertisements in this paper. Some of the lettering has been taken off and the name of the theatre added. This is work that almost any amateur can do. There are dozens of advertisements in this week's issue that can aid you. Make the money that the producers are spending work the greatest benefit for you, whenever you can.

The exhibitor who doesn't study the exploitation of each film is certainly "turning the picture to the wall."

GEM THEATRE, Plattsmouth, Neb., is said to have used the form of advertisement reproduced here for the past two years, and it is sent to us as an original idea. We believe that the exhibitor is using a lot of valuable space to no advantage. The idea "Good Every Minute" would be much better if stated in small type below a nicely designed "Gem Theatre." And far better than to keep telling your patrons that your show is "Good every minute" is to so conduct your house that they will know this.

However, the Gem does deserve credit for showing that it is up to the minute in taking advantage of the local newspaper, and if more of the exhibitors in smaller communities would follow this example there would be greater prosperity.

GOOD EVERY MINUTE

If you have not figured on what you are going to do to-night, spend an hour at the Gem Theatre. We are presenting one of the most interesting bills of the season.

VICTOR THEATRE

Here is a new record for a motion picture theatre. And it is to be hoped that it will be allowed to stand out as the only one of its sort.

Twenty-six reels for five cents—to grown-ups—is the record of a Buffalo house.

And then concessions are made to the children—they are admitted "two-for-a-nickel."

This is the Victor theatre, 1584 Genesee street, Buffalo. The house seats about 200 people. According to other Buffalo exhibitors the appeal of the house, which is managed by Jacob Rosen, is principally to the children.

The manager of this theatre evidently thinks that all that he has to do is to book a lot of pictures, no matter what they are. The carelessness with which the house is run is shown by one of the advertising cards which the house issued. Note that "Carmen" is spelled with an "A." Our Buffalo correspondent reports that "The Battle of Cry," which the Victor advertises is meant for "The Battle Cry of Peace."

Manager Rosen doesn't show twenty-six reels at each performance. On week days the manager cuts the bill to only twenty reels, Sunday being the day on which patrons should bring their meals with them if they expect to stay through the whole performance.

Naturally, the manager is compelled to use the cheapest sort of service as fillers on his mastodonic program.

How a Nebraska Exhibitor Took His House Off the Business Rocks

ONE year ago last July the Lyric theatre in Arlington, Neb., a town of 1,800, was bumping on the rocks. "It is making me $100 a week now," says Exhibitor W. A. Bowker, who took it over at that time.

Scores of exhibitors could tell stories like Mr. Bowker's, but at the same time there are scores of exhibitors whose houses are "bumping on the rocks."

"When I took the house not a motion picture star was known in my town," he said. "The first thing I did was to start a systematic campaign of heralds, lobby displays and newspaper advertising to get the people acquainted with the stars. I used then, and still use, two sets of photographs in decorating my lobby.

"I established herald routes. Every picture in the least above the regular program run, and I had several weekly, was advertised in heralds taken around by seven boys. I watched the boys until I found straight, manly little fellows who would knock at the door, hand the herald to the lady, tip their hat and turn away. Recently I have discontinued the herald routes because the boys are in school and the drawing power of the herald is a matter of doubt today. I paid the boys, when I had them, by giving them free access to the show at any time.

"My telephoning system is unusual in this state and is the best kind of advertising I ever heard of. I pay a telephone operator to put in a 'line call,' that is, a general call that reaches every telephone patron. As fast as the calls are answered she will say, 'Charley Chaplin wants to meet you at the Lyric tonight," or something of that order. I pay her $1. Her verbal invitation to my theatre reaches 500 families; most of them with an automobile. Here my advertising of the stars helped. In the 'phone calls the star is always mentioned.

"One of the first things I did was to establish serial and 'farmer' or 'comedy' nights. Monday night was my dullest night, and on that night I started my serials. They now pay as well or better than any night. Saturday night is my comedy night, when my patrons are mostly farmers. I run several shows, the farmers staying until a late hour.

"One of the first things I did was to campaign for two weeks for 'The Fighting Germans.' This was before our country was at war and this picture took in my territory, which has a large number of former Germans. I attended their meetings and put bills in the automobiles; I passed out the bills, I nailed them up about the country and when the wind tore them down I nailed them up again. The first day of the show there were 300 people who came to my theatre who were never in a motion picture theatre before.

"The county fair was held recently and I co-operated with the fair association in getting out my weekly house program. I get out a program the size of a common blotter, with the program for the week printed on it. This week the fair week program was printed on the other side. We got out 2,500 copies and my house was filled all week.

"After a few months I quit the ten-cent show. Now my rule is admission 10 and 15 for shows that cost me $7.50 for the film; 10 and 20 when the film costs me $10, and on up.

"I am personally acquainted with every patron. If I tell them the admission is $1, they will pay the dollar and then expect to see a dollar's worth. And they see it. My telephone calls never fail; they are always the exact truth when I say a picture is a good one.

"I leave no room for competition. No competitor can come in and charge 10 cents and live. I ran a ten-cent show every Wednesday night as an experiment, and I never did get my money back. My people wanted something better.

"I hope my experience will help out some house now hitting the rocks. If the exhibitor makes good he will have to work, and work hard. He has got to like his business, think his business and above all—I think—he has to run a show where parents will not be afraid to send their children alone."

Calgary Theatres Encourage Swimming Lessons

Calgary (Alta.) motion picture theatres believe in being a positive sociological force in the community and two of them are demonstrating it in a very concrete manner. The Regent, H. B. Wright manager, and the Empress, I. Wener manager, are encouraging the yongsters of the city to learn to swim and are co-operating with the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. in the effort.

City-wide campaigns have been inaugurated and the boys and girls taught in large numbers

This is D. M. Thomas, manager of the St. Louis exchange of the Fox Film Company. While "Jack and the Beanstalk" was being shown at Standard theatre, Mr. Thomas located James G. Travers, who played the "Giant." Mr. Travers was then with the Barnum and Bailey circus in East St. Louis. Their pictures were taken together in front of the theatre.

Putting Individuality Into Your Advertising

which the reader says to himself, "That's the Strand advertisement," before he even looks at the name, is going to bring you better results.

You have put the personality into the first part of your theatre, into the advance work on it. Nine out of every ten of your readers may not know you personally, but they will quickly get the spirit of your theatre, and if you carry out the personality idea through every branch of your activities you will soon, too, discover that you have built up a business that is distinctly YOURS.

We have illustrated how a few of the theatres keep the individual idea through their work. For instance, the Knickerbocker theatre, Cleveland, nearly always follows the style shown, varying the typing. This is effective, because it gives the name of the house prominently and the eye immediately drops to the name of the star and the title of the picture.

Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, does not use exactly the same style of border. All of these advertisements are especially designed, but the name is always in the same style and the borders always in keeping with one another.

The Metropolitan, Cleveland, used the "Ben Day" border effect on all displays, keeping the letter "M" prominently displayed and, though the displays are totally different each week, they are so "reminiscent" that one gets the atmosphere of them immediately—and there is atmosphere to advertising of individuality.

The thinking manager can easily hit on a scheme to follow. It's worth a few nights study to achieve a striking design.

Is This Your Theatre?

In this column the Exhibitors' Service Bureau will print comment from week to week on theatres actually visited, pointing out faults found and commendable features. The name of the theatre will not be mentioned, but if it applies to you and you want improvement, write to this department.

THEATRE E is one of a string of three theatres owned by the same man in a city of the middle class. It seats about 400 people and is located on the principal street and on one of the busiest corners. The other two theatres under the same ownership are located on the same street, one of the houses being larger and the other smaller than E.

Theatre E is a handsome little house with comfortable seats, an excellent screen and fairly good music. The smaller of the three houses is old and uncomfortable while the third house has only recently been completed and it is a model in theatre construction and a building that is a credit to the city. This third house charges more than twice the admission of the other two houses. We are considering only the problems of "E" here, but the manner in which it is conducted makes it necessary to refer to the others.

As will be found in many of the cities one side of this main street is much busier than the other, principally because practically all of the department stores are located on that side. Theatre E is on the busy side, the other two on the opposite side. Theatre E has three times the transient, sidewalk appeal that the other houses have.

As we aproached the house from across the main street the first thing that struck our eye was the twenty-four sheet poster above the lobby, covering the second floor of the building. It was not a stock printed sheet, but one with artistic hand work with the figure of the star and the name of the picture standing out boldly. One who was not busy studying the house would conclude that this was the current attraction, but a closer examination, undertaken while dodging the traffic revealed that this advertisement referred to a picture showing at the newest house of the three. And the management did not mean this banner to deceive the public. He was merely undertaking to use his "stand" to advertise the larger house.

The lobby itself was small and this was crowded with one sheets announcing the current attraction. That is, we discovered them later.

For we could not see them at the time. There was such a crowd in front of the place, with the sidewalks jammed, that one could scarcely see these displays, for the attention of the crowd was attracted by a man made up as Charlie Chaplin and advertising—not a picture being shown at that theatre, but at the smallest of the trio of houses a block away. It would have been bad enough if the manager was willing to block his sidewalk with a throng of curiosity seekers, some of whom might enter this theatre, but to drive patrons away from his house is the height of bad business.

Bear in mind that here was one of the busiest corners in the city and the house was presumably located there because of that fact, expecting that a certain percentage of the passersby would enter. Yet every appeal of the theatre itself was made on behalf of another house.

This is a situation that is extremely rare, but on the inside the same thing was repeated on a different scale and in a way that is done in many other cities. Not only were there a large number of slides advertising coming attractions, but there was another set for each of the two other houses. Many managers of chains of theatres seem to think that they have to advertise all of their attractions in every house instead of letting each theatre stand on its own bottom.

And then, in addition to all of this advertising, one was bored for ten minutes longer with advertising motion pictures.

This theatre took small space in the newspapers, being dwarfed in display by the display given to the biggest house of the three. The reason the manager gave for this was that because of the location advertising on this theatre didn't pay. Yet he used practically all of the pulling power of the house itself to aid one of his others.

Apparently the greatest appeal of this house should be to business men, to tired shoppers wanting to rest for a while, and to the transients in the city, and to the general public that would be attracted into a house by the announcements in the lobby. Yet the crowd in front of the house watching the antics of an amateur Charley Chaplin was enough to keep out any woman who wasn't willing to elbow himself in, and the amount of advertising being shown on the screen was ample to prevent the second visit of any business man who was willing to give the time to actual amusement but who didn't care to know what the manager was going to offer everywhere for the next week or so.

One entered from the lobby immediately into the theatre and the last row of seats was only a couple of feet from the door. The doors were open so that one could hear the laughter and conversation of the crowd on the street almost above the music. And on the way out, at the end of the feature picture, the fifty or more people who were ready to leave had to scramble around the imitator in making their way to the street again.

As we have said this is a very strong example and applies to few theatres, but there are many managers who are trying to make one house advertise the others under the same ownership, when others have learned long ago that one must center all of one theatre's drawing power on the theatre itself.

Theatre E is probably not your theatre, but are you using the same policies on a milder scale?

Seeing the Rialto with Rothapfel

DYNAMO of human energy that he is, S. L. Rothapfel had the appearance of being "all in" when we saw him late Sunday afternoon. And there's a reason, because this man in his careful attention to every detail, in his own hand blending every part of his presentations into the splendor in which his audiences see them displays an eager interest that, if shared even in a smaller part by exhibitors all over the country, would work for far better results in the picture industry.

Last week we told you something of how the director of the Rialto spends a great share of Friday night selecting the music for the feature picture, and Saturday night selecting from all the available sources the components of the Rialto Animated Magazine. Sunday morning he is down early working out the light effects, no small portion of the Rialto presentation. And then the rest of the morning adding little overlooked details.

In addition to these duties, the feature picture was switched this week at the eleventh hour, owing to the fact that the picture that was to be shown was tied up by legal action brought against the producers. And so it was necessary to select the music all over again.

And there was still more. Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, the conductor, was forced to undergo a minor operation this week, and there is where the versatile Rothapfel stepped to the fore, for he is directing the great orchestra of fifty himself. He has conducted the Rialto orchestra often before, but this is the first time that he has presided over the augmented musical body.

The overture this week is "William Tell," and Rossini's great composition was never rendered in more fitting spirit. Aside from the work of the orchestra itself, the mobile lights again came into play with marked effect during this composition. During the storm the lights all over the house faded from the soft red into a dark blue, and then as the sun appeared the lights over the proscenium filtered into yellow, finally the whole of the house being flooded with light as the finale came. The other chief selection by the orchestra was taken from the ever popular "Florodora."

We saw Mr. Rothapfel after he had directed the first performance through. Here again the man showed why he has scored the success that he has achieved. He called man after man into the room for their criticisms of not only the whole presentation, but his own directing. He insisted on criticisms. "I don't want to be kidded," he said. This is a little thing, Mr. Exhibitor, but what do you do in such cases? We even know managers of important theatres who resent it when one criticizes a picture which he booked when he had never seen it and for whose faults he was in no way responsible. We even know of the case of the manager of a string of theatres who withdrew his advertising when a newspaper comparing two productions of the same story and saying that the one at the other house was the better.

It's the broad man, in every walk of life, that is going to be the success. And this is especially true in the case of motion pictures where satisfying people themselves is essential.

One of the musicians told Mr. Rothapfel that certain pieces did not seem to play out strong enough at one place. The keen interest of the Rialto's head was shown in immediately remedying this slight defect, one that would not be noted by any without long technical experience with a big orchestra.

Think this personal interest over, Mr. Exhibitor. Put yourself in the place of your patron and criticize yourself twice as hard as your patron does.

The entire program at the Rialto this week is a happy one, there is action running entirely through it. Last week we mentioned the difference between balance and co-ordination, and we have been questioned of what the difference is. It is this: The program at the Rialto is not balanced this week with comedy set against the drama. But it is co-ordination, because there appears to be a single theme running through all the pictures, a theme of happiness and life and energy.

Charles Ray is all action in "The Son of His Father," and pulled a lot of Douglas Fairbanks stuff. There was a good balance of clever comedy to the picture.

A most striking effect is obtained in the Animated Magazine, especially in the music effects. The opening shows Squadron A marching down Fifth avenue on their start to the front, and the orchestra pealing forth, "Good-by, Broadway, Hello, France," brought a great volume of applause, but it remained for the closing feature of the magazine to bring forth not only hand-clapping, but the audience broke into cheer after cheer, and voices were raised high in their expression of emotion. And to this stirring picture, showing the President of France reviewing the helmeted American troops in France, the orchestra played "Over There." The effect of the good-by to the first troops and the others already "over there" was so striking as to come home quickly to every one. Another burst of applause came with the Universal cartoon, "Barrage Fire," based on the Liberty Loan.

Other numbers in this magazine were Pathe's "Springtime on the Riviera," a beautifully colored picture, U. S. marines playing football, the Rocky Mountain Jay, scenic studies and striking plays in the third and fourth games of the world series. Rothapfel did a striking thing this week in putting in two "Mutt and Jeff" comedies. It was so unusual as to cause comment. The reason: To bring back a succession of laughs amid a bunch of subjects that kept the heart beating fast.

"Fading of Local Color" is another delightful scenic made by Educational. The title is in cartoon form, and we regret that there is not room to describe it in full here, for it's about the cleverest of such.

This is a picture of the Arizona desert, and again the music came in. There are a few Indians brought into the picture, and the wildness of the country shown suggested to Mr. Rothapfel an Indian air, and so "The Dagger Dance" from Victor Herbert's "Natomah" was used, the string instruments delightfully echoing the tom-tom of the savages.

Music can make a picture. It added twice the delight to this one.

Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew appear in "The Dentist," a very human comedy.

Greek Evans is again heard at the Rialto this week, this time in the toreador song from "Carmen." Attillo de Cicco gave a lifeless rendition of a love song from "Manon Lescaut."

Booking a GOOD picture is only the start. Convincing the public that it is a GOOD picture is the thing that brings the cash through the box office window.

AT THE STRAND WEEK OF OCT. 14

COMEDY runs strong through the bill at the Strand theatre for the week of October 14. Billie Burke is the star in "Arms and the Girl," the story of an American girl caught in France at the time of the German invasion. While there are some powerful dramatic scenes, the comedy prevails.

The other laughing picture is Victor Moore in "Home Defense," a wildly impossible creation.

The educational this week is a Pathe picture in colors, one part showing "A Corner in the Morvan," and the latter half "Wild Ducks." There is some exceptional photography in the latter half, and the camera man has been able to catch a lot of comedy

Practically all of the topical review is devoted to patriotic subjects. The opening shows a parade of troops in San Francisco prior to their departure, with former Ambassador to Germany Gerard telling the boys good-by; then there are scenes from the world series, followed by a clever Bray-Paramount cartoon showing the new aeroplane machine guns. The fourth chapter shows British troops leaving for the front, and then a tribute that was paid to the American flag by the English. At an Atlantic port a seized German ship is seen being put in commission. This is followed by a scene showing American troops in France. This was made by Pathe, and is almost identical with the Universal picture of the same scene being shown at the Rialto. The closing chapter urges buying a Liberty Loan Bond.

The overture is Rossini's "Semiramis," and the organ solo "Melody of Peace." Marie Stark, soprano, rendered the mad scene from "Lucia," and Herbert Waterous is heard in "The Two Grenadiers."

Ready Made Ad-Talks

"Cassidy," Featuring Dick Rosson—Human, Heart-Interest Picture Drama

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Some men are a failure in New York and a success in San Francisco, and vice versa. In other words, the success of some men depends in a large measure on geographical lines—or so it seems. It was so with Cassidy, the hero of the five-part photodrama of the same name, released by Triangle and featuring Dick Rosson. It is a story of the "down-and-outer," who waited only the chance to rise to his feet and declare himself as good, if not better, than the best of men, if such is possible. Cassidy had lost courage—had given up the hope of ever being able to hold his head high in the air and say "I'm a man." But fate had something to say on this question, and fate decreed that he leave New York for San Francisco. Cassidy arrives in the Coast city at night—broke, hungry and with a feeling that his days were numbered. Instinctively he turns to the lights over the entrance to a saloon. There is someone waiting for him back in Old New York. Before the end comes he wishes to get back and decides to "pull" one more robbery. He chooses the house, enters by a window, and finds himself face to face with its owner. He is the district attorney of that county. Cassidy sees a picture of his daughter. She reminds him of the one who is waiting for him back East. The district attorney is merciful and gives Cassidy money to return to New York. Cassidy returns to the saloon and sees the replica of the picture he had seen at the home of the district attorney. She had just returned from boarding school. He acts quickly, returns her to her father and starts for the freight yards and New York. He was a man.

Olive Tell Seen in "The Unforeseen" Adapted from Famous Stage Play

(Mutual Five Reel Production)

Olive Tell is probably better known to those acquainted with the names in electric lights over the entrances of the legitimate theatres than to those, numbered in millions, who follow the flaring beacons announcing the next "movie" feature to be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre. If you are not already acquainted with Miss Tell and her magnetic personality, you want to come to the ——— theatre ——— week and watch her enact the scenes that take place between Margaret Fielding and Walter Maxwell, Richard Haynes and others, when Margaret Fielding, after living happily with her husband, who is blind, is confronted with the problem of concealing her identity from her husband after his sight has been restored by an operation. Years before she had been seen under compromising circumstances by Maxwell, who eventually became her husband. He was the man she married her. This gives you only an inkling of what transpires when "The Unforeseen" is shown on the screen, but it is thought advisable for Miss Tell to give her own version of the story, which she, as Margaret Fielding, presented, assisting her in the enactment of this screen play, the original stage version of which was presented by Charles Frohman, at the Empire theatre, New York City, in 1913, are David Powell, Lionel Adams, Fuller Mellish, Eileen Dennes and Helen Courtney.

Olive Tell, seen in some of the most popular Broadway productions, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "The Unforeseen," adapted from the stage play of the same name.

"The Dormant Power," with Ethel Clayton and Montague Love—Powerful Drama

(World Five Reel Production)

It takes a lot to arouse some men to the realization that they are meant to accomplish big things in life. And, generally, the ones who are destined to, not alone after the course of their own lives but who are to be directly responsible for the happiness of others, are the ones who, when they get the first inspiration, are found deep down in the mire of discouragement and failure. One glance from a woman, telling in that glance, volumes and conveying by that glance the one incentive needed to give such a man encouragement, is the greatest reformer in the world and accomplishes more real good than all the sermons ever rendered by the most eloquent orator. The glance that Christine Brent, who lives with her father in a small Texas town, gives Carl Randolph, a social outcast, wretched driftwood from the company of aspiring humanity, changes the course of the life of a wretched human failure into the paths that lead to enlightenment and success and makes of a human piece of wreckage, a man, respected by his fellow men and loved by a woman among women. With an "all-star" cast, the World Film Corporation has produced for the screen a story in pictures which tells of such a man and of such a woman. Note the names of those in the cast of characters: Ethel Clayton (featured), Joseph Herbert, Edward Lanford, Montagu Love, Muriel Ostriche and George Morgan. Do you recognize the names of screen favorites? They enact "The Dormant Power." Come and see it at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Mrs. Vernon Castle in Cleverest of Mystery Dramas, "The Mark of Cain"

(Pathe Five Reel Production)

To have set the pace for the millions of Americans who are devotees of the Terpsichorean art, to have a roof garden, the habitat of the elite of Broadway, named after you and to have your name emblazoned over the entrances of thousands of homes of both the silent and spoken drama, are results which most any of us would point to and say, "I am content"—but not so with Mrs. Vernon Castle. She is not content with seeing herself in "Patria," the Pathe serial which made the rounds of the Globe and added to her list of admirers a number represented by five or more figures, not with the other honors, but she, assisted by Antonio Moreno, J. B. Gilmour and Elinore Black, is to unravel a mystery called "The Mark of Cain." Roland Trowbridge, a wealthy stockbroker, is murdered in Van Cortlandt Park, New York. His last words were, "Mark of Cain—Cain did it." The murdered man's nephew, Kane, is accused. Peculiar circumstances lead to his arrest. Mrs. Castle presents the role of Alice, daughter of the murdered man. Judge Hoyt is in love with Alice. He wishes to marry her. How events shape themselves and the meaning of the last words spoken by the murdered man are depicted in this mystery drama and the many links in the chain of evidence which slowly winds about the guilty party, afford some of the most exciting scenes ever flashed on the screen of the ——— theatre. Mrs. Castle presents a part that demands of her the many talents which have placed her in the limelight and gained for her thousands of admirers. The story, itself, is a clever mystery, told in pictures. The ——— theatre promises you an exhibition seldom equalled and rarely excelled on the screen.

Marguerite Clark in "Bab's Diary"—'Nuf Said—You Be the Judge—"Great"

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

A good story, a good director and Marguerite Clark—this is a combination that is hard to beat. For screen material the result has no equal. The story—"Bab's Diary"; the director—J. Searle Dawley, and the most charming, talented little personage on the screen—Marguerite Clark. These are the three ingredients which will go to make up the program for the performance at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. You all know Miss Clark. Most of you know the name of Director Dawley. It only remains to tell you something of the story and the names of the members of the cast who assist Miss Clark in relating the adventures of Bab Archibald when she attempts to deceive her mother by announcing the name of a fictitious young man (who turns out to be most real) whom she intends to marry. In order to carry out her plans, Bab has to impersonate the role of a most astute diplomat, and she does so until the real man suddenly appears and she finds herself face to face with the problem of making good her bluff. But before this time comes, Bab finds herself in all sorts of predicaments. Some excellent comedy situations are made possible and Miss Clark is always "Johnnie-on-the-spot" when it comes to comedy situations. Those who are seen in the supporting cast are Nigel Barrie, Lenora Morgan, Frank Losee, Isabel O'Madigan, Richard Barthelmess, Helen Green, Guy Coombs, Jack O'Brien and George Odell.

William Russell and Francelia Billington In Red-Blooded Drama, "The Sea Master"

(Mutual Five Reel Production)

A story of the sea, of the land, of the human tragedies that are enacted and pass unnoticed unless brought to light through the medium of the press or the motion picture—this, in brief, is the nature of the revelations to be made on the screen of ——— theatre ——— week when William Russell and Francelia Billington are seen in "The Sea Master," a five-part photoplay surging with humanity's stronger self in battle with the weakness of a woman who by virtue of this weakness defies the indefatigable, who feared no man or no one thing, but who acknowledged defeat at the hands of him after his brute strength proved of no avail against the invisible something which emanates from the woman we love and because of that love, admire and also respect, even though we realize that she is untrue and undeserving of our respect. Strong, virile action characterizes this late picture, released on the Mutual program. It tells a red-blooded story and in a manner and with a feeling that demands a reason from any and all who have red blood running through their veins, in the language of the streets, "it's a corker"—one that not only furnishes with every flash or reelage, entertainment, but one that furnishes "food for thought" and will be remembered long after it has run its course on the screen.

Alma Reubens, the Girl with the Beautiful Eyes, in "Firefly of Tough Luck"

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Alma Reubens' name is not as familiar to motion picture lovers as some others, but the management of the ——— theatre wishes to call to the attention of his patrons that, though Miss Reubens' name has not been up in electric lights, she deserves such honors, and the management is of the belief that after you have seen Miss Reubens in "The Firefly of Tough Luck," to be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, you will agree. Miss Reubens presents the role of the Firefly who takes up the profession of entertaining the rough element that is usually found in a dance hall. Her husband is a worthless sort and the Firefly is obliged to work in order to "keep the wolf from the door." She starts for the town of Tough Luck, but on arriving she looses her nerve and retraces her steps. Night finds her on the lonely desert. Danny Ward, a Yale graduate, has lost at cards, and he also finds himself wandering in the desert. He finds the Firefly and takes her back to Tough Luck. "Tough Luck" Baxter, the founder of the town, Happy Jack Curtis, a prospector, and the Firefly decide to stand together and the Firefly becomes the star entertainer of the public dance hall. Danny Ward becomes infatuated with her. Her husband gets in trouble and she decides to stick with him, but events so turn that she is convinced that he is worse than a beast. The town of Tough Luck is renamed Good Luck, after Baxter has fallen victim to own faults.

Jane Cowl, Star of Many Broadway Successes, Seen in "The Spreading Dawn"

(Goldwyn Six-Reel Production)

Jane Cowl, the star of many Broadway successes and who made such a decided hit in "Common Clay" and "Lilac Time," two of the most popular stage successes of the last two seasons, is to be seen in a Goldwyn production, titled "The Spreading Dawn," a story of love and war. At this time, when almost the entire world is at war, "The Spreading Dawn" strikes a most timely note, and with Miss Cowl interpreting the featured role of Patricia Vanderpyl, a belle of New York society during the Civil War, it has added assurance of success. Georgina Vanderpyl, a descendant of the old Vanderpyl family of Civil War days, wishes to marry her soldier boy before he leaves for France, but her aged aunt discourages the marriage because, as she explains, Patricia Vanderpyl, who married her soldier lover at the outbreak of the Civil War, was made unhappy for the remaining days of her life, because of the unfaithfulness of her husband. Miss Cowl presents the part of Patricia, and she takes you back to the days of the war, and shows how her husband's unfaithfulness destroyed every happiness she had ever known. This is enacted while the aunt relates to Georgina the story. The aunt remembers a letter written by the husband, which had never been opened. Georgina insists that it be read, and in it is revealed the fact that her (Patricia's) husband had been misjudged. Georgina's marriage is sanctioned, and Patricia is, after many years, convinced that love still exists. Supporting Miss Cowl are Orme Caldara, Harry Springer, Florence Billings, Henry Stephenson, Alice Chapin, Helen Blair, Cecil Owen, Mabel Ballin, Edmund Lowe and Mrs. Edith McAlpin. "The Spreading Dawn" was adapted from the story by Basil King.

At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, Jane Cowl in "The Spreading Dawn."

Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Stars of the Silent Drama in "Sunshine Alley"

(Goldwyn Six-Reel Production)

Mae Marsh, whose name will be long remembered for her work in Griffith's masterpiece, "The Birth of a Nation," and who more recently starred in the screen adaptation of Margaret Mayo's play, "Polly of the Circus," is to be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre in "Sunshine Alley," a drama that runs true to life, and presents her in a role that brings out all the charm of a talented actress's personality. Heading the supporting cast in "Sunshine Alley" is Robert Harron, who has risen with Miss Marsh to the ranks of stardom. Mr. Harron's power to entertain and to interpret a dramatic part is no less marvelous than that possessed by Miss Marsh. He is an artist and portrays the character of Ned Morris, a son of a millionaire, who falls in love with Nell, the character impersonated by Miss Marsh, with all the naturalness that could possibly surround such a character in everyday life. With Miss Marsh and Mr. Harron, in this picture are Dion Titheradge, J. A. Furey, Ed. See, John Charles, W. T. Carleton, Isabel Berwin and Jack Grey. The screen adaptation was made from the story by Mary Rider. The initial title to the final scene, it is human—full of heart-interest and depicts the events in the lives of two young people—the one in poverty, the other blessed with wealth. Nell is loved by a young millionaire, but her love for her brother is greater, and excepting that other forces influence the course of events, she would have lost the friendship of a man who really loved her, and who was in a position to grant her every wish—all for her brother.

How she is cleared of a charge of theft that has been made against her, and the happy ending of it all is told in "Sunshine Alley," with Mae Marsh and Robert Harron in the leading roles, to be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"The Desire of the Moth," Disclosing the Wonders of the West—Ruth Clifford

(Bluebird Five-Reel Production)

Are you from Virginia? Have you ever witnessed a real demonstration of Old Dominion friendship, and would it mean to have friends who are really friends and not the so-called friends who present themselves in that light only when your pocketbook is filled and your spirits running high? If you're not from Virginia—all the better—for you will know for the first time what it means to call Virginia a home State. Eugene M. Rhodes has written a story entitled "The Desire of the Moth." Elliott J. Clawson, who is responsible for the work of adapting the story, has scenarioized some of the best Bluebird productions. Ruth Clifford is the featured member of the cast. She presents the part of Stella Vorhis. In the supporting cast is Monroe Salisbury, the noted character actor of both screen and stage. Mr. Salisbury has been associated on the speaking stage, with such well-known celebrities as Mrs. Fiske, Kathryn Kidder, Nance O'Neill and John Drew. He appeared with Marguerite Clark in "The Goose Girl," one of the first of her screen plays. Rupert Julian is also in the supporting cast. Mr. Julian directed the production. Others in the cast are W. H. Brainbridge, Milton Brown and Al Sears. "The Desire of the Moth" is a picture of unusual worth. Full of action, most of which takes place in the open country of the Southwest, it presents a picture of the maximum entertaining value.

"The Desire of the Moth," a Bluebird, with Ruth Clifford featured, will be at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Vivian Martin as "Mike," a Newsy, in "The Trouble Buster"—Some Little Newsy

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Vivian Martin in "The Trouble Buster." The management of the ——— theatre is always pleased to announce the name of Miss Martin as the featured player in a picture showing at the ——— theatre. One thing is always assured, and that is that this little actress will please. She always radiates sunshine from the screen. She does so when she enacts the role of "Mike" in her late picture. On the program she is listed as Michelna Libelt, but to her friends, and especially to "Blackie" Moyle she is known as plain "Mike." "Mike" is a little Roumanian, recently arrived in this country with her father. Her father is taken ill and dies, leaving "Mike" to obtain a living the best she knows how. She meets "Blackie" Moyle, a newsy, and she is offered part of his pipe-box home. The two become close friends, and during their spare moments they model figures in mud. She decides that she must masquerade as a boy and so cuts off her curls, dresses in boy's clothing, and from all outward appearances is "Mike," the "boy" newsy. "Mike" meets Tip Morgan, a gangster, and she is lured to his den. "Blackie" discovers them and rescues her. "Mike" learns of an art exhibit and thinks it would be good fun to bring some of her figures, modeled in mud, to the exhibit. An art dealer sees in one of the models wonderful possibilities to create a craze for the figure it represents. "Mike" becomes famous. "Blackie" is rewarded also, and the two newsies are made happy.

Dorothy Phillips the Prize Actress of Bluebird Stock, Seen in "Bondage"

(Bluebird Five-Reel Production)

The experiences of a girl reporter, the lively times had in the Bohemian section of New York and the manner in which a girl with fickle notions concerning love and happiness, and the happy ending of it all, is, in brief, the story as told by Dorothy Phillips, and a strong supporting cast of Bluebird artists, when she enacts the principal role in "Bondage," the latest Bluebird feature, to be shown at the ——— theatre. Those who assist Miss Phillips in her work in this picture are Gretchen Lederer, Gertrude Astor, William Stowell and J. B. McLaughlin. The plot of the story was suggested by Edna Kenton, and Ida May Park, one of the few women directors, adapted it to the screen and produced it under her personal direction. Miss Phillips presents the role of Elinor Crawford, who lived in a small town and who was ambitious to become a great writer. To accomplish her ends she goes to New York against the wishes of Evan Kilvert, village attorney, who is in love with her. Arrived in New York, she settles in the Washington square district, the home of all New Yorkers struck with the artistic temperament. She meets with congenial friends and drifts into the free and easy life as lead by those inhabiting this district. She is contented with life until the man whom she married shows his real self and deserts her, and then, for the first time, she realizes what it means to be in New York, to use a slang expression, "broke."

"A Rich Man's Plaything"—A Fox Production with Valeska Suratt Featured

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

"A Rich Man's Plaything" is the latest Fox production, presenting Valeska Suratt in the featured role. Miss Suratt impersonates the role of Marie Grandon, a young girl who while working in a factory makes the acquaintance of "Iron" Lloyd, a millionaire who has been disappointed in love and has come to the small New England town to try to forget. He takes a job in the same factory in which Marie is working for a small wage and is attracted to her. They become close friends, and Marie tells Lloyd what she would do if she were a woman of means. Lloyd, now in love with Marie, notifies his lawyer in the city to arrange so that part of his fortune will go to Marie, but instructs the attorney that she must be lead to believe that the money has been left to her by a distant relative. Lloyd's curiosity is aroused by the statement Marie had made regarding the steps she would take if she were rich, and he does this to test her and learn if she will follow the path taken by most women who suddenly find that they really are wealthy. Lloyd, whose assumed name is Strange, finds that one of the first persons to be attacked by Marie when she establishes herself in New York and starts a campaign to reform the tenement house districts is himself. Ogden Deneau meets Marie in New York and falls in love with her. He is a strong business rival of Lloyd's. He attempts to ruin Lloyd, acting through Marie, and Marie starts a counter attack on Deneau through Lloyd. Marie wins her point, as well as a husband.

"Thou Shalt Not Steal"—A Detective Story of Merit—Virginia Pearson Featured

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

A detective story, whether it appears between the covers of a book or in pictures on the screen, always furnishes entertainment. This is especially true of detective stories adapted to the screen, for then the characters themselves unravel the mystery before your eyes. "Thou Shalt Not Steal" is a five-reel feature picture from the Fox Studios and has for its principal character Mary Bruce, impersonated by Virginia Pearson. It is a typical detective story and a mystery is unraveled and solved that moves along in true Sherlock Holmes style. Miss Pearson impersonates a girl who is told by her father that she must marry a man whom she does not love and whom she knows she never can love. The means she takes, in order to defeat her father's plans and to bring about a union between her and the man she really loves, sets the machinery in motion that makes possible one of the best mystery dramas that has ever been seen on the screen of the ——— theatre. Miss Pearson is supported in her work in this picture by Claire Whitney, Wayne, Mathilde Brundage, John Goldsworthy, Robert Elliott, Martin Faust, Lem F. Kennedy, Danny Sullivan, Dan Mason, Mrs. Pat Foy, Victor De Linsky and William Burton—all well-known Fox stars. "Thou Shalt Not Steal" was produced under the direction of William Nigh.

Virginia Pearson, in "Thou Shalt Not Steal," will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"'49—'17" Takes You Back to the Days of '49—Western Drama

(Butterfly Five-Reel Production)

Back in the "days of '49" the "seven-shooter" swayed the destinies of the rugged, care-free miners. Blackstone's commentaries were unknown and never decided an argument. The "seven-shooter" was both judge and jury. The best man won. Judge Brand longed for the old days. He was immensely rich and suggested to his son, Tom, that he if he could, once more, experience the days when the gold flowed down the mountain side and the man who could shoot the straightest and quickest was the leader of his fellows he would gladly give his fortune. He wanted to live again the days when Nugget Notch flourished and the dance hall was at its height of popularity. Tom, anxious for adventure, suggested that he could reconstruct the old town of Nugget Gulch so as to make it resemble the town as his father knew it. He sets out for the West and, to the best of his ability, brings about the change. Then the Judge arrives and receives his first disappointment when, upon alighting from the train, he fails to hear the whistle of bullets through the crown of his wide Stetson. But he overlooks this neglect on the part of his son to provide the realistic, hoping that he has something more realistic of the old West in store for him. The dance hall is there and the saloon is running at full blast. Shortly after the Judge's arrival events so shape themselves as to bring the old Judge face to face with the life of the old days. He makes a discovery, meets the offspring of an old friend and solves a mystery surrounding the murder of a well-known character in the days of '49. "'49-'17" is typical of this picture of the old West. The days of '49 are compared with the days of the Twentieth Century.

William J. Fitzpatrick has been appointed Pennsylvania representative of the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, Pittsburgh. He will devote most of his time to the western half of the state, and will specialize on the three latest properties of the Wolfberg exchange, "Today," "The Mad Lover," and "Persuasive Peggy."

Mr. Fitzpatrick was associated with the Pathe, and prior to this time with the World Film Company, of St. Louis. He is one of the oldest moving picture salesmen in the business. Besides operating several moving pictures stock companies in Chicago, he spent several years in vaudeville and musical comedy.

Thomas and Raver Join Forces in New Company

Dean of American Playwrights Will Contribute Original Stories Besides Acting in an Advisory Capacity Respecting Other Scenarios Accepted for Production

BY the terms of an agreement, the final details of which were arranged last week, Augustus Thomas, the dean of American playwrights, becomes associated with Harry Raver in the formation of a new motion picture producing organization. Augustus Thomas, in addition to writing original stories, which will be visualized by the new concern, will also act in an advisory capacity with respect to all scenarios accepted for production and will generally supervise all matters relative to the selection of casts, scenic investiture and staging.

Mr. Thomas has achieved a place in the hearts of the American theatregoing public equalled by few contemporaneous playwrights. For more than twenty-five years he has contributed consistently successful offerings to the stage and his fame as a dramatist has reached the four corners of the globe. He has received the plaudits of the foremost critics of all nations, who have been as one in their designations of his plays, as remarkable, not only in technical construction and craftsmanship, but in their masterly treatment of the real problems of life as well.

Augustus Thomas has been accorded many honors in the form of decorations by literary bodies of the highest standing, but the honor he prizes most highly is that conferred upon him by the American Society of Arts and Letters, whose recognition of his notable attainments as a dramatist was recently expressed in the presentation of a medal of solid gold. Mr. Thomas is the only American playwright who has been the recipient of this signal honor from the Society of Arts and Letters.

Before entering the field of dramatic literature Augustus Thomas was a newspaper man. In 1890 he wrote "Alabama," a play which started a vogue which resulted in a veritable flood of similar offerings. "Alabama" was a great success and established the young playwright forthwith. Then followed "Mr. Carter of Cartersville" and "In Mizzoura," the latter play presenting Nat Goodwin in a new type of role which added greatly to the reputations of both dramatist and actor.

"Arizona," one of Mr. Thomas' most successful plays, appeared in 1900. This ran for two seasons on Broadway and later toured the country for six or seven years with unremitting favor. The complete list of Augustus Thomas' successes would fill a veritable book, and space limitations naturally forbid their repetition here. Among his better known plays, however, we might mention such whirlwind hits as "Colorado," "On the Quiet," "The Earl of Pawtucket," "The Harvest Moon," "As a Man Thinks," "The Education of Mr. Pipp," "The Embassy Ball" and "The Witching Hour."

"The Witching Hour" was not alone an unusual stage success from both an artistic and financial standpoint, but repeated its record in visual form, its appearance as a screen attraction being hailed with an acclaim that has fully justified itself, as all familiar with pictures are aware.

True to the reputation which he bears as an American man of affairs vitally interested in the welfare of his country, Augustus Thomas is presently engaged in a tour of the United States, speaking in various cities in behalf of the second Liberty Loan. Secretary McAdoo chose Mr. Thomas as a member of the lecture committee to boost the Liberty Loan, which body includes such distinguished men as Gov. Walsh of Massachusetts, ex-Gov. Folk of Missouri, Billy Sunday, the evangelist, ex-President Taft, Oscar S. Straus, the philanthropist, and ex-Governors Deneen and Dunne of Illinois. Luke Thomas, son of the playwright, is now "somewhere in France."

Tucker Gets "Congrats" from Across the Ocean

George Loane Tucker, who directed the McClure picture, "Mother," in which Elizabeth Risdon plays the title part, has received a cablegram from London from Eden Philpotts, the author of the book from which the scenario was taken, as follows: "Heartiest congratulations—great difficulties triumphantly conquered by you—humor and pathos story rendered with sympathy and fine feeling. (Signed) Eden Philpotts."

This tribute from the author to Mr. Tucker voices the sentiment of all those who have seen the private showings of this film, which is now about to be released on the state rights basis. Mr. Tucker, whose recent picture, "The Manxman," has caused him to be acknowledged one of the foremost directors, himself considers "Mother" among the best of his recent productions.

Pelzman to Handle "Italian Battlefront"

The distribution of the Royal Italian Government's official war pictures, "The Italian Battlefront," for Greater New York, New York State and New Jersey, is being handled for the Fort Pitt Theatre Company, which controls the American rights to this picture, by S. D. Pelzman, who recently became associated with the New York office of this organization.

Mr. Pelzman, who is widely known among exhibitors in these territories, has for a long time been connected with the Universal Company, where he handled independent releases and other special productions.

A progressive type of exchangeman, whose business gospel is founded on helping an exhibitor make the most out of a picture, Mr. Pelzman may be relied upon to give exhibitors who present this picture that quality of personal service which insures the most far-reaching results.

"The Italian Battlefront" is reported to be in strong demand in New York City, as the result of its success at the Forty-fourth Street theatre, and exhibitors planning to present this picture will do well to get in touch with Mr. Pelzman promptly, at the offices of the corporation in the Times building.

Hoffman Players Aid Smoke Fund

Hoffman-Foursquare artists showed their patriotism last week by doing their bit for the benefit of the New York Sun's Tobacco Fund for the boys in France. Turning their backs for the moment upon their profession, they became newsies for a splendid cause. With evening editions of The Sun under their arms, they stopped pedestrians at Fifth avenue and Forty-second street and sold papers galore.

Among the volunteers were Jane Grey, Zena Keefe, Gertrude McCoy, Irene Fenwick, Leah Baird, Milton Sills, J. Herbert Frank and Tammany Young. Ruth Roland, unable to abandon her Pacific Coast vaudeville engagement, wired her best wishes and a substantial check. But those who sold The Sun reaped their reward and the receipts will all be devoted for smokes for the boys who most need them.

A contract was also closed with the Photoplay exchange of Salt Lake City on the same production for the territory of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico. A. L. Stallings, vice-president and manager of the Photoplay Exchange, reports that in a showing of the production to exhibitors he received bookings, which will keep three prints of that production working until the first week in January. The Alhambra theatre at Ogden, Utah, a house with a seating capacity of 2,500 immediately booked the production for a full week's run, beginning October 18.

"Industry Will Profit by War Tax" Says Producer

Louis J. Selznick, President of Select Pictures Corporation, Says That the Tax Will Pave the Way for Better Pictures and Eliminate the Poorer Quality

COINCIDENT with the receipt of hundreds of letters from exhibitors throughout the country, expressing the opinion that the War Tax Law, when it goes into effect, will be the direct cause of the closing of many theatres, Lewis J. Selznick, president of the Select Pictures Corporation, comes forward with the statement that the war tax is going to be a big help to the motion picture industry in general.

In the interview which follows, Mr. Selznick sets forth the reasons why the tax will act in a beneficial manner:

"When I advocated open booking the film industry generally said I was crazy. In less than a year's time, however, I was proved right, and open booking was the accepted order of the day.

"Again, the film industry is going to say that I am crazy when I state that I am most emphatically in favor of the Government's tax on motion picture film. But I know that I am right and time will prove me so just as it proved me so in the case of open booking.

"Aside from the patriotic purpose which the tax accomplishes by providing revenue for the Government there is a great and everlasting benefit which the tax will bestow upon the picture industry. For it is such a burden upon the picture manufacturer that only those who make and market pictures of high quality and merit can hope to survive. In this way the tax becomes an agent for the cleansing and purifying of the producing end of the industry, by eliminating all the junk and the poor, weak pictures which are being produced at the present time.

"Let me explain a little more fully. The man who has to pay this enormous tax has to get a high price for his product in order to keep his head above water. Now, high prices can be obtained only for good pictures. The vast amount of junk which is being marketed to-day under the name of motion pictures does not bring a price sufficient to pay a profit on production cost after this tax is added. Therefore, the manufacturers of this junk will be compelled to produce fewer pictures and better pictures in order to escape the disastrous effect of the operation of the tax, and this will be one of the best things that ever happened to the motion picture industry. It is a case of kill or cure. We may record this Government tax as the operation performed on motion pictures which will cut away the dead tissue and leave behind only the healthy, vigorous body.

"That is why I say that I am a firm believer in the motion picture tax and only wish that it was heavier. If it drives to the wall those whose methods of operation are so unsound and unbusinesslike that they cannot bear up under its burden—then so much the better for the industry. The keen, live producer will know how to readjust his output so as to actually benefit by the operation of the tax, and the keen, live producer is the only one that the industry has any need of. So put me on record as saying that the tax on motion pictures is a great blessing in disguise."

"Mother" Is Appropriate Title for Tucker Picture

It Seems a Shame for This Young Woman to Make Up as a Woman of Fifty, as She Does in McClure's New Play, "Mother"

ONE of the most expressive and beautiful titles ever chosen for a screen production is that of "Mother," the name of the latest production of the American director, George Loane Tucker, who has been responsible for "The Manx-Man," "I Believe" and other subjects. During the course of an interview with Mr. Tucker, who is at present busily engaged in directing Mae Marsh in a Goldwyn production, the man who is respjonsible for the film version of Eden Philpott's famous novel, "The Mother" had the following to say regarding the title of his latest screen production:

"The little six letter word Mother undoubtedly has more universal meaning and appeal than any other within the ken of human tongue. It has been a worker of miracles and a transformer of men since the world first began. From the fierce mother-love displayed by the animal for its young during the primeval period down through the ages to the solicitude and tenderness of the girl-mother for the infant lying in the modern cradle, the influence of Mother has been felt above all other things. Truly it has been said the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world. Poets have immortalized the mother theme in countless rhyme and ballad, writers of popular songs have extolled 'her' virtues in numerous touching melodies, authors and newspaper men have made this topic the subject of innumerable 'sob' stories and human documents. It remained for the screen, the greatest modern exponent of human emotions to fully probe to its greatest depth the intensity and heart interest contained in the simple word 'Mother.'

"In the picturization of Eden Philpott's famous novel, "The Mother," I have striven, and not without success, to make a picture worthy of the appeal which Mother has for every human being, whether they be saint or sinner."

Raver Makes Statement Concerning the Two Apollos

HARRY RAVER, president of Apollo Pictures, Incorporated, has issued the following statement with respect to certain confusion which seems to have arisen concerning Apollo Pictures, Inc., and the Apollo Film Company.

"I wish to state positively," said Mr. Raver to a representative of this paper, "that there is no connection whatsoever between Apollo Pictures, Incorporated, a concern of which I happen to be president, and the Apollo Film Company, an organization of which I had never heard until I read of it being sued by Chas. Chaplin recently.

"It seems that the Apollo Film Company is alleged to have infringed on certain rights held by Mr. Chaplin regarding his productions. Mr. Chaplin, I further understand, is asking a sum approximating one million dollars damages for the alleged infringement. I know nothing of the merits of either side of the case, but inasmuch as Apollo Pictures, Incorporated, is not being sued by anyone, I deem it my duty to enlighten those who may be laboring under a misapprehension owing to the similarity of corporate titles, and who may confuse the two concerns.

"The Apollo Film Company, I understand, makes comedies. On the contrary, Apollo Pictures, Incorporated, has never made a comedy since it was organized last September. Its productions until recently were released on the Art Dramas Program; to date the pictures turned out by Apollo Pictures, Incorporated, includes "Rosie O'Grady," "The Mystic Hour," "The Great Bradley Mystery," "When You and I Were Young," and similar dramatic subjects.

"I think it but fair to myself and my associates that the widest publicity be given the fact that Apollo Pictures, Incorporated, and the Apollo Film Company are two entirely separate and distinct organizations. I trust I have made my position clear in the matter."

Ivan Productions Going Big in Ohio and West

Unprecedented business is reported by Ohio exhibitors with Ivan Abramson's production, "One Law for Both." George Stockton, manager of the Ohio branches of Ivan Film Distributors, Inc., writes that other Ivan productions have been booked on the strength of the good showing made by "One Law for Both."

"'One Law for Both' opened at the Orpheum theatre, Cleveland, on September 30 for a run of an entire week," said Mr. Stockton, "and played to the biggest houses the Orpheum theatre ever enjoyed. Encouraged by this fact, the management of the Orpheum theatre, viewing the two latest Ivan releases, 'Babbling Tongues,' directed by William Humphrey, and 'Married in Name Only,' directed by Edmund Lawrence, booked each of these for a week's run, beginning November 5."

Among those present was Joseph W. Stern, the music publisher, who published the song, "Mothers of Men," which was written around the picture by Gus Edwards and Will D. Cobb. H. J. Shepard, of Shepard and Van Loan, representative of Mr. Robards, has planned to use the song as part of the advertising campaign for the picture. The song will be displayed and sold by a syndicate of five-and-ten-cent stores and will be released at the same time as the picture.

Harry Berg Gets Story for Barbara Castleton

Harry Berg has procured the story for one of the first releases in which he will star Barbara Castleton. The picture will be called "Ashes of My Heart," and will be taken from the book of that name, by Edith Blinn.

In pursuance with his theory that only pictures containing exceptional stories are worthy of the state rights market, Mr. Berg has looked far and spent a great deal of time in selecting stories for his releases.

Mr. Berg feels that the character of Rhoda, the heroine of the story, is particularly suited to Miss Castleton's type of work, and that, naturally, had a great deal to do with its selection. Miss Castleton will find in it a vehicle for the portraying of all emotions and it affords her ample opportunity to display the technique which has characterized her appearance in past productions.

"News" Is the Best

C. L. Williams and Company, San Francisco, says:

"This is to advise you that we fully appreciate the kindness of The News for past favors in connection with your state rights department, which has made wonderful strides in the right direction. In our opinion The News is the best and most complete of any of the publications devoted to the industry."

Berg Outlines His Plans for Forthcoming Releases

IN a recent interview, Harry Berg, president of Berg Productions, outlined his plans for his forthcoming releases. Although Mr. Berg has been in the industry but a comparatively short time, his keen sense of picture values has brought him to the front. He has been making a special study of the various film markets throughout the country and is planning the work of his new company on the lines which will best suit the present conditions.

"From my observations," said Mr. Berg, "it seems to me that producers are striving more and more toward the suggestive in the pictures. There seems to be a mistaken idea that the public demands this type of work. As a matter of fact, a careful scrutiny of picture returns will speedily convince one of the error of this supposition. The public really has no liking for the suggestive and is coming more and more to demand good, clean, wholesome pictures. A production may easily be sensational without leaning toward the suggestive, and when our producers have learned that lesson there will be a decided improvement in the tone of their releases.

"In respect to my productions, I am trying to carry out this idea, and have selected certain stories for my releases on that basis. The American audience likes a strong, virile story, but it must contain certain moral values. There is enough filth and evil in this world of ours without holding it up to the public in the false attitude of a reformer. Pictures of that type do not act as a preventive but as an incentive. They appear to be a menace rather than a benefit as has been so amply proven in many cases.

"I do not maintain that the industry should give itself over to the production of the milk-and-water style of photoplay, in which virtue is always triumphant and vice receives its just reward. It is a mistaken idea to think that it is the desire of the public to be fed with a spoon. But there is no rhyme or reason in building the story of a picture purely around the sex question and making everything in the picture subordinate to that idea. If the question of sex must be brought in as is often the case, let it be incidental to the plot and handled with such delicacy as not to be paramount.

"An example of what I consider the modern feature ought to be is 'A Man's Law,' one of our first releases. There is a strong, clean story, sensational and thrilling. It teaches a lesson in strength of character and high ideals. It is a story essentially American and for Americans, without any of the morbid, sensual characteristics so prevalent in our modern photoplays, and our later productions will all be on the same high plane.

Edgar O. Brooks Decides to Strike Out for Himself

EDGAR O. BROOKS, who recently resigned the general sales management of Mutual after a connection lasting upward of two years, has decided to operate as a freelance in the future. He has taken offices in the Candler Building, from which to conduct his operations.

The initial proposition to engage Mr. Brooks's activities will be the placing of several English productions in which are featured such stars of the stage and screen as Sir John Hare, Ellen Terry, H. B. Irving, Ben Webster, Cecilia Loftus, Kate Rorke, James Welsh and others. Mr. Brooks has been especially commissioned by the Cosmofotofilm Co., Inc., to negotiate United States and Canadian rights on these and many other star productions emanating from British studios.

As a specialist in the sales promotion field of the motion picture industry Mr. Brooks is well known. During the past five years he has held several important positions with success, among which may be mentioned sales manager and publicity manager for the Gaumont Company; engagements with the Universal, Cosmofotofilm, Allen Feature Film, and the Blinkhorn corporations, handling "specials," state rights, foreign sales, and program service; while lastly his recently severed connection with Mutual involved the entire handling of the twelve Mutual Chaplin specials, five serials and the supervision of sales operations at sixty-eight branch offices, with a sales force exceeding two hundred in number. Thus it will be seen his experience is wide and diversified.

As to the diversity of his operations Mr. Brooks explained that in his opinion there was only one way to learn anything, i. e., by actual experience. Hence when deciding to embrace the motion picture profession he resolved to "learn how" by actually undertaking the work himself in each and every department thereof. Accordingly he has undertaken trips "on the road" selling service, working road shows on percentage, and selling territorial state rights; he has traveled from Montreal to San Francisco and from Florida to Vancouver Island, and knows every inch of the North American continent; his executive assignments with several of the American distributors have proved him capable of directing and getting the best results from a sales force.

Wintroub Buys Rights to Several Pictures

Pathe Sells More Territory on Two Films

With many states now sold on Pathe's seven-reel "Today" with Florence Reed, and the six-reel "The Mad Lover," with Robert Warwick, and with many buyers for unsold territory bidding for the pictures, the state rights department of the Pathe Exchange feels that it is only a question of a short time before all territory will be disposed of. A gratifying interest has been shown in these Harry Rapf productions.

Territory now sold includes New York, California, Nevada, Arizona, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Wyoming, Alaska, Western Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Virginia, Eastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, North Carolina, the District of Columbia, Ohio and West Virginia.

Tom North, of the Pathe state rights department, is now in Ohio in connection with various details incident upon the sale of the pictures in that territory.

Corona Buys Two Big Productions in Week

The Corona Film Company, of 1482 Broadway, last week bought the seven-reel production called "The Warfare of the Flesh" for exclusive exhibition in Porto Rico and Santo Domingo, and "Hate," the feature produced by the Fairmount Film Corporation, for exclusive presentation in Cuba, Porto Rico and Santo Domingo.

The Corona Company also presented Beatriz Michelena, the American star who formerly appeared in productions made by the late California Motion Picture Company, in Buenos Aires, Argentine, in the seven-reel production, "The Woman Who Dared." The picture was well received and it is said the demand is great for similar productions in that country.

Hirsch Buys Partial Rights to "The Cold Deck"

Considerable interest was aroused in the state rights field this week by the announcement that Nathan Hirsch, president of the Pioneer Film Corporation, had purchased from the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., the exclusive rights to "The Cold Deck," a William S. Hart feature, for New York, including Greater New York and northern New Jersey, including Trenton.

"The Cold Deck" is said to be one of the best pictures Hart has given to the screen. It is an adventuresome tale of Western life, full of thrilling action, in which Sylvia Bremmer and Alma Ruebens play the leading feminine roles.

Mr. Hirsch has already booked the feature for a long run at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, and is placing it in other sections.

LIVE NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

Jewel Chooses Well in "The Co-Respondent"

In securing the rights to "The Co-Respondent," the production in which Elaine Hammerstein is making her screen debut, the Jewel Productions, Inc., has again proved its discrimination in the matter of choosing features. The story is hailed as a top-notcher from the standpoint of interest and plausibility, the production is said to be nearly mechanically perfect and the portrayal of the characters is in the hands of seasoned artists.

The first scenes show the country in the most beautiful part of Massachusetts. Ann Gray, the heroine, lives in a cottage with her aunt, a crabbed old maiden, whose sole recreations are psalm-singing, gossiping and making life unbearable for her niece. Ann writes stories and is only happy when living in the romantic atmosphere her imagination creates. It is this atmosphere and her unhappy home life that make her an easy prey for the philandering villain when he appears on the scene. He arranges with a friend to perform a mock marriage ceremony, but as it is about to take place, two detectives appear and Ann learns he is already married and the detectives are looking for divorce evidence. Ann escapes to New York and secures a position on the newspaper to which she has submitted stories.

The development of the love story between Ann and the editor of the paper; the manner in which a possible law suit threatens to ruin the man she loves because he is unable to substantiate a story of a divorce case he has printed, with the name of the co-respondent; how Ann learns that the divorce case is being instituted by the wife of the man who tried to ruin her and she is the co-respondent; her fight with herself to decide between saving her lover from ruin or protect her own good name; and the punishment of the villain, are scenes full of surprises and dramatic climaxes.

Fox Plays Lead for Constance Talmadge

EARLE FOX has been chosen as leading man in "The Honeymoon," the new Constance Talmadge picture which is now being filmed. Mr. Fox, though one of the youngest men on the screen, has come into prominence during the past year. His most notable work has been with Mae Murray, Pauline Frederick and with Norma Talmadge in "Panthea."

Miss Talmadge and her company are now in Buffalo, where work on "The Honeymoon" is being rapidly pushed. It is a comedy drama by Lloyd Sheldon.

"The Honeymoon" is the second Select picture which Constance Talmadge has made, her first production under the Select management being a screen version of Cosmo Hamilton's novel, "Scandal," scheduled for early release.

Frank Losee Stays with Famous Players-Lasky

Renews Contract for Two Years to Appear in Some of Most Important Forthcoming Productions—Now in Sub-Deb Stories

Frank Losee Has Signed a New Two-Year Contract with Famous Players-Lasky, to Appear in Paramount and Artcraft Pictures

FRANK LOSEE, one of the most versatile character actors in pictures, and who has appeared in many Paramount and Artcraft productions, has renewed his contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for two years, and will appear in some of the notable forthcoming productions. He is at present enacting the role of Bab's father in the "Sub-Deb" stories, starring Marguerite Clark, which are being released by Paramount.

Mr. Losee fits into nearly every production undertaken. Among the photoplays from Paramount in which he has been seen are: With Miss Clark in "Miss George Washington," "The Valentine Girl" and the "Bab" pictures already referred to. He has appeared with Pauline Frederick in "Sapho," "The Eternal City," "The Moment Before," "Ashes of Embers," and will be seen in "Mrs. Dane's Defense" to be released in the near future.

In "The Dummy," with Jack Pickford, and in "Great Expectations," with Mr. Pickford and Louise Huff, he was prominently cast. He appeared also in Artcraft's "Seven Keys to Baldpate" with George M. Cohan, and "Less than the Dust" with Mary Pickford.

In renewing his contract with the organizations, Mr. Losee expressed his entire satisfaction with his affiliations in the past and of the prospective work he will be called upon to do.

"I have been particularly happy in my connection with Famous Players-Lasky," he declared. "Not only does this arise from the splendid character of those with whom I am associated, the thoroughly satisfactory treatment accorded me by every one concerned, but also because the productions are of such high order that I feel I am upholding the best traditions of the drama, spoken or silent, in my work therein.

"I anticipate an opportunity to portray and create characters in forthcoming productions that will be artistically a credit to myself, my profession and the organization. At least I shall strive to that end and to retain the regard of my screen friends will of course be my aim in the future as in the past."

Frank Losee was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., but in early years he went to the unfolding West. Chicago, however, held him and he became a sort of protege of R. M. Hooley, the well-remembered stage director. He began his screen career with the Famous Players Company, and has remained in this organization permanently since, putting the stage behind him in favor of the silent drama.

To have achieved and held the friendship of virtually all with whom he has come in contact, is a record worth having and it belongs to Mr. Losee.

Stuart Paton Delays Show by Hitting Lumber

While taking Priscilla Dean, Harry Carter, Emory Johnson and Eddie Polo, the leading players of "The Gray Ghost" company, from Los Angeles to Santa Anna, Cal., a few nights ago, Stuart Paton, director of the Universal serial, ran his machine into a pile of lumber and came to a halt after smashing the headlights, one of the front wheels and a fender. The party changed to another car and proceeded on their way to Santa Ana, where the players were slated to make a personal appearance at a theatre. They were an hour late.

Accident Marks Production of Jewel Feature

During the making of a fire scene at Universal City, a few nights ago for the Jewel feature, "The Boss of Powderville," which is being completed by Ida May Park, one of the director's assistants, who was holding a fire torch on the roof of a building, missed his footing and fell among a crowd of dancers in the large dance hall which has been the scene of many exciting incidents in the making of the picture.

The assistant's fall was broken by a massive gas fixture, preventing serious injury. He escaped with only a few bruises. The torch, however, scattered its oil on several women dancers and their costumes took fire.

Marie Dressler Sets Time to Quit the Screen

Thinks Three More Years Should Be Enough, After Which She Will Gracefully Drop Out of Sight—Defends Her Art

HARRIETTE UNDERHILL took the time and occasion to interview Marie Dressler, the Goldwyn comedienne, last week, and, among other things, discovered that the well known star has set a time limit on her services as fun maker for the general public. "Three years more and I will retire," said Miss Dressler.

In the course of Miss Underhill's interview Miss Dressler said: "I tell you, writing your own scenarios and directing your own pictures and packing trunks and seeing soldiers off for France and comforting their mothers, wives and fiances, and arranging a trip to Los Angeles and shopping and trying to be a lady all at once is—war!"

"This I have learned from observation: You can't make people want to laugh. The moment they suspect you are trying to make them laugh their natural obstinacy will make them shut up like clams. They have got to laugh because they can't help it—caught unawares, as it were. Making people laugh is the greatest art in the world.

"My comedy has been called slapstick, but I do not really consider it that. Slapstick comedy, to my way of thinking, means merely throwing pies or kicking people over and relying on that for your laughs.

"Now, I am not above throwing pies, but it must come in the story and be merely an episode, not the piece de resistance of the picture. I don't object in the least to being kicked down stairs or falling off a fence providing there is a perfectly legitimate excuse for it. In short, my slapstick must be the cause, not the effect.

"I believe, too, in having perfectly good whole-hearted stories to work from, the same as in any photodrama.

"You may fool part of the people all the time; you may even fool all of the people all the time, but you can't fool the camera. The camera is fiendish in its intuition. If you are not all right and square and on the level the camera will find it out and display your defection on the screen.

"I have seen that camera dig into people's souls and chuckle as it unearthed their frailties. It takes dislikes, too, because certain people never photograph well and the camera takes them as they are, not as other people see them.

"Three years more I shall work, and then I shall be seen no more. I never shall die on a raised platform. That to me is horrible. Thank heaven, I have sense enough to retire while I may do so gracefully! I say let men and women of the stage know when they are through and leave the public before the public leaves them.

"Then, if they have not saved enough to live on, let them seek some other line of endeavor and not try to capitalize their withered laurels. I have been twenty-seven years on the stage, and I think that thirty years is long enough for anyone."

Robert Hilliard's Nephew in "Blue Jeans"

Robert Walker, nephew of Robert Hilliard, plays the part of Perry Bascom in "Blue Jeans," a forthcoming Metro wonderplay, starring Viola Dana, under the direction of John Collins, a role which his uncle originated in the stage production.

The play was produced at the old Fourteenth street theatre more than twenty-five years ago, with Robert Hilliard and Jennie Yeamans in the leading roles of Perry Bascom and June. When Walker was cast for his role in the screen production, he telegraphed to his uncle for data concerning the costumes and settings. Many valuable suggestions were received from Mr. Hilliard, and his nephew's costume was copied from that used in the original stage production.

Robert Walker has played opposite winsome Viola Dana in a large number of Metro wonderplays, including "The Girl Without a Soul," "God's Law, and Man's," "The Gates of Eden," and "Lady Barnacle."

Lockwood Begins New Metro Production

Fred J. Balshofer has begun the production of his next Metro-Yorke feature starring Harold Lockwood at the Metro studios at New York, the new home of the Yorke forces. Until this time all the Harold Lockwood pictures were produced in California.

The title of the subject now being made is "Love Me for Myself Alone." It is an adaptation of Francis Perry Elliott's novel of the same name. This is the second of Mr. Elliott's novels Mr. Balshofer has selected for picturization, the first being "The Haunted Pajamas."

In Mr. Lockwood's support will appear Pauline Curley, his new leading woman; Lester Cuneo, William Clifford, Betty Marvin, Dora Mills Adams and Kathryn Hutchinson.

Frank Howard Clark Is Now Director

Frank Howard Clark, formerly chief of L-Ko's scenario staff, has changed his occupation to directing comedies under J. G. Blystone, director general of L-Ko forces. He will have charge of Phil Dunham's company with Lucille Hutton the leading comedienne. Clarence Barr, one of the pioneer comedy directors, has also been added to Mr. Blystone's staff. James Davis is a third addition to the L-Ko directing forces, which further employ Archie Mayo, Vin Moore and Dick Smith, as well as Robert Kerr, who lately joined out from the Keystone.

George Anderson Has Role in "Co-Respondent"

George Anderson, actor-husband of Fritzie Scheff, who appears in Arthur Hammerstein's new play, "Furs and Frills," is prominently cast in the Jewel Productions feature, "The Co-Respondent," in which Elaine Hammerstein is starred by Advanced Motion Pictures, makers of the Ralph Ince feature. It is after the stage success of the same name by Alice Leal Pollock and Rita Weiman, and was seen on Broadway two years ago when Irene Fenwick had the stellar role.

Clifford Bruce Meets with Accident in Auto

Clifford Bruce, who plays the role of Ben Boone in "Blue Jeans," a coming Metro wonderplay starring Viola Dana, under the direction of John H. Collins, was seriously injured the other day when his automobile fell backward down an elevator shaft.

On his way from the Metro Studio in New York City to his home at Bayside, Long Island, Bruce stopped at a garage for some repairs to his car. The shop was on the second floor, so he backed his car toward the elevator. When the car was half way on the elevator it started to lower to the basement, and before it could be checked the car fell backward down the shaft and Bruce was thrown out of the machine. He was picked up unconscious. An ambulance was summoned and he was taken to the Polyclinic Hospital. The extent of his injuries follows: Nose badly smashed, right eye closed completely, left eye so severely lacerated that several stitches were necessary, and a wrenched back. After his injuries were cared for, Bruce was removed by his brother to his home in Bayside.

The Metro player will be confined to his bed for at least eight or ten days, after which he hopes to continue his acting in the screen production of "Blue Jeans." He was scheduled to play in a big barbecue scene the day following the accident, and the entire studio floor was set for the action. One hundred and seventy-five extra players had reported for work and were making-up when Director Collins received word of Bruce's accident. The completion of "Blue Jeans" will be held up until his recovery.

Stronge Aids in "Who Leads National Army?"

Nat Stronge, who recently severed his connection with Vitagraph V-L-S-E, after having inaugurated a business basis publicity department in that organization, has been drafted by the Military Training Camps Association, which is working in conjunction with the War Department, in presenting a one-reel motion picture entitled "Who Leads the National Army?" In seeking a man thoroughly acquainted with the selling, distributing and promotion end of the motion picture business the name of Mr. Stronge was given to the authorities as the most likely to whom a patriotic appeal would cause him to cease all other activities until he had placed the picture on the way to financial success. The appeal to Mr. Stronge was not in vain.

Vignola Ready for New Paramount Feature

Robert G. Vignola, director of Paramount pictures, who went away for a rest after completing "The Hungry Heart" with Pauline Frederick in the star part, is back on the job. He will start shortly on a new picture with Miss Frederick as star. Vignola declares that of all his joys while vacating climbing the Adirondacks was the most joyful. From a casual inspection it would seem that the director has lost several pounds by his exertions.

Pictures, Though Costly, Cheapest Amusement

Paramount President Thinks They Form Table d'Hote of Entertainment, with New Delicacies Added Daily to the Screen Fare

DRAWING an interesting parallel between the values to the people on both sides the motion picture screen, Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, who with General Manager B. P. Schulberg left Los Angeles last week on the long tour of the country in the interests of the organization, discussed the cost of production vs. the cost to the public of photoplay entertainment.

"Motion pictures today," said Mr. Abrams, "are at once the most expensive and the cheapest form of amusement before the public; most expensive so far as cost of production, distribution and presentation are concerned, cheapest as a means of entertainment to the public.

"Throughout the entire history of amusement, from the days of the Elizabethan drama to the modern Broadway spectacle, the more expensive the production, the more the public has been compelled to pay to witness it. The motion picture is the only form of amusement ever devised which increases in cost of production a thousand times the increase in cost to the public.

"This interesting result, is of course explained by the fact that the pictures may be termed 'the table d'hote of amusement.' Because millions of people have chosen this form of entertainment in preference to any other it is possible to give them a la carte film menus at table d'hote prices.

"Paramount and Artcraft are continually and successfully striving to add courses and delicacies to the screen fare."

Messrs. Abrams and Schulberg expect to visit every city with population of more than fifty thousand, approximately, and will personally talk things over with the exhibitors. From this tour the officials feel that they will obtain many ideas of value at first hand and also determine just how the million-dollar advertising drive for Paramount and Artcraft pictures may best be employed to benefit the exhibitors. Mr. Abrams explained as an example, that every paper in Los Angeles would carry a share of this advertising, so prepared as to indelibly fix in the minds of the public the identity of Artcraft and Paramount pictures.

President Abrams remarked that while he had been connected with the motion picture industry almost from the inception, he had never really seen a studio in action or a camera cranked until he visited the Lasky studio, and others where Paramount and Artcraft pictures are being made on the Pacific Coast. Both he and Mr. Schulberg were escorted through the studios by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and by Cecil B. Demille, director-general.

They also visited the Thomas H. Ince Studios where pictures are being made for Paramount and Artcraft, and the Mack Sennett plant where the new Paramount-Mack Sennet comedies are being filmed.

Triangle Studios Hum with Autumn Activities

Variety of Subjects Keeps Large Directorial Staff Busy at Culver City—Desmond Feature Is Now Nearing Completion

Being Tied to the Stake and Feeling How the Old New England Witches Felt Is Part of Margery Wilson's Task, as Written into the Script of Triangle's "Wild Sumac"

WITH seven directors working on new pictures, four waiting for or preparing stories, over one hundred performers cast and others being added to the playing forces as the need arises, the first and second weeks in October threatened to break all production records at the Triangle Film Corporation's Culver City studio, where H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager, is directing the general policy of production and expansion.

Four pictures, "The Firefly of Tough Luck," "The Stainless Barrier," "Doing Her Bit," and "Fighting Back," were shipped and five pictures are completed and ready for final editing. These are "The Fuel of Life," featuring Belle Bennett; "Easy Money," with Charles Gunn and Laura Sears; "Medicine Man," with Roy Stewart; "Regenerates," featuring Alma Ruebens and Walt Whitman, and "Indiscreet Corinne," a new Olive Thomas picture.

Director Thomas N. Heffron will soon complete his latest picture, "Gentility," the vehicle in which William Desmond will next be starred.

Thus far Director William Gittens has experienced many unexpected difficulties with the tide and storms in his sea picture, whose working title is "The Everlasting Mercy," but has succeeded in obtaining some good water stuff in the harbor district of San Diego. The Triangle three-masted barkentine "Fremont" is being used, and last week a realistic thrill was given the whole company when the "Fremant" caught fire during a scene where real flames were not intended.

Director Raymond Wells is making good progress on his latest story, "Fanatics," in which J. Barney Sherry, character actor, is being featured. Olga Grey, who recently joined the Triangle playing force, is also cast in this picture, playing a modern adventuress. The setting used as the adventuress's apartment is said to be one of the richest ever erected on a Triangle stage.

"Up or Down?" Director Lynn F. Reynold's latest masterpiece, featuring George Hernandez, will offer something new in the way of Western drama. Reynolds and Hernandez have returned from Santa Barbara, where many shots of rare scenic beauty were obtained. While in the North, the director took advantage of the vast cattle range near Santa Barbara to get some unusual Western stuff. The story of "Up or Down?" concerns an ex-convict in the process of evolution, assisted by the kindness of an author without an idea. How "Dollar Mike" finally furnishes the "big idea" and aids the author to win the woman of his choice gives a surprising turn to the plot, which is said to have an especial appeal for students of psychology.

Using thirty stock players and more than a hundred people in the open scene, Director G. P. Hamilton, newest addition to the Triangle directing force, has begun work on "The Maternal Spark." Among those cast are Irene Hunt, Josie Sedgwick and Rowland Lee. It is a story of how too much vanity almost ruined a bright young country lawyer who was taken up by an influential financier, and how the maternal spark in the breast of a woman who was not all bad, saved his matrimonial barque from shipwreck.

Director Cliff Smith and Roy Stewart, Triangle Western star, together with forty punchers, have returned from the O'Neil ranch near Oceanside, California. Sixty-three thousand head of stock bear the O'Neil brand, and these, together with the O'Neil ranch cowboys, were voluntary actors in the opening scenes of Stewart's new picture, "The Learnin' of Jim Benton."

Belle Benton, Triangle star, who last appeared as a vampire in Director Walter Edwards' new picture, "The Fuel of Life," has been cast for the leading role in Director Jack Conway's new picture, "Because of the Woman." Conway has already begun work on this feature.

The directors who are waiting for or preparing stories include Walter Edwards, Ferris Hartman, Jack Dillon and E. Mason Hopper.

Anderson and Whitman Begin New Feature

Mary Anderson and Alfred Whitman having finished "John Burt," the Greater Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, based on the novel by Frederick Upham Adams, are starting work on one by George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester. The title of the story is "The Eighth Great Grand Parent."

This is the third appearance of the Chesters on the Vitagraph program within the year, two other dramas written by them being "The Enemy" and "The Message of the Mouse."

"The Eighth Great Grand Parent" has for one of its high lights a real circus performance, introduced to provide the heroine with a chance to satisfy a lifelong ambition to play the role of a circus rider and gallop madly around the sawdust ring, mounted on a white charger and garbed in the crinoline costume of the bareback queen. This, it is also said, has been the ambition of Mary Anderson, who abandoned Grecian dancing to enter motion pictures and, since her work in the Western Vitagraph studio.

"Have you a little circus in your town?" has become the question that W. S. Smith, manager of the Vitagraph Hollywood studio, is sending out to the cities, towns and villages around Los Angeles. He wants to get the real circus action and atmosphere for Director William Wolbert to use in making his scene.

Jewel's "The Co-Respondent" Backed by Publicity Drive

Plans Are Perfected for Extraordinary Newspaper Exploitation of Feature Starring Elaine Hammerstein, and Important Cities in United States Will Be Covered Thoroughly—Record May Be Established

Elaine Hammerstein Is the Beautiful Star in "The Co-Respondent," to Be Presented by Jewel Productions, Inc.

ONE of the most important advertising deals of the autumn, roughly in keeping with the steady upward march of the motion picture industry, was consummated last week when final arrangements were made to exploit Jewel's production of "The Co-Respondent," starring Elaine Hammerstein, in a series of half-page and quarter-page advertisements to appear in a chain of seventy-five of the principal newspapers of the United States, from New York to San Francisco.

Imposing Newspaper List

The newspapers in which the picture will be widely advertised are said to have a combined circulation of 30,000,000 readers, and include the New York American, New York Journal, Los Angeles Examiner, San Francisco Examiner, Atlanta Georgian, Boston American, Chicago American, Chicago Examiner, Providence Bulletin, Buffalo Courier and Inquirer, Buffalo News, Rochester Democrat-Chronicle, Rochester Union-Advertiser, Syracuse Herald, Syracuse Journal, Philadelphia North American, Philadelphia Bulletin, Baltimore American, Baltimore News, Washington Times, Pittsburgh Post and Sun, Pittsburgh Press, Cleveland News and Leader, Cleveland Press, Cincinnati Post, Cincinnati Times-Star, Toledo Blade, Toledo News-Bee, Columbus Dispatch, Dayton News, Louisville Herald, Detroit News, Detroit Journal, Indianapolis Star, Indianapolis News, Milwaukee Journal, Minneapolis News, Minneapolis Tribune, St. Paul News, Des Moines Register-Tribune, Newark News, Omaha Bee, Omaha News, Kansas City Post, Kansas Star, St. Louis Globe-Democrat, St. Louis Post-Dispatch Memphis Commercial-Appeal, Dallas Times-Herald, Houston Chronicle, Fort Worth Star-Telegram, Oklahoma City Oklahoman, New Orleans Item, New Orleans Times-Picayune, Denver News and Times, Denver Post, Salt Lake Tribune, Butte Post, Portland Oregonian, Portland Journal, Seattle Times, Toronto Star-Telegram, Montreal Star, Birmingham News and Spokane Spokesman-Review.

Drama Has Wide Appeal

"The Co-Respondent," which is the first Jewel production to be featured in an advertising campaign of this magnitude, tells a thrilling story of American life. It has been selected for extraordinary publicity work because it is believed to have universal appeal, and should attract patronage from all classes of theatregoers in all sections of the country. As the heroine, Elaine Hammerstein is said to do the best work of her career. She is supported by Wilfred Lucas, who provides a forceful and finished characterization of a metropolitan newspaper editor.

Picturized from the play of the same name by Alice Leal Pollock and Rita Weiman, "The Co-Respondent" has been produced by Lee Shubert, Arthur Hammerstein and Ralph W. Ince. In settings, lighting, direction, photography and titling an unusual degre of excellence was attempted. Ralph W. Ince personally directed the production, putting into it the best fruits of the thought and experience that has given him an enviable position among the pioneer screen directors of America. Mr. Ince first won distinction as the producer of the earliest multiple-reel screen dramas released by Vitagraph, and has taken an important part in the development of the motion picture art from its humble single-reel beginnings to its present high status of efficiency.

Campaign Caps Jewel's Climax

This big publicity campaign is but the latest step in a series of progressive moves that has put Jewel Productions, Inc., on the map as one of the most important distributing agencies in filmdom within less than two months. The organization opened business offices at 405 Mecca Building on August 20. By the latter part of September, selling rights to six super-productions of marked box-office possibilities had been secured, including "Come Through!" "Pay Me!" "Sirens of the Sea," "The Man Without a Country," "The Co-Respondent" and Lois Weber's story of city life, "The Price of a Good Time."

The first two of these dramas have already been booked by the Keith and Proctor theatre circuits, after runs at the Broadway Theatre, while "Sirens of the Sea" has just been disposed of to the Moss and Keeney houses in the East, after showing to big business in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles.

"The Man Without a Country" has been selected by the National Defense Society for exhibition in over 200 theatres throughout the country in connection with the campaign for the quickening of the nation's patriotic spirit. It is safe to say, however, that "The Co-Respondent" will make some distinctive records of its own unless all present signs most signally fail.

Bluebirds Arrive Next Week at Century Mark

Feature That Will Mark the Occasion Is Called "The Savage," and Has Ruth Clifford as the Star—Shown at Broadway Theatre

BLUEBIRD No. 100, entitled "The Savage," with Ruth Clifford the star, will be exhibited on pre-release at the Broadway theatre, New York, week starting Sunday night, Oct. 21, beginning then the Bluebird season at that playhouse. There will be further announcements of the proper celebration of Bluebird's first centennial, plans for which are now being formulated by Managing Director Carl Laemmle.

The program was inaugurated Jan. 24, 1916, with the release of "Jeanne Dore," with Mme. Sarah Bernhardt the star. This feature, like several other Bluebird subjects, was purchased on the open market, in pursuance of the policy originally announced by Bluebird and still in vogue. As for the great majority of releases, they were produced at Universal City, excepting the plays in which Violet Mersereau has starred; they were turned out at Bluebird's Leonia (N. J.) Studio, where Miss Mersereau still operates.

Established on the dogma, advanced by Shakespeare, that "The play's the thing," the management progressed consistently with a policy that made the play the principal factor in Bluebird appeal, the leading players being "featured" rather than "starred," as customary with program organizations. But in the natural course of events the "stars," by the merits of their performance and personality, became conspicuously associated with the program announcements. Exhibitors very naturally made the most of their opportunity to profit by the growing popularity of these individually "featured" players and "starred" them in their own advertising.

Thus have stars been created along with the advancing good repute of the Bluebird product as measured from the viewpoint of plays, production and photography; until Dorothy Phillips, Violet Mersereau, Ruth Clifford and Franklyn Farnum have become so favorably associated in the public mind with Bluebird products that a composite of attractiveness and popularity has been greatly created with these players as the moving force in box office effectiveness.

Bluebird's "star-cycle," completed by the engagement of Mae Murray and Carmel Myers, to augment the force of principals in screen artistry, has thus been established—six stars to appear in stated succession, each one arriving every sixth week, in plays that shall be selected to best suit the individual talents of each star. In this way, by gradual process of the fittest surviving, Bluebird ends its first hundred screen accomplishments with a policy that still maintains its original purpose, plus the added benefits of individual personalities that makes both the player and the play "the thing."

Having accomplished the very considerable success these principals have thus far attained, the announcement comes from Bluebird's publicity department that plans for the future embody no newer or larger purpose than to go on with increasing effort to make the next hundred Bluebirds consistently better with every release.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Grace Cunard Has Sympathetic Role

In "Society's Driftwood" Grace Cunard has been provided with what is said to be her most telling Butterfly vehicle. The story, by Harvey Gates, is dramatic in theme. It relates the life struggles of a sister and brother, whose whole future is darkened by the shadow of a crime of which neither is guilty. Lena Rogers and her brother Paul, a physically frail lad, are operating an amusement tent in connection with county fairs during the summer. Some of its visitors to the grounds are the victims of pickpockets, and a man whose advances to Lena has repulsed, hides one of the stolen purses among her effects. In order to save his sister from the humiliation of arrest, Paul takes the blame of the theft upon himself. The judge before whom the case is tried heartlessly sentences the boy to the penitentiary, despite the pleas of Lena, who knows that the confinement will probably cause her brother's death. Lena resolves to bring the cruel magistrate to a keener sense of responsibility to the unfortunates whom he sends away so nonchantly to death and dishonor. The manner in which she achieves this aim forms the vivid moments in the plot.

Tourneur Completes Elsie Ferguson Film

The last scenes of Elsie Ferguson's second Artcraft picture, "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," were taken at the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Fort Lee last week, under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, who also staged Miss Ferguson's initial photoplay "Barbary Sheep." The new production discloses the star in a role directly in contrast to her previous film characterization.

In selecting the supporting cast, Director Tourneur has assembled a collection of film artists including Elliott Dexter, Fania Marinoff, Frank Goldsmith, Callie Dalatorre, Mae Bates, Edith McAlpin, Isabel Vernon, Blanche Craig, James Cogan and Marie Burk. The film is now being cut and assembled under the personal supervision of Director Tourneur and will be released in the near future.

Irving Cummings Gets Good Role in "Man's Law"

In "A Man's Law," one of the new Berg Productions, released by Harry Berg, Irving Cummings is said to have the chance for some of the best work of his career. The character of Jules La Clerc, the hero, affords Mr. Cummings an opportunity to display that talent which has won him his place in the estimation of the public. The part is that of a man who has lived close to nature, without the veneer of civilization, but who possesses a gentleness of heart and a sterling courage and sense of honor, which might well be adopted by some of his more cultured brethren.

The picture has been described as a photoplay of human events. The cast is a well-balanced one, and the work of all the players is said to be of the highest order. Supporting Mr. Cummings are: Ruth Sinclair, Baby Applegate, Arthur Morrison, and Roy Applegate.

Vitagraph President Replies to Attack on the Industry

Calls Attention to Fact That Producers Are Striving Toward an Ideal in Their Work, and Clearly Vindicates the Business—Best Literature Being Used for Screen Productions

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Greater Vitagraph, last week addressed a letter to the editor of a New York daily in reply to one that had appeared in the columns of the newspaper containing an attack on the motion picture industry.

The critic who drew Mr. Smith's fire in defense of the industry went to great lengths in his diatribe against motion pictures, attacking producers, directors and the programs offered to the public by exhibitors. His letter was in the form of an indictment against the entire industry, according to Mr. Smith, who recognized the unfairness of the stand and wrote a general defense of the men who are putting millions of dollars into the making and exhibiting of pictures.

Producers Strive Toward Ideal

He called attention to the fact, already known to the world, that producing companies are continually striving towards an ideal in their work—the production of the very best pictures attainable; told of the effort to get the world's best literature for screen adaptation and declared it was the policy of all responsible companies to provide high-class, clean and worthy entertainment for the public. His letter, which is certain to be of interest and value to everyone in the industry, reads as follows:

"My attention was called to a letter which appeared signed by Andrew J. Kane and bearing the caption 'Footlessness of Movies!' In justice to the motion picture industry I think it is incumbent on us to set Mr. Kane right on some things, and I address you with this idea in mind.

"In the first place, Mr. Kane makes the assertion that the intelligence of the spectator is insulted because, when he goes into a theatre, 'he gets the usual privilege of gazing upon five hundred people in various stages of training, a hundred thousand dollars worth "setting" and the usual thirty cents worth of plot!' I do not think this exactly fair, because it is a matter for better stories, better productions. In fact, it is realized that the whole future of the motion picture rests on the stories and their treatment. I know it is true of Vitagraph, and I think it is true of all other responsible companies, that extraordinary efforts are being made continually to obtain the best product of the best writers. They are virtually permitted to make their own prices, so anxious are we to get real plots—real literature.

Sarcasm Is Not Lacking

"In this connection, Mr. Kane makes another statement as follows: 'One bright day a tremendous revelation comes! You marvel that you never noticed it before. You realize suddenly that nine-tenths of the really interesting films you have seen were picturizations of successful plays or books. You resolve to confine your future attention to things that already have a reputation in stage or book form. You appreciate with a rush of sympathy that directors are right, after all—the authors are at fault, and the director must make good films from poor scenarios. He would write a few himself, but he is too good a business man to waste his life on non-revenue occupations!'

"I do not know what he means by non-revenue occupations, because as I mentioned before, we pay liberally for good material and encourage its production. As a matter of fact, we pay for ideas and let our trained staffs of scenario writers work them out.

"As to turning to good books and plays for screen subjects, what is more natural? Good pictures are like good books and good books live forever. In this case of my company, it has been fixed policy to get the best authors to contribute their works for our program and the proof of this is found in the fact that in a period of seven weeks we have on our list works by Robert W. Chambers, Alfred Henry Lewis, Earl Derr Biggers, Frederick Upham Adams, E. Phillips Oppenheim, O. Henry and Cyrus Townsend Brady, all world famous writers. Another frequent contributor to our program is James Oliver Curwood.

Good Productions from Plays

"Speaking of adapting plays from the legitimate stage, so-called to the screen, I have only to mention 'Within the Law,' Bayard Veiller's tremendous success. This play made for its producers approximately three million dollars. It ran virtually two years on Broadway and was acted in practically every civilized country of the world. We obtained the screen rights to the play and that the public appreciates real merit is proved by the fact that this picture has been booked in thousands of cities, towns and hamlets, even in places of 200 and 300 population.

"In conclusion I should like to call to the attention of Mr. Kane and others who are moved to criticise the motion picture industry, that we feel that we have an obligation to the public to perform and that is why we spend thousands of dollars more on a picture than do the producers of stage plays. We pay authors more, we pay players more. And this is done not through any love of extravagance, but simply to obtain the best there is for the motion picture public. (Signed) Albert E. Smith, President, Vitagraph Company of America."

Lina Cavalieri Finishes Scenes in Feature

Lina Cavalieri, prima donna, now a star of Paramount productions, has finished the portion of "The Eternal Temptress," her first Paramount film in which she appears, and has departed for the studio at Fort Lee. Director Emile Chautard is now completing the other scenes which make up the photodrama, principally street scenes in Venice and the poorer quarters of Rome.

After passing the Church of San Marco, which has been reproduced in the studio lot, a turn of the corner presents a disreputable district, with washing of every kind and color flapping in the breeze, children playing in sand heaps, peddlers, washermen, cobblers, vegetable dealers and dozens of garrulous denizens at every hand, and the unsightly heaps of refuse are also abundantly reproduced.

Pauline Frederick in "The Hungry Heart"

"The Hungry Heart," which was one of David Graham Phillips' most popular stories, and which will be Pauline Frederick's next Paramount vehicle, is an example of his very best work, because it takes up and discusses frankly a problem that is met with frequently in the lives of those about us. This problem in brief is: "Can a man be true to his science and at the same time give to his wife the unadulterated affection she necessarily craves?"

Pauline Frederick in the role of Courtney is said to have outdone herself in portraying the depths of emotional moments with which the story abounds. Howard Hall is the husband and Eldean Stewart plays the child of the couple. Helen Lindreth has a character bit upon which much of the plot hinges.

"The Hungry Heart" is scheduled for release November 5th by Paramount. Meantime, Miss Frederick has completed "Mrs. Dane's Defense" which will be the next release. It is a picturization of Sir Henry Arthur Jones' drama.

Empire All-Star Picturizes "Her Sister"

Having finished filming "The Unforeseen," the five-reel feature to be released October 22, and which will introduce Olive Tell as a motion picture star, the Empire All-Star Corporation is now engaged in making a motion picture from the play of "Her Sister," which Ethel Barrymore starred in under Charles Frohman's management.

Miss Tell showed in "The Unforeseen" that her powers of dramatic expression lose nothing through being portrayed before the camera, and it was decided to hasten the release of her first picture by a whole month.

In "Her Sister" Miss Tell has a difficult dual role.

Alice Davenport and Martha Trick in Keystones

Among the additions to the playing staff at the Triangle-Keystone Studios in Los Angeles this week are Alice Davenport and Martha Trick. Miss Trick will probably do her first picture with Director Reggie Morris. Alice Davenport, who has been identified with Keystone comedies since their inception, is working in a new Triangle-Keystone comedy.

Fox Finishes Studio Scenes in Kellermann Film

Having completed the Bar Harbor portion of the new sub-sea picture, "Queen of the Sea," which Annette Kellermann is making for William Fox, the company is now finishing up the studio scenes preparatory to making the deep sea portions of the film.

In order to find water of the proper temperature in which Miss Kellermann and her mermaids and sirens of the sea can work, it will be necessary for those scenes to be done either in Florida or in California.

Director John G. Adolfi is undecided whether to go to California or Florida. Should he decide upon California "Queen of the Sea" will have been made on both the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts, the introductory part of the picture having been made at Bar Harbor on the Atlantic. Even though he goes to Florida the range of the picture will have been from Maine to the southernmost bit of continental United States.

In the making of the under sea portions of the picture Mr. Adolfi will have the assistance of the officials of the United States Fish Commission, which is interested in the success of the apparatus which has been designed for the photographing of scenes under water.

Spacious Sets Are Feature of Essanay Subject

Some elaborate and expensive sets are being employed by Essanay in the forthcoming drama, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," in which Mary MacLane, the author, appears in the leading role.

One set represents an apartment in a high class hotel. It contains eight rooms, arranged so that glimpses of all other seven rooms are had when the camera is trained on the spacious library. Where the average set can be erected in a few hours, Director Arthur Berthelet consumed several weeks in completing the apartment. Thousands of dollars' worth of furnishings and pictures are used in this set.

Another interesting scene is staged in the sunken gardens of a Summer resort hotel. It required several florists to supply the palms, ferns and flowers for this scene, which was built on Essanay's big outdoor stage.

Avery Turns Out One Comedy a Week

Director Charles Avery has completed his twelfth Triangle Komedy since the Triangle-Keystone forces started producing at the former Triangle-Fine Arts plant. Avery's latest comedy has for its cast: Harry Depp, Claire Anderson, Blanche Phillips, Martha Trick, Jack Henderson and James Donnelly.

In producing twelve one-reel comedies in twelve weeks, Director Avery has established a record without trying to do so. Efficiency in the erecting of sets and an abundance of good stories have been in Avery's favor, and he says that he has previously spent a month or more on stories that have not compared to some he has turned out recently in one week.

Doris Kenyon Proves to Be Real Heroine

Doris Kenyon, star of the new Pathe serial, "The Hidden Hand," has proved herself to be a heroine in real life as well as on the screen. How she and a man saved two men's lives forms a scene in the new serial which was not filmed strictly according to the script, it is told. As nearly every scene requires a hero, Charles Manning, assistant to Director James Vincent, found himself cast and proved himself equal to the occasion. The Hudson River off Ft. Washington Park was the location. The other actors in the scene were Sheldon Lewis and N. J. Thompson, who have parts in "The Hidden Hand."

Miss Kenyon in a previous episode was trapped in the underground den of "The Hidden Hand." She escapes through an air-lock bolting the steel door. A flood of water pours down the shaft, threatening to drown her. With the water almost up to her mouth, Miss Kenyon turns the lever releasing the air pressure which carries both her and the water to the surface. Sheldon Lewis and Thompson in a boat were waiting on the surface of the Hudson River as Miss Kenyon shot thirty feet up from the bottom. The force of the stream of water which carried her up was so great that Mr. Lewis' rowboat was overturned, and he and Thompson were catapulted into the river. Neither of the two men could swim. Manning, realizing their peril, jumped overboard in his clothes and swam to the scene, where Miss Kenyon, an expert swimmer, was struggling to keep the two afloat.

Louis Taylor, the cameraman, continued to "grind" undisturbed by what was taking place, it is said.

Essanay-Ade Fables Reach Advanced Stage

From General Film Company this week comes the announcement that the work of producing the new series of Essanay-George Ade Fables in slang, for release through General, has reached a well advanced stage. In addition to the six subjects already announced, Essanay has completed three new subjects for release.

In the meantime these comedies, issued in two reels, are being booked with a liberality that is surprising. Many large theatres have made arrangements to feature each of the twelve pictures for runs of from two to six days, and are finding these comedies an admirable asset in enlisting the support of the fans.

The new subjects announced in the second half of the series are: "The Fable of All That Triangle Stuff as Sized Up by the Meal Ticket," "The Fable of the Film-Fed Family" and "The Fable of the Uplifter and His Dandy Little Opus."

Atlas Company in Canada Quits Business

The doors of the Atlas Films of Canada, Ltd., in the Imperial Bank Building, Toronto, have been closed, and the business of the company is being wound up. This will leave Canada without a company actively engaged in the production of dramatic or comedy films.

Fish Stories Still in Season

It has just cropped out that after the taking of the Solax drama, "The Peddler," last June, Herbert Blache and A. Lloyd Lack took an auto trip of 135 miles into the Catskill Mountains on a trout fishing expedition, and brought back genuine photos to substantiate their claims that the fish were biting good. The significant thing about the expedition and the fish pictures is that the thing remained secret so long. Lack declares he caught the first fish, and Blache is given credit for landing the biggest one, so honors remain even. The official total count was sixty-five.

Government Approves Suggestion of Ince

The United States Government has approved the suggestion of Thomas H. Ince, producer of Wm. S. Hart-Artcraft pictures, that the use of real food be eliminated from stage and screen productions during the period of the war, as shown in the following official announcement by Herbert C. Hoover, head of the United States Food Administration: "The food administration is asking that the theatrical and moving picture people of the country refrain from using real food in their productions during the war. The administration is of the opinion that in meals on the stage and in the making of films imitations can be used in most cases, and believes that where this is not possible the scenes showing the use of food can be omitted. The amount of food unprofitably used in theatrical performances throughout the country amounts to a much larger bulk than is ordinarily realized. The food administration desires to stop not merely the actual waste of this food material, but to prevent the unconscious bad effect of audiences at this time when every effort is being made to drive home the need of the elimination of every possible food waste as a means of helping to win the war."

Virginia Valli Returns to Chicago

Virginia Valli, the young ingenue who recently joined the Essanay forces in Chicago, has returned to that city from New York after spending several weeks in the metropolis for the purpose of appearing in a forthcoming comedy-drama in which Essanay required several New York scenes.

An Idle Moment in the Production of "The Judgment House," Which J. Stuart Blackton Is Directing for Paramount

Distinguished Cast for "The Judgment House"

Conway Tearle, Wilfred Lucas, Violet Heming, Florence Deshon and Luciel Hamilton Among the Players—Blackton Produced It

ONE of the exceptionally rare times when the expression "an all-star cast" is not out of place is cited in the case of "The Judgment House," Sir Gilbert Parker's novel of Boer War days, filmed by J. Stuart Blackton for Paramount. Inasmuch as the phrase is so often abused, the exception is greeted with interest by the majority of exhibitors and their patrons.

For example, Conway Tearle plays the role of Ian Stafford, and Rudyard Byng is portrayed by Wilfred Lucas. Tearle will also appear in the next Parker picture, "The World for Sale." He has had an enviable stage career with many of the leading players, and in films has appeared in many productions, including "The Common Law" and "The Foolish Virgin."

Wilfred Lucas is a Canadian and began his career in both light and grand opera and was featured in "Quo Vadis." He also produced a number of noted plays. In motion pictures he has appeared in productions of importance with several companies.

Violet Heming, the English actress, has the leading feminine role in "The Judgment House," that of Jasmine Grenfel. Her career has been a brilliant one on both stage and screen. She is said to be ideally suited to the character.

Florence Deshon, who interprets Al'mah, is an actress of admitted talent who is expected to give a splendid rendition of the role.

Crazy Thunder, the Sioux Indian actor, is to be seen as Krool. He has had much experience and is a perfect type. Paul Doucet, also an actor of ability, is to play Adrian Fellowes.

Lou is played by Luciel Hamilton, and in the minor roles are a number of excellent players, while the extra lists required hundreds of people for the battle scenes and the London society ensembles.

Up to the time that Olive Schreiner gave to the world her tale, "The Story of an African Farm," the South African country was largely a closed book to the outside world. The exploits of Cecil Rhodes brought the country into prominence, and then came the Boer War with its attendant interest for the entire globe. Phrases and names for places and things became common, and into the public prints crept such exotic terms as "kopje," the "veldt," "trek," and so on. It remained for Sir Arthur Conan Doyle to write the history of the war and for Sir Gilbert Parker to embody it in a novel which disclosed some of the inner phases of character and incidents of the parlous times under the title of "The Judgment House." Translated to the screen with all the artistry of Commodore Blackton, with a cast that is, as can be seen, above the ordinary, and with the author's own personal supervision, it can hardly fail to be an extraordinary production.

Another producer than Commodore Blackton might have endeavored to bring the story "up to date" and to inject the present conflict, but as Sir Gilbert Parker himself remarked in effect when this possibility was suggested to him casually:

"A story which may be so changed can have had very little to it in the beginning. A picture might easily be made in such a way, perhaps, but it would not be the author's work."

"The Judgment House" will be released by Paramount November 19.

Charles Ray Makes Paramount Debut October 22

When Charles Ray makes his screen appearance October 22 in "The Son of His Father," it will be his debut under Paramount auspices. The Thomas H. Ince star has, it is said, outdone himself in this new picture, which affords him material for red-blooded, virile action, a portrayal of a typical, young American, the sort that is making this a nation to be respected by the entire world.

None of the weak traits of character such as were frequently given Mr. Ray to interpret in previous productions are embodied in this role, which is one of the most congenial, according to all report, in which he has ever appeared.

The story is by Ridgwell Cullum, directed by Victor Schertzinger, and has as its leading features a fistic encounter, numerous sensational scenes and a plot that is original and full of splendid screen material. The story is based upon the successful effort of a youth, scion of a wealthy family, to turn five thousand dollars into a hundred thousand in six months. This is the task set by his father to prove his mettle.

Vola Vale supports Mr. Ray, and is the only woman in the cast. Davis Slessen, George Nicholls, John P. Lockney, Charles K. French and George Hoffman are the other players.

In February Mr. Powell was engaged to support Ann Murdock in "Outcast" and to play the part of Geoffrey—a part that he knew by heart, having played it with Elsie Ferguson in the play of that name. Then came "The Impostor," and again Mr. Powell was asked to play the leading role opposite Miss Murdock, with Dell Henderson directing. "The Richest Girl" and "The Beautiful Adventure" then followed in quick succession and Mr. Powell decided to take a few weeks' rest. He remained loyal to the Empire and resumed work there, but with a different star, it having been decided to star Olive Tell in a series of pictures and feature Mr. Powell.

Owing to the Empire's policy of making quite a few pictures before releasing the first, Mr. Powell has not been seen on the screen for some months.

Clayton Joins Metro-Yorke Forces

W. E. Clayton has been engaged as technical and art director by Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke Film Corporation, which is producing Metro wonderplays starring Harold Lockwood. Dan Devlin and Vernon Lawrence have also been engaged. They are to be assistants to Mr. Clayton.

Mr. Clayton comes from the Triangle studios in Yonkers, where he was located for the past year. Previously he was connected with the Reliance-Majestic studios in New York for a period of two years.

At the Metro-Yorke studios Mr. Clayton's duty will be that of supervisor in the matter of settings, properties and locations.

Marie Dressler Springs a Story of Her Career

Marie Dressler has commissioned the publicity department of Goldwyn Pictures to release, for laughing and other mirth-making purposes, some brief stories concerning herself and her career. One of the first of these is captioned "Free List Too Big," and relates: "I have managed to conceal from some people who haven't known me all my life the fact that I got on the stage by way of comic opera. It's a fact. I had a robust voice and I could sing. I got along splendidly until the manager made me mad by asking me to tone down my songs. He said too many passers-by in the streets were hearing the show for nothing."

Ann Pennington Feature on November 5

The Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation last week announced that the enormous amount of labor involved in preparing the settings for "The Antics of Ann," in which diminutive Ann Pennington will star, has delayed the release of the picture by Paramount until November 5. The picture had been scheduled for the last week in October.

Throughout its entire length the production entailed many features calling for sets of the most complicated description, such, for instance, as that depicting a Japanese tea room in a summer hotel, which occupied almost half of the immense Famous Players Studio and in which the star does her terpsichorean specialty.

Director Edward Dillon has been working hard to complete the picture on time, and had it not been for the temporary illness of the star would have done so. However, the delay is only for a week.

The story is by Frederick Chapin and the scenario by Coolidge Streeter.

Goldwyn Standard Brings More Praise from Exhibitors

MORE evidence that Goldwyn's first releases are more than fulfilling the promises made for them and that exhibitors are showing them to advantage throughout the country is contained in telegrams and letters that continue to come into the Goldwyn offices in New York.

It is the nearly unanimous opinion of exhibitors that if the Goldwyn standard pulls up to that set by "Polly of the Circus" and "Baby Mine" there can be no doubt of the success of the company and the complete satisfaction of the men who buy the productions and the audiences who witness them.

John Cooney, proprietor of the Union Square theatre at Pittsfield, Mass., telegraphed to Goldwyn as follows: "Congratulations on Goldwyn's 'Polly of the Circus,' a corking production breaking all box-office records. Strong opposition and mission at biggest church, but turning hundreds away on second night of 'Polly's' engagement. Please extend booking four days instead of three if possible."

J. W. and W. J. Dusenbury, owners of theatres in Columbus, O., wrote: "We did a fine business yesterday and our patrons were much pleased with 'Baby Mine.' There is no question concerning the success of Goldwyn Pictures if they are all up to the standard of 'Polly of the Circus' and 'Baby Mine.'"

Sam Newton, Jr., of the Broadway theatre, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., says: "I am pleased to say that 'Polly of the Circus' has given great satisfaction. If you can turn out such consistent pictures you may well call yourselves 'The best producers of the best pictures.'"

Benjamin F. Pickett, manager of the Keith theatre in Lowell, Mass., is another "Baby Mine" enthusiast. He wrote: "'Baby Mine' went over fine. It is a very good comedy. Kept the audience in laughs throughout and held them till the finish."

H. L. Weil, owner of the Majestic theatre at Port Huron, Mich., telegraphed: "Please accept my congratulations. I ran the first of your releases, 'Polly of the Circus,' today and yesterday to near capacity houses. More power to you, your stars and the splendid corporation you represent. Near capacity means something at Majestic, and naturally your success means my success."

Chicago Judge Writes Story for Paramount

Judge Willis Brown, of the Chicago Juvenile Court, has written an original play entitled "The Spirit of '17" for Paramount, in which the youthful star, Jack Pickford, will have the stellar role. As the basis of his story, Judge Brown has employed a timely theme dealing with the labor agitations that are now causing so much trouble throughout the country. "The Spirit of '17" has its locale in a copper mining district near which is situated a home for veterans of the Civil War.

Another announcement that will no doubt come as a particularly interesting one to all lovers of Mark Twain's immortal stories of boyhood is that there will be two, instead of one, "Tom Sawyer" pictures. The first will follow the lines of the original story, while the second will take up in logical sequence further adventures of this redoutable juvenile hero.

The cast chosen for all three of these Jack Pickford productions are said to be thoroughly adequate, while the locations chosen mirror the scenes embodied in the original stories with remarkable fidelity.

While it has not yet been determined definitely which of these productions will be released first, it is probable that "The Spirit of '17" will be chosen, because of the timeliness of the story.

Mildred Harris Owes Success Wholly to Screen Work

Mildred Harris Has Leading Roles in Lois Weber's Productions

MILDRED HARRIS, the ingenue who will appear in leading roles in Lois Weber's forthcoming productions, owes her present success entirely to her screen work, for she has never had any professional stage experience. Her rise to stardom is said to represent six years of solid effort.

Lois Weber has a penchant for developing the talents of film players and is quick to note the capabilities of persons she sees on the screen, as has been demonstrated many times. It was in this way that she recently ran across Miss Harris, who, although just seventeen years old, had already gained considerable success as a screen player, and forthwith Miss Weber engaged her for the leading part in the feature she was staging at the time, although some two hundred girls had already been interviewed for the role and some half hundred appointments for other interviews were still on the studio books.

The first appearance of Miss Harris under Lois Weber's direction will be "The Price of a Good Time," and this will be followed shortly by her appearance in "K," Mary Roberts Rinehart's story. Before taking up picture work, Miss Harris made several appearances in amateur theatricals for charity benefits and it was her performance at one of these that attracted the notice of Thomas H. Ince. Although Miss Harris was then only eleven years old—that was just six years ago—she immediately began playing principal roles in Ince's pictures and held a stock engagement in that company for more than three years.

Then, after working in several other productions she went with D. W. Griffith to The Fine Arts Company, who featured her in several pictures, among them "The Bad Boy," in which she played opposite Robert Harron, and "The Old Folks at Home," in which she was the principal support of the late Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree.

Again Miss Harris returned to the Ince studios where she played opposite William Hart and in her latest picture opposite William Desmond. Then came her engagement with Miss Weber. Miss Harris declares herself delighted to work under the guidance of the woman "discoverer" of Mary McLaren and other well known screen players.

Lasky Water Sprites Offer Challenge

Film circles on the Pacific Coast are aroused, as the result of a challenge from members of the feminine contingent of the Lasky organization, which has issued a challenge to the Paramount-Mack Sennett bathing beauties in the following communication: Noticing among the incidental mentions in the public prints that certain members of the Paramount-Mack Sennett organization are posing to the world as "bathing girls" and confronting the public with new and startling innovations in bathing costumes, the undersigned have the vague impression that none of you can swim—and to that length we hereby and herewith challenge you to a swimming and diving contest in real water—and not before the camera.

This contest to be held either in the tank at the Lasky Studio, or in your own swimming tank—or in the Pacific Ocean, as you, the challenged parties, may desire.

We, the challengers, will swim in the ordinary bathing costumes popular on the Pacific Coast—while you, the challenged, will be expected to swim in the modiste monstrosities in which you are so frequently photographed.

The losers of this swimming and diving contest are to donate the sum of $100 to the Red Cross Fund.

Marguerite Clark in Third Sub-Deb Story

Having completed "Bab's Burglar," second of the "Sub-Deb" stories picturized from the series by Mary Roberts Rinehart in the Saturday Evening Post, Marguerite Clark, the Paramount star, is at work on the third, which will be "Bab's Matinee Idol," and will be released in November.

Following the reception accorded the first "Sub-Deb" picture, "Bab's Diary," it is expected the second picture will be greeted with equal cordiality by the film-going public. Despite the long list of successes in which she has appeared under the Paramount banner, it is doubtful if Miss Clark has ever achieved a greater triumph than in this role.

"Bab's Burglar," which will be released October 29, like its predecessor was directed by J. Searle Dawley.

Essanay Completes First of New Comedies

Essanay has completed the first of a new series of one-reel slap-stick comedies featuring A. Rastrelli, French film comedian on leave of absence from the trenches.

Rastrelli is widely known in France, having been on the speaking stage there for years both in drama and comedy. He had a part in the first two-reel picture produced by George Melies, the father of the film industry abroad. He has a unique make-up which will be used throughout the series. His first offering, "Hard Luck John," is described as a fifteen-minute scream. He has the support of a staff of artists who helped make previous Essanay comedies, and a most interesting series of "rough stuff" one-reelers is promised.

Rastrelli was formerly associated with Max Linder, and has many tricks in his bag of pantomime and comedy.

Frieda Hempel Endorses Hesperia's "Camille"

Frieda Hempel, prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera House, who so often has sung the role of Violetta in "La Traviata," Verdi's operatic version of Dumas' "Camille," last week personally viewed, with a party of friends, the super-feature, "Camille," as presented on the screen with Helen Hesperia in the title role. The production is being distributed by General Film.

In commenting upon the production, Miss Hempel said: "I have seen several productions of 'Camille' but nothing which appealed to me so much as this one. Helen Hesperia is wonderful indeed. The artistry, the faithfulness with which she interprets her 'Camille,' makes it one of the most charming productions of Dumas' story imaginable. Indeed, I never supposed that such good results could be obtained in adapting the story 'Camille' for the film. The setting, the atmosphere, even down to the smallest and most insignificant point, leads me to believe that even Dumas himself could not have wished for a finer presentation of his masterpiece.

"Hesperia has given to her love scenes a splendid dignity and such sincerity as one rarely sees. 'Camille' has been overdone and underdone so many times it is a rare pleasure to have seen this screen version. I went prepared to be critical but I came away completely charmed by the work of the emotional actress. Surely no one can make a mistake in taking the time to see such an artistic, beautiful picture as 'Camille.'"

Director Hamilton Begins "Maternal Spark"

G. P. Hamilton, who was recently added to the Triangle's directing force at Culver City, has begun work on his first picture, the working title of which is "The Maternal Spark." Included in the cast are Irene Hunt and Rowland Lee. On the opening day, in which a courtroom scene was shot, Hamilton had thirty stock people and over a hundred extras making "atmosphere" before his megaphone.

Fox Selects New Kiddie Feature for Screen

Will Present Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin in "Babes in the Woods," Following "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp"

ANOTHER motion picture version of an age-old story now rests in William Fox's film vaults and will soon have its screen presentation. The Fox spectacle is a cinema offering of the fairy tale, "The Babes in the Woods," and is several reels more than ordinary feature length.

Francis Carpenter and Virginia Lee Corbin, who created the leading roles in Mr. Fox's "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp," both of which were exhibited at the Globe theatre, on Broadway, are said to give the same demonstration of dramatic ability that distinguished their first two productions.

Alan Dale says of them: "None of the proud 'movie' stars at colossal salaries can hold a candle to wonderful Francis Carpenter and Miss Corbin. The boy has a smile that is most captivating and that actually lights up his winsome little features. As for the facial expression of the girl, it is almost beyond belief, and a joy to behold. Their performances disarm all criticism, and I assert that theatregoers should make it a point to see them."

C. M. and S. A. Franklin, who directed "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin," supervised the making of "The Babes in the Woods." The photoplay spectacle was filmed in the Grand Canyon, Colorado, in the big Fox studio at Hollywood and in the mountains and valleys of California, and in Hawaii.

The charm of the original of "The Babes in the Woods" has been retained in the celluloid version, and not a few of the scenes of the story gain through visualization. Especially fine is the episode in the witch's cottage. The house itself is a structure of gingerbread, stick candy, hot cross buns and such delicacies. The witch makes her entry upon the scene with the immortal lines, "Nibble, nibble, little mouse, Who's nibbling at my little house?"

The story has been invested with a short modern prologue and epilogue.

Kosloff Appears in Artcraft Spectacle

In the Geraldine Farrar spectacle, "The Woman God Forgot," produced by Cecil B. De Mille for Artcraft, the director presents some interesting types, among them Theodore Kosloff, the Russian dancer. Kosloff, Karsavina, Mordkin, Pavlowa, Nijinsky, Revalles, Bolm and Lopokora once formed a group of the Russian Imperial Ballet that is now scattered.

Regarding Cecil B. De Mille, Kosloff says: "He is without doubt a Napoleon of moving pictures; a master painter of these living pictures of art. He has a constructive ideal, the foundation of which he is laying quietly and carefully. He knows that nothing is gained by taking the public by the hair and shaking it into a realization of that ideal; but he has broken the windows of the motion picture house, and is letting in the fresh, sweet air. Nay, more, he is installing a ventilator of new and approved ideas that will revolutionize the art of the screen."

Director Hopper Working on New Triangle

Director E. Mason Hopper has completed the filming of "Blue Blood," his story of New York aristocracy, featuring Alma Ruebens, and is preparing a story in which Walt Whitman, Triangle character actor, will be featured as a hypocritical parson. Mr. Whitman's last screen role was "Tough Luck" Baxter, in "The Firefly of Tough Luck."

New Specially Chosen Stories in Helen Gibson Series

AN announcement that promises to strike a responsive chord in the hearts of motion picture fans who appreciate the daring and thrilling side of the screen drama is made this week by General Film.

Helen Gibson, known far and wide as one of the leading performers of feats of daring, is to return to the screen in a new series of one-reel productions known as "A Daughter of Daring." The Kalem Company, which makes the new series in which the star is featured, has announced five subjects for release in November and December.

Since the close of the last series General Film asserts that both public and exhibitors have asked for more, finally becoming so insistent that Kalem has decided to amplify the series. The first of these to be released will be "A Race to the Drawbridge," which is scheduled for November 7. Others to follow under consecutive weekly release dates are "The Munitions Plot," "The Detective's Danger," "The Railroad Smuggler" and "The Deserted Engine."

These five stories are said to be literally crowded with thrills. Miss Gibson resumed her work with such energy and fearlessness that picture fans are promised a continuous run of sensations.

Miss Gibson established her reputation for daring in the "Hazards of Helen" series produced by Kalem. For several years she continued to amaze the fans with adventures of the daring sort. She chased trains on motor cycles, dropped from bridges into speeding trains and in general performed so many daring feats that she became known internationally as the "Danger Girl." Her latest stunts have been in the "A Daughter of Daring" series which supplanted the "Hazards of Helen" releases, and since that time she has been producing new railroad thrills.

Jewel Takes Great Pains with Universal New Feature

JEWEL Productions, Inc., is taking great pains to make the Universal new special feature production, "The Boss of Powderville," which is nearing completion at Universal City, among the best of its kind yet attempted. Under the direction of Ida May Park action of the exciting and intensely dramatic sort is being injected, and the camera work is said to be such as has seldom been attempted in motion pictures.

The cast, it is claimed, is exceptionally capable. Dorothy Phillips plays the leading feminine role and William Stowell is the hard-hearted boss of the western town. Jack Mulhall appears in the part of a young and adventurous New York newspaper man, and Lon Chaney has opportunities for characterization as an old restaurant-keeper. Evelyn Selbie and Alfred Allen also have important roles.

The story was written by Thomas Addison, and Miss Park prepared her own screen arrangement. No expense has been spared to make this the strongest attraction yet produced at the Universal company's big studios and the incomplete film of the scenes that so far have been staged are said to indicate that expectations will be fully realized.

As a suggestion of what the production promises in a spectacular way, a setting representing the town of Powderville will be burned and a spectacular explosion is planned to occur when the flames reach an extensive powder mill, the principal industry of the place. A large force of carpenters has been busily engaged for the past month in building the town which is put to torch by enemies of the "Boss" after a spirited battle with the sheriff and his men. The scenes of the burning town will be filmed at night and unique lighting and camera effects have been planned by Director Park, aided by Milton Moore, technical director, and Eddie Ullman, superintendent of photography.

Sloman Uses Signal Studio for Scenes

Edward Sloman, American director, took a number of scenes at the Signal studios last week on the West Coast. The Signal studios are the home of the Helen Holmes serials, and is right on the Salt Lake tracks. Director McGowan extended full courtesies to his brother director which were greatly appreciated.

West Point Turns Out for Mme. Petrova

The whole military academy of West Point turned out one bright sunny morning last week to pose as part of a motion picture story. Many films have been taken of the cadets in special exercises, on dress parade and so forth, by various companies, as current news events, but it is said that never before have the students been actually in the plot of a six-reel feature. The privilege granted Mme. Petrova by the commandant is considered a rare one.

In this first of Petrova's pictures since the formation of her own organization, the story has to do with the morganatic marriage of an American girl to the Crown Prince of a well-known foreign country. The Crown Prince, which part is played by Thomas Holding, whom Madame Petrova recently placed under contract for her next four pictures, comes to America on an important mission, and while in this country reviews the officers of the future.

Many views were made on the lawns at West Point of Madame Petrova and the Crown Prince, in addition to the scenes in which they were photographed with the students.

Three New Players with Margarita Fischer

Margarita Fischer, star of the American Film Company, to appear in five-reel features, will have three new players in her forthcoming feature, "A Daughter of Joan," written by Beatrice Vander Pluym and William Parker, and adapted for the screen by Chester B. Clapp.

Jack Mower will play the lead opposite Miss Fischer, and L. C. Shumway and Hal Clements will have important roles.

Mr. Mower was Miss Fischer's leading man in previous productions. Mr. Shumway, as Lieutenant Wilbur, will play his first role in an American Film Company production, while Hal Clements, as Major Kerwood will prove the wisdom of Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the company, in selecting only the best of talent for his new features.

Barriscale Story Not Yet Named

Bessie Barriscale is now working on what is said to be a splendid vehicle for her talents. The story is not yet named, but was put into its present form by Monte M. Katterjohn, who consulted daily with Raymond B. West, the director, and Miss Bessie. They all think it is a splendid story. There never was a more harmonious company than Miss Barriscale's and they work hard and make a pleasure of it.

Two New Players with Greater Vitagraph

Among the new players who have been added to casts of Greater Vitagraph Blue Ribbon features in the last week are Gladys Leslie and Grace Darmond. Miss Leslie, formerly with Thanhouser, is to appear in support of Harry Morey in "His Own People," and Miss Darmond will appear with Earle Williams in "The Hillman." Miss Darmond, who received her training on the legitimate stage, was last in Astra productions.

Hard Job to Find Leading Woman, Says "Doug"

At last Douglas Fairbanks has loosened up with some information which he has reserved upon several occasions when the question was put to him. He has given his opinion on leading women—that is, the selection of them for roles in his pictures.

The smiling comedian said: "Selecting a leading woman is even more difficult than finding suitable scenarios. A story might read well, and yet be absolutely worthless for picturization. The same applies to leading women—some may look great, but on the screen they are impossible.

"Personality off the screen is very deceiving. I know of many cases where a girl who had only been given a 'bit' to play with a group of supernumaries was picked out of the crowd in a large scene, because of her screen magnetism, and the result was she was put in line for better parts, later developing into a brilliant leading woman. Many of our present female screen stars started just this way, graduating from the school of 'extras.'

"Recently while we were looking for a leading woman to take West, we interviewed over twenty-five girls from which only ten possible candidates were selected. Photographic tests were made of these same ten girls and only one passed with flying colors, which proved to be Eileen Percy, who made her screen debut in 'Wild and Wolly' with such success. In our newest Artcraft picture, 'Reaching for the Moon,' she is undoubtedly given her greatest opportunity since becoming a screen actress."

Mae Marsh Cast in "Sunshine Alley"

Persons who are aspiring to write scenarios for the motion picture screen should learn a great deal about characterization from the new Goldwyn picture starring Mae Marsh, "Sunshine Alley." This photoplay, by Mary Rider and developed into continuity by Emmett Campbell Hall, was especially written to fit the quaint capabilities of Mae Marsh, and is said to be one of the most close-fitting vehicles that has ever been provided a picture star.

This is considered a tribute to the discernment of the two writers responsible, particularly so because Miss Marsh is known in the world of the motion picture alternately as "the whim girl of the screen" and "the girl of a thousand faces."

Hutchinson Thinks the Industry Has No Limit

Declares That the High Water Mark Can Never Be Reached, in Contradiction of Statements Made by Writers in Trade Journals

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Company, at Chicago, has put his right foot forward again and has nipped in the bud the attempts of anyone who tries to impress the general public and the motion picture industry with the statement that the industry has reached its high water mark. "It can't be done," declares Hutchinson, and then proceeds to back up his claim.

He said: "The high water mark in the motion picture industry can never be reached, despite the fact that in recent articles in trade journals writers have asserted that it has already come to pass.

"The industry has passed its experimental and spasmodic stage, it is true. The very nature of the business caused it to expand by leaps and bounds and to make for itself a place in the business world that is crowding closer and closer to the front ranks. But as there can be no limit to the motion picture industry, there can be no high water mark that may not be over reached by the next wave of progress.

"The motion picture industry must become as steadily progressive and limitless in its ever changing vision as any other established business. The banking business has no high water mark. Neither has the grocery business or the real estate business. As long as there is no limit to the power and scope of vision of the executive who guides its destinies, there must be a constant expansion in its advancement.

"Every decade will bring with it new possibilities and new demands. The business must expand to meet them. And educationally and industrially, as well as artistically, the motion picture must keep pace with the march of the nation.

"I recall when exhibitors declared that the limit had been reached when they had five-hundred-foot reels. When two reel plays were produced they called that the limit. When we suggested five reel features, they denounced it as the limit—but the five reeler won out as an established feature. When a producer first expended $20,000 in the production of a picture, it was thought that the limit had been a trifle over reached. But how far would an expenditure of $20,000 go in the production of a picture today?

"So the limit of no industry is ever reached.

"The motion picture has pecuniary profits and the commercial man will continue to engage in it and urge its growth. It has educational interest and the educator will demand its steady improvement. It has industrial value and the manufacturer will back it with his money as an asset in his business.

"For its business appraisal is fundamentally a requisite background for its artistic growth.

"There is the producer—or manufacturer. There is the jobber—or distributor. There is the retailer—or exhibitor. And there is always to be considered the demands of the ultimate consumer—or the public—When we learn to regard the industry as any reliable manufacturer regards his business; when we aim to put only the best that we can produce and establish the confidence of the public in our brand of goods, then we will have put the motion picture industry on such a firm and established foundation that its high water mark can be reached only from year to year, always to be submerged and washed away by the approaching higher water mark of the coming year."

Realism Rampant in "Sub-Deb" Adaptation

Maxine Elliott's Theatre became for one afternoon recently a Paramount studio, when Marguesite Clary enacted some of the playhouse scenes in "Bab's Matinee Idol," third of the "Sub-Deb" stories from Mary Roberts Rinehart's series of tales in the Saturday Evening Post. Also some three hundred extra people constituting an audience of "elite" firstnighters, saw Miss Clark act in a theatre which was not, for the moment, a theatre but a studio; and while she acted it was not for the audience but for the camera—or rather for future screen audiences. As a matter of fact the audience was not an audience at all but a company of actors. In fact the entire affair was an involution of contradictions; a paradoxical turning of the theatre upon itself, so to speak.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

New De Mille Spectacle Considered Best of His Career

A TELEGRAM received last week by Adolph Zukor, head of the Famous Players-Lasky organization, from Jesse L. Lasky, who is at present at the West Coast studios, expressed much enthusiasm over the forthcoming Artcraft spectacle, starring Geraldine Farrar, "The Woman God Forgot." A private screening of this production was given at the Lasky studio last week to a representative trade gathering and the consensus of opinion among those present was that the new cinema spectacle staged by Cecil B. De Mille in many respects surpasses even "Joan the Woman," last season's De Mille-Farrar success. Jeanie Macpherson, author of "Joan the Woman," is also responsible for the story of the new production, thus offering the same trio in the way of star, producer and author of "The Woman God Forgot" as in the case of "Joan."

Immediately after the private showing in California, Mr. Lasky sent the following telegram to Mr. Zukor: "Just witnessed Cecil De Mille's production of Geraldine Farrar in 'The Woman God Forgot.' I consider it from every standpoint one of the finest motion pictures ever produced. It is an intensely interesting dramatic story and contains the most perfect photography and beautiful lighting effects I have ever seen. The cast are all remarkable. Geraldin Farrar gives a superb performance as does Wallace Reid, Theodore Kosloff, Hobart Bosworth and Raymond Hatton. The consensus of opinion of a large audience who witnessed the running of the picture was that it rivals and in many respects surpasses 'Joan the Woman.' Mr. De Mille in this production has climaxed every other production of his career. Kindly convey to our exhibitors that in 'The Woman God Forgot' we are sending them a picture of mammoth importance that in every sense is good enough for a special release. Besides the points mentioned above it is both elaborate and spectacular.

Sennett Discusses Imagination in Making Pictures

IT seems that Mack Sennett has plenty of ideas beyond the ones which concern exclusively the concoction of new stunts to make people laugh and the producer of the Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedies, which are carrying their good cheer message throughout the land, believes that it pays to philosophize occasionally on the subject in general.

For example, he says: "The business of making motion pictures is, in effect, the retailing of imagination."

He adds that this aspect of the work has always fascinated him and continues in the same vein: "We often hear it said that we live in an unromantic age from which all picturesqueness has vanished. Yet once in a while it occurs to us that the age in which we live is in fact the most picturesque and romantic of all ages. When you come to think of it, modern industrial life is romantic to the very core."

Mr. Sennett agrees with Gilbert K. Cresterton, the English essayist and story writer, who says that the mere mailing of a letter is a drama in itself.

"I never turn on an electric light," says the producer, "at my room at the club that it does not occur to me that, somewhere on the other end of that electric wire is a mountain torrent that comes tumbling over mountain cascades to supply the energy that lights my room.

"In some such way, the making of motion pictures is a task a whole lot more picturesque and interesting than were most of the occupations of the past that we think of as having been romantic.

"An idea strikes you, for example, and soon the echo of that idea will be heard at the ends of the earth. We start a little joke in front of the camera and it goes and keeps on going. Somewhere back of the trenches, I imagine that the soldiers of the Allies will come back from their tour of danger in the flaming hell of No Man's Land shaken and exhausted, and they will laugh at our little jokes in one of the army theatres. Somewhere, out on the prairies, a rancher is plodding into town. Before he begins the long ride back, he will, perhaps, take in the movies—and he will see and laugh at those same 'gags.'"

Walthall Lawyer in New Paralta Play

From shyster lawyer to an upright justice of the Supreme Court is the career of Henry Walthall in "His Robe of Honor," the motion picture which will mark Walthall's debut as a Paralta star. The story is by Ethel and James Dorrance and is said to have a strong love interest that does not border the "mushy" kind frequently presented.

The cast selected to support Mr. Walthall in the production is expected to give a good account of itself, as it includes some well-known and popular players. Mary Charleson, who has appeared with Walthall in some of his former successes, will appear in a role that is said to suit her very well. Lois Wilson, who appeared with J. Warren Kerrigan in "A Man's Man," has been cast in the role of a young society girl. Noah Berry, Jr., will have the part of a politician. J. J. Dowling will be seen as a lawyer. Ray Laidlow will be his partner. Fred Montague has a character role, and Eugene Palette, well known for juvenile characterizations, will be the brother of the political boss. Guy Newhard is also in the cast.

First Fun-Art Comedy Progressing Nicely

Work is progressing rapidly at the Thanhouser Studio in New Rochelle, on the first comedy release by Fun-Art Films, Inc., in which the Dooleys, Ray and Gordon, are being featured. The first feature will be called "A Rag, A Bone and a Hank of Hair," instead of "Sunny-Side Up."

"Hawaiian Trip" Released by Educational

"A Flying Trip Through the Hawaiian Islands," through the Independent Exchanges of the Educational Film Corporation of America, was released on October 8. This picture played for one week at the Rialto theatre, and Mr. Rothapfel thought so much of the picture, said Mr. Hammons, general manager of the Educational Film Corporation, that he featured it in his electric sign outside of the Rialto theatre. Mr. Hammons said that a large number of advanced bookings have been placed and one of these covers the Marcus Loew circuit of theatres.

Building Wooden Fleet Feature of Reel Life

One of the outstanding features of "Reel Life, No. 79," which is scheduled for release on November 1, is the building of wooden ships for freight service.

Southern sawmills are working night and day preparing the four hundred million feet of yellow pine for building the ships during the coming year. Though forty-two carloads are required for each ship, the Southern yards are far ahead of the schedule promised the Government, and will shortly be completely one wooden ship every working day. This subject, which was taken in co-operation with the Southern Pine Association, shows the felling of the monster pines, their conversion into lumber in what is said to be the largest sawmill in the world, the actual building of the ship and the launching of the largest combined freight and passenger ship ever constructed in the South.

Another feature of the reel is "Important Industries of Argentina."

"An Unusual Foster Mother" shows a cat that has adopted some motherless chickens. The two remaining subjects of the reel are "A Dry Land Periscope" and "Had Your Mining Stock Panned Out."

Universal Current Events Features War

Universal Current Events Number 22, released October 12, is dominated by the war atmosphere and spirit, which is reason enough to make it doubly welcome and popular wherever it is shown. Eleven scenes are scheduled, and ten of these deal either directly or indirectly with war.

In the order announced, the scenes are: Carranza's former war minister, Obregon, visits the U. S.; Dutch battleship in Western Port; Mrs. Thomas Edwards makes record, at Oberlin, O., in gardening; Fights and Frolics of Our Sailors; Britain's Jackies chum with U. S. Tars; Columbia University comes through with greatest war hospital; "Teddy" Roosevelt makes speech against LaFollette; Red Cross nurses parade in New York; World series baseball players line up before the camera; Animated cartoons.

More Hints to Housewives in Pictographs

The 89th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, "the-magazine-on-the-screen," contains among other timely features the second installment of the series of "Hints to Housewives" made in conjunction with the New York State Food Supply Commission at Cornell University.

The purpose of this picture is to show American women how they may become practically independent of the iceman by the outlay of but a few cents and a little energy. The principle involved in the iceless refrigerator is that the rapid evaporation of water will cool its surroundings. That is why, on hot days, the sprinkling of the streets is so refreshing. The iceless refrigerator uses this means.

In order that the device may be thoroughly understood, it is made completely in the picture and it will be possible after seeing this film, for any woman to go and do likewise.

The Armored Aeroplane Is Shown in Action in a Current Bray-Pictograph Release

Aeroplane Gun Feature of Pictograph

"The Aeroplane Machine Gun" is a part of the 90th release of Paramount-Bray Pictograph, the magazine-on-the-screen.

It is a fact that no part of the war is so spectacular as that which goes on high above the clouds, and for this reason alone, if for no other, the picture is expected to receive a vast amount of appreciation. It is the aeroplane gun, the fighting machine of the allied armies, that is depicted in animated diagrammatical drawings by J. F. Leventhal of the Bray Studios.

Another subject of this reel is "Humpback Whaling in the Pacific," taken on the outer fringe of the Antarctic.

Quacky Doodles Again in Pictographs

The popular Quacky Doodles family appears again in the 89th release of Paramount-Bray Pictographs to furnish another animated cartoon, and no doubt Paramount audiences will have further occasion for hearty laughter at the antics of these quaintly funny little duckies.

In "The Cheater" old Quacky and little Quacky set about to beat each other in a swimming race, and the means they use to get to the goal first are said to be decidedly novel, to say the least.

World Series Baseball in Hearst-Pathe News

What will probably attract the attention of motion picture fans more than anything else in the Hearst-Pathe News, No. 82, is the picturization in part of the opening game of the world series baseball games in Chicago, when thirty-five thousand people turned out.

Other scenes in the reel are taken at Michell, S. D., where a palace of corn was built to mark a prosperous year; Orange, N. J., with the National Guardsmen off to camp; Kellyville, Okla., where a railway accident took several lives; Niles, O., America pays tribute to memory of President McKinley; Los Angeles, New York, Camp Mills, Charlestown, Mass., and Cleveland, O.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeLissa Berg

THE GAME

Were you one of the envied 32,000 lucky enough to gain admittance to the first of the world's series? The chances are just about three thousand to one that you were not. So be glad that the camera went there for you and (Universal Animated Weekly, No. 93), caught the very most exciting features of the first two games. Here we see Sallee scoring the Giants' first run; Felsch's triumphal arrival at the home plate; McCarty presenting himself with a two-bagger, but coming to grief in a collision with Liebold; and the White Sox stacking up runs in the second game.

In a very pretty 220-yard swim, at Sutro Baths, San Francisco, Miss Dorothy Burns narrowly defeats Miss Claire Galligan, winning in three minutes and a few seconds.

Provision against danger is seen in the new life saving mattress, on which the traveller across the ocean sleeps while crossing the danger zone, and which can be immediately converted into a floating life-preserver at need; and provision for comfort where it is most appreciated is being made by the women of the Navy League, who are sending "good cheer bags" to the boys in France against Christmas homesickness.

GOLDIE SETTLES THE "SERIOUS"

If the gentle deer must die at the crack of a rifle, let him always "do it beautifully," as in this latest offering of the Bray Studios, Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 88. The scenes of the hunt are in the south, in fine wooded land. In true hunting song fashion the party starts on horseback, preceded by eager dogs. A woman has the honor of bringing down the victim with one well-placed shot, but it takes a man to serve up the "fruits of victory" in the shape of succulent steaks eaten sizzling hot between slices of bread.

Uncle Sam is so many kinds of an expert these days that we are not surprised to find him teaching housewives how to convert their "drippings" into serviceable soap. The process is simple and can easily, with the aid of the explanatory titles, be carried out by anyone having to do with matters in the kitchen.

Bobby Bumps undertakes to lead his host to victory in the local "Serious." But bench umpires disagree, and Goldie must be called in. Goldie's methods admit of no question, and the game, as Earl Hurd explains, is called "on account of darkness."

VENICE IN SMILES

A foreign correspondent recently described Venice on the night of an air raid as a darkly romantic city of shadow and mystery. But the camera of the Selig World Library, No. 21, discloses only scenes of sunshine and mid-day beauty. Quite as interesting and attractive as the well-known Rialto and Plaza of St. Mark's are the small canals and by-ways of the residential section. These little glimpses into the more intimate parts of the city give an added charm to a fine picture.

Views of bridge building in the Philippines, of the famous Chinese temples, and some good pictures of the sponge industry in South America complete the reel.

STEEL PLATES, HOT AND COLD

The Pathe Exchange follows up its well taken picture of the making of steel rails with an equally good one showing how "steel plates for our merchant marine" are made. There are striking scenes at the mouth of the furnace, with the molten metal pouring out; of the steel fingers that lift the moulds from the ingots, and of the roller which in a few minutes flattens the thick ingot to a flat plate.

"It's a long worm dot don't turn over," says the captain, when, after one long day of torment at the hands of the Katzenjammer Kids (on reel with above), he allows his self-inflicted smile to vanish and lays violent hands on the offenders.

ANIMALS OUT OF STYLE

"Queerness," after all, is a point of view. Europe, Asia and the other big continents decided, some aeons ago, to change fashions in animals, and adopted horses, elephants, and such like sane and symmetrical creatures as standard types. But Australia had a different idea. She liked the conformation of her early inhabitants and has kept them even to the present day. Consequently, like the peg top trouser and the hoop skirt, they are "queer." Mr. Ditmars, however, seems to enjoy his collection of these island pets, and presents a number of them in "Animals of Australia" (Educational Films Corporation). A weird collection they are. There is the shingle backed lizard, who swallows eggs in the shell, taking the greatest pains to avoid breaking them; the rabbit-eared bandicoot, who can't decide whether it is a bird or a mammal; and the wiry-feathered emu and cassowary, first cousins of the ostrich, and suitable inhabitants of Goblin or Wonder Land.

FOR "EVERY OTHER THURSDAY"

What's the proportion of people with incomes over four thousand dollars? We forget, but it's a safe guess that a fairish number of even these, female and male, have to "do the dishes" at least once a week. So female and male, they are going to be interested in this latest aid to housework (Mutual Reel Life, No. 77) an inexpensive dishwasher that can be attached to any faucet, and which, by means of a revolving brush and a stream of hot water and suds, does the work easily, quickly, and hygienically.

It has been our lot to see a great many "industrials," good and bad. "The Banana Industry in Panama," in this issue of "Reel Life" is one of the very good ones, long enough to convey an intelligent understanding of the whole process, interesting and picturesque. Bananas are so universally eaten and enjoyed that pictures of the tropical land where they grow, of the patient donkeys and the probably equally patient natives who labor to bring them within our reach would have a universal appeal.

TEDDY, AND ANOTHER STRENUOUS ONE

Can't you imagine the Colonel, when he had finished excoriating the "Shadow-Huns" of the Senate (Universal Current Events, No. 22), turning with ready smile and hearty greeting to a patriot after his own heart, Mrs. Thomas Edwards, of Oberlin, Ohio, who at the age of ninety-four won, without assistance a prize offered women for successful farm work? A fine, cheerful old lady she is! Also, we know how Mr. Roosevelt would have rejoiced at the sight of British and American sailors joining in divine service together at Norfolk, Va., with the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes decorating the church portals.

An innovation which promises to be extremely interesting is the series of animated cartoons by leading newspaper artists of the country. Those represented in this week's issue are Seebel, of the Albany Knickerbocker Press; Brown, of the Chicago News, and Greene, of the New York Telegram.

A NOVELTY IN MUSIC LESSONS

Efficiency has invaded the arts. A violin lesson is no longer a tete a tete between pupil and teacher, but a matter of applied science and group instruction. From the interesting demonstration (Universal Screen Magazine, No. 44) of methods devised and perfected by Dr. Mitchell, of the New York University Summer School, we judge that excellent results are obtained. Dr. Mitchell's pupils learn position on a dummy bow and violin which do not permit of incorrect handling, and they practice holding the violin and bowing in a group. How quickly pupils gain proficiency is indicated by the page of difficult music flashed on the screen, which the pupils had mastered after only four weeks of instruction.

What we owe to skilled handicraft is seen in an interesting section on diamond cutting. Diamond dust and oil, applied by a wheel revolving 3,000 times a minute, transform the rough pebble into a 57-sided gem of double the value.

Van Cortlandt Park is a "Somewhere-in-America" for thousands of boys being trained in the rudiments of soldiering. It is interesting to watch them charging through bushes to the firing line and going through the rapid motions that accomplish the erection of shelter tents.

Fine lighting is a noteworthy feature of the section showing curious deep-sea fish in New York's Aquarium.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

"The Co-Respondent"

Produced by Ralph Ince from the stage play by Alice Leal Pollock and Rita Weiman and now running at the Broadway Theatre, New York.

"The Co-Respondent" will be rightly termed twice acceptable because it was accepted first by Jewel Productions and next by the Broadway Theatre.

Acceptance by The Broadway means that everything in valuing a picture that can be done has been done. The box-office then tells the story.

"The Co-Respondent" is an unqualified success. A Broadway Theatre success. Ask the box-office—read the papers.

The appealing character to whom Elaine Hammerstein adds her own natural lovableness is that of a girl agonizingly placed at the mercy of an outraged wife and an unscrupulous husband—while Duty insists on such exposure of her curious misfortune as Love will never tolerate.

"The Co-Respondent" is, in every sense of the word, a box-office play.

Military Booster Distributed by Triangle

Recruits for Training Camps to Be Reached by One-Reel Patriotic Feature, "Who Leads the National Army"—Backed by Camps

IN line with the general effort being made by the film industry to back up the Government in its recruiting and financial activities, the Triangle Distributing Corporation has volunteered to take charge of the distribution of the patriotic one-reel feature, "Who Leads the National Army." The picture was prepared under Triangle supervision in co-operation with the Military Training Camps Association of the United States, which is promoting the picture through a central board of chairmen and small units of half a million citizens throughout the country.

The picture authorized by the War Department shows the intensive training of the officers of the National Army from the time of registration on entering the camps until commissions are granted. It has no old war scenes or any material irrelevant to the actual present-day training and selection of officers. As a direct and forceful stimulant to recruiting, it is expected to exert a powerful influence in bringing men of maturity and real executive ability into the training camps all over the country.

The appeal to exhibitors in the rental of this picture is purely patriotic, the money derived from rentals to be used wholly in furthering co-operation with the Army. The theatre booker is thereby enabled to do a patriotic act without expense to himself or his employer simply by substituting this one-reel patriotic feature for some other one-reeler, such as a scenic, which he must book in order to fill his program. The Military Training Camps Association believes that it will not be difficult to find some patriotic citizen in each theatre community who is interested in the great work of the association and will be glad to pay the exhibitor's film rental, if necessary, in order to have others see the picture.

Forty-two prints of the negative have been made by Triangle for distribution to its exchanges. Artistic paper will be supplied with each print.

The release dates in different sections of the country are as follows: October 22, New York, Buffalo, Boston and New Haven exchanges; October 29, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh; November 5, Chicago and Milwaukee; November 12, Cleveland and Cincinnati; November 19, Detroit, Minneapols, Kansas City and St. Louis; November 26, Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas and Washington; December 3, Los Angeles, Seattle, San Francisco, Salt Lake City and Denver exchanges.

The week directly following the release date of each exchange will be known as Training Camp Week in all motion picture theatres of that territory. Within a few days members of the Military Training Camps Association all over the country will be busy interviewing exhibitors for the purpose of presenting the advantages of showing "Who Leads the National Army."

Three Pathe Stars Week of October 28

Mollie King, Pearl White and Harold Lloyd Expected to Make the Coin Jingle More Musically at the Box Office

MOLLIE KING, Pearl White and Harold Lloyd are the stars on Pathe's program for the week of October 28.

Miss King stars in the seventh episode of "The Seven Pearls," entitled "The False Pearl," with Creighton Hale and Leon Bary, produced by Astra. A crook named Stayne steals the pearl that Ilma and Harry have recovered. After thrilling adventures they get it back. Stayne and his pals pursue and trap Harry and Ilma on a little point of land on the edge of the Hudson. Harry sees some boys flying a big kite. He and Ilma grab the kite-string and plung into the Hudson. Stayne and one of his men jump into a little boat, raise the sail and pursue, guns in hand, and as the picture fades out, it is inevitable that they will catch the fugitives.

Pearl White is seen in the seventeenth episode of "The Fatal Ring," produced by Astra. By a miracle Pearl is saved when Carslake pulls the lever and the terrific weight of the pile driver falls upon the spot from which Tom has just snatched her. Foiled again, Carslake hatches a clever plot. The former partner of Pearl's father dies and his daughter Bessie, on her way to a finishing school in the East, stops to visit Pearl. In a mysterious manner Carslake is able to trace the Violet Diamond and in a series of thrilling incidents he finally succeeds in waylaying Pearl, Tom and Bessie on their return from a visit to a Chinese theatre in the slums. To Pearl's amazement, as Carslake's head appears in the door of the car, Bessie suddenly whips out a gun and speaking crisply and quietly says: "The Violet Diamond, quickly; no noise," and the film fades out.

Harold Lloyd is starred in "Rainbow Island," a one-reel Harold Lloyd comedy produced by the Rolin Film Corporation. Harold and Snub, ouf for a row, see a bottle floating in the water. Thinking that perhaps it contains a note from an heiress with pink ears and a flock of limousines, they open it, and the result is after a long row they reach Rainbow Island and are ready to see what makes it tick.

They are received in state by the King of the Cannibals. Life during the fifteen minutes that it takes to look at this picture is said to be just one laugh after another.

"The Mole-Cricket," "Springtime in the Riviera" are the two halves of the Pathe-colored split-reel educational and travel.

An International cartoon and educational Hearst-Pathe News No. 88 and No. 89 complete this program.

Loew Uses Elsie Ferguson Film to Open House

Marcus Loew selected Miss Ferguson's first Artcraft picture, "Barbary Sheep," as the feature film attraction of the opening of his new Victoria theatre, and that he chose wisely was indicated by the unusual amount of applause for a film accorded this production. Many celebrities of the motion picture world attended the opening of the new Victoria, and evening clothes were much in evidence. Among those present were Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Maurice Tourneur, director of "Barbary Sheep"; Albert Lowe, studio manager of the Famous Players Fort Lee plant; Lewis J. Selznick, C. F. Zittel, Eugen Zukor, Roscoe Arbuckle, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Joe and Nick Schenck, and other well-known filmites.

Vitagraph Presents Screened Novel October 22

Picturized from Novel of Frederick Upham Adams and Released as "The Bottom of the Well"—In Line with New Policy

ALBERT E. Smith, president of Greater Vitagraph announced this week that the widely read novel of Frederick Upham Adams, "The Bottom of the Well," has been screened for presentation as a Blue Ribbon Feature on October 22. The production of the Adams novel in pictures is in line with Greater Vitagraph's recently inaugurated policy of placing on the Blue Ribbon program screen versions of popular novels by Robert W. Chambers, Alfred Henry Lewis, Frederick Upham Adams, Earl Derr Biggers and Cyrus Townsend Brady.

"The Bottom of the Well," which is said to be replete with novel twists, combines romance, mystery and intrigue to make a photoplay of unflagging interest, culminating in a thrilling climax. It tells the story of a brilliant young lawyer, Stanley Deane, whose lineage is shrouded in mystery and who champions the cause of the oppressed workman in the mills owned by Buckingham, a despotic capitalist, with whose daughter the lawyer is in love. Through his activity in behalf of the workmen, the barrister gains Buckingham's enmity and the latter forbids his daughter's marriage to Deane after a series of cumulative dramatic events in which Buckingham is charged with his own murder, which brings forth the startling denouncement. Deane's cause is vindicated and he claims his reward.

The cast that interprets the numerous characters in "The Bottom of the Well" is aptly termed all-star and embraces such favorites as Evart Overton, last seen in "Soldiers of Chance"; Agnes Ayres, Adele de Garde, whose work in "Within the Law" elicited comment from trade and newspaper critics; Alice Terry, former Washington Square player, Ned Finley, the old Vitagraph favorite; Herbert Pryor, character actor, and Bigelow Cooke.

"The Bottom of the Well" was directed by John Robertson, who was responsible for the direction of "Intrigue," the Blue Ribbon feature starring Marc MacDermott and Bobby Connelly, the juvenile star and hero of the "Bobby Connelly Series."

The story opens in West Indian waters with the capture by a Britisher of an American smuggler. On board the smuggler is "Mascot," a youth presumed to be the son of Captain Stark. All escape but the boy, who is adopted by the military governor of Kingston, and later taken by him to London. Here, several years later, he meets Alice, the daughter of Amos Buckingham, wealthy mill owner of New York City.

Buckingham is having trouble with his workmen, when the story is taken up after a number of years. Violence is demanded by certain leaders of "The Well," a secret meeting place of the workmen. They are controlled, however, by a young lawyer, who sympathizes and works for them. He is "Mascot," now Stanley Deane. Buckingham hates him for his aid to the workmen and turns his daughter against him by telling of his mysterious parentage.

The workmen plan to blow up the Buckingham mansion and kill its master, who unknown to anyone has disguised himself and gained admittance to the well to study the real condition of the men. Just before the explosion Stanley rushes to the mansion and saves Alice but is himself caught in the ruins. Everything is unraveled, and Buckingham welcomes Stalney as his son-in-law.

"Home Defense" Victor Moore's Next

Following the release by Paramount of Thomas J. Gray's latest Klever Komedy based on the high cost of food, starring Victor Moore and entitled "The Cow Jumped Over the Moon," the comedian and his company will next appear in "Home Defense" released October 22nd. The comedy was directed by Chester M. Devonde. D. L. Don appears in the cast.

The plot is something like this: Change-your-Manor is a nice little town, and all the boys there are fond of a good game of cards. This "Indoor Sport" keeps many of them up until the wee hours of the morning and needless to say their wives grow tired of it. They soon begin to investigate and make for the Clubhouse, to find the dear husbands in the midst of a card game. They break it up in double quick time. The husbands meet the next night to devise an excuse for staying out late and decide to form the Change-your-Manor Unit of Home Defense. They figure this will give them an excuse to get out. It does, for the wives fall for it. This would all be very well if the wives hadn't also decided to form a "First Aid Unit." This formed, they decided to go to the Clubhouse to see the dear husbands drill. The husbands get wind of this and immediately start to get uniforms of any kind and anything that will do for guns. The picture ends up with a lot of excitement, but the husbands win out, through a clever ruse of Vic's.

Mutual Announces Next Chaplin Release

"The Adventurer," next of the series of Mutual-Chaplin specials, is ready for release on October 22. The first print of the two-reel comedy was received at the Mutual executive offices early last week. It had been pronounced by the studios as the masterpiece of Mutual's comedian.

Charlie makes his entrance through a pile of sand, garbed in the bestriped uniform of a convict. He creates amusement in his efforts to escape the pursuing guards and finally steals a bathing suit, in which he emerges at the beach just in time to rescue fair Edna's mama. As a reward he is taken to Edna's home where he enters society, but his identity is revealed by jealous Eric and the guards come after him.

Castle-Pathe Feature Released This Week

Much interest in the motion picture industry is concentrated upon the release on October 14 of the first of the new Pathe Plays, starring Mrs. Vernon Castle. Following what can be characterized as an optimistic reception on the part of reviewers, the picture is booking heavily according to reports from Pathe's thirty branches.

The story, by Francis Lynde, has a very strong love interest, the plot dealing with the scheme of an adventurer to maroon a young man and a young woman who are strangers in the wilds together in the hope that they will forfeit an inheritance of which neither is aware. The chief parts are played by Mrs. Castle, Elliott Dexter and Pell Trenton.

Gaumont Men Have Enlisted or Were Drafted

Every male employee of the Gaumont Company between the ages of twenty-one and thirty-one either enlisted or was drafted. Had it not been that some were refused because of dependents, or on account of minor physical troubles, the Flushing studios and laboratory would now be filled with strange faces.

John F. Diviny, head of the shipping department, was the latest man to be called. He is now at Yaphank, praying that his period of training will be short, as he is anxious to see the sunny shores of France.

Edward Guetlein, cameraman, is the only Gaumont employee of proper age who has not been drafted. This is a distinction which Mr. Guetlein does not enjoy. However, as he is a very proficient photographer, and has volunteered his services for the Signal Corps, it is expected that only a short time will elapse before he, too, will be called.

Ince Took Hand in "The Price Mark"

In producing "The Price Mark," which will be released by Paramount October 22, Thomas H. Ince devoted much time to personally supervising the work, though the direction was actually done by Roy Neill. The latter, owing to his having lived and worked in Egypt, was able to bring first-hand knowledge of the country to the scenes laid in Cairo.

There is every indication, based upon reports from the studio of Thomas H. Ince, where the picture, starring Dorothy Dalton, has just been completed, that "The Price Mark" will establish a record in photo dramatic offerings and even in the work of Miss Dalton herself.

Four Stars in Mutual Releases October 22

Charlie Chaplin, Olive Tell, William Russell and Helen Holmes Featured in the Line Up—Comedies Are Also Scheduled

FOUR stars in a variety of pictures make up Mutual's release schedule for the week of October 22, according to a late announcement of the program.

Charlie Chaplin's latest picture, "The Adventurer," a two-reel comedy, is released on Monday, October 22. Olive Tell is presented on the same day in the first of her features picturized from Charles Frohman's stage successes. "The Unforeseen" is the title of her subject. William Russell is the third star to be presented by Mutual on the same day, in "The Sea Master," a drama of the Barbary Coast and the sea.

The sixth episode of "The Lost Express," Helen Holmes's latest photo-novel, is scheduled for release also on October 22. The week's releases include as well two comedies, both of one-reel length, named "And Along Came Mary" and "Jerry's Soft Snap," and two topicals, Mutual Weekly and Reel Life.

Chaplin's forthcoming comedy, "The Adventurer," has been awaited for more than two months by exhibitors. The production is long overdue, owing to the invasion of the Lone Star studios by illness, and Mutual's branch offices have been besieged with inquiries for weeks as to the release date of this mirth maker.

Olive Tell, the well known Frohman stage star, makes her first appearance in Frohman stage plays in "The Unforeseen," a picture presentation of one of Charles Frohman's most successful productions. "The Unforeseen" was originally staged at Mr. Frohman's Empire theatre, New York, in 1903 and experienced a long successful run. Miss Tell is supported by a cast headed by David Powell. The picture was directed by John B. O'Brien. It is from the pen of Captain Robert Marshall.

"The Sea Master," the release of October 22 starring William Russell, provides the athletic hero of American-Mutual dramas with one of the sensational roles of his screen career. Russell is cast as the skipper of a Pacific coast tramp, of doubtful reputation with an ugly and hybrid crew. The opening scenes are laid in the notorious Barbary Coast, where the rough and ready skipper rescues a pretty girl from the clutches of a dive keeper. His efforts to make her his woman failing, he makes her his wife and it is not until the last scenes of the picture that he wins her trust and love.

The sixth chapter of "The Lost Express," the Mutual-Signal photonovel starring Helen Holmes, brings the thrilling mystery picture closer to its climax. Director McGowan has put a big wallop into "High Voltage" and Helen performs a number of her thrilling and death-defying stunts.

"And Along Came Mary" is the fourth of the new series of Strand-Mutual comedies starring Billie Rhodes, supported by Jay Belasco. It is scheduled for October 23. The Cub comedy release of the week, "Jerry's Soft Snap," is scheduled for October 25.

Mutual Weekly comes to the screen October 24 with pictures of the world's latest news, including scenes among the American troops in France. "Reel Life," the weekly film magazine, carries the following subjects: "Queer Trees in Trinidad," "How the American Traveler is Fed," "High Cost of Living Wins the Race" and an animated drawing from life, entitled "The Apparel and Not the Man Guilty."

Alice Brady Feature on November 5

"A Maid of Belgium" is the new World-Picture Brady-Made, in which Alice Brady is the star and which is announced for release November 5. It is also announced that the feature will be seen by prerelease immediately.

There are some war scenes in this drama which are said to be very realistic, showing the ruthless battering down of a Belgian village by an invading army.

That Small Bundle of Exhilaration, Ann Pennington, is Scheduled for a New Paramount Play, "The Antics of Ann."

Triangle Reissues Play to Good Business

Like old wine, films improve with age, at least in the opinion of the Triangle Distributing Corporation concerning its series of Wm. S. Hart and Douglas Fairbanks reissues recently announced for distribution.

Last week H. E. Lotz, manager of the Triangle exchange in Buffalo, sent the following wire to General Manager Freeman: "Strand theatre here playing to capacity on the first Fairbanks reissue. Called on them at seven-thirty and they had them packed to the street. Believe Triangle Fairbanks pictures draw better now than when first released."

Similar reports from other exchanges, Triangle thinks, indicate that the Hart and Fairbanks Triangle pictures are playing to S. R. O. wherever they are booked.

On October 21 "Hell's Hinges," one of Hart's most successful plays under the Triangle banner, will be released again. Included in the cast is Louise Glaum, whose siren wiles are responsible for the downfall of a minister in a Western mining camp. Hart as the "bad man" of the community, has ample chance to display the nerve and repressed emotion which have made him famous.

Olive Thomas Feature Released November 11

"Indiscreet Corinne," the Triangle production which was held up a few days because an ulcerated tooth was bothering Olive Thomas, the star of the feature, has been completed by Director Jack Dillon. It has been announced that the picture will be released November 11. This is Miss Thomas's fourth motion picture under the Triangle management.

Universal Handles English Film in America

Universal has arranged with the Trans-Atlantic Film Company, Ltd., of London, to handle in America "Boy Scouts—Be Prepared," the eight-reel production devoted to the work of the huge army of wide-awake English Boys headed by Lieut.-General Sir Robert Baden-Powell, who are accomplishing so much in the way of home defense and auxiliary service while their relatives are at the front.

Throughout the United Kingdom the production is being released in eight single-reel episodes. It is backed by the entire membership of the Boy Scouts Association. Every boy in this huge organization has been enlisted in the movement to put the series over with flying colors, and as a result exhibitors are reporting good business.

Oriental Atmosphere and a Certain Refined Nudeness are Rife in Theda Bara's "Cleopatra," Soon to Be Released by Fox

Lowry Feature Hailed as Good War Picture

"For the Freedom of the World," Ira M. Lowry's production, which is being released through Goldwyn Distributing Corporation offices, is said to come closer to showing the actual conditions of European warfare than any of the productions ever achieved for the screen.

The several thousands of persons who last week in New York witnessed the parade of 30,000 women nurses in the Red Cross march down Fifth avenue will in "For the Freedom of the World" see the Red Cross nurses under fire, at work in the rear of the battle line, in the field and base hospitals, and fulfilling their errands of mercy under conditions exactly similar to those that confront them in battle.

Trade prints of this production already have been inspected and shipped to Goldwyn Distributing offices in North America and special exhibitor showings will be held next week to facilitate the prompt booking of this war panorama.

New "Ham and Bud" Comedies Still Pleasing

The new series of Kalem's "Ham and Bud" comedies, the first of which have been released by General Film Company, continue to strike a popular chord with the fans. Lloyd Hamilton is doing some of the best work in his three years as a star in comedy pictures, and the same applies to his team-mate, "Bud" Duncan. Ethel Teare and Henry Murdock, also in this series, are demonstrating why they are popular.

The first of the new "Ham and Bud" one-reel comedies released this month is "Politics in Pumpkin Center," which marks the entry of the two comedians into the field of politics for the first time. Other subjects in the current series are: "The Boot and the Loot," "A Whirlwind of Whiskers," "The Onion Magnate's Revenge" and "The Bathtub Bandit." They are from selected scenarios and are handled by two of the best directors in the Los Angeles film colony.

Hoyt Engaged to Cast for Triangle

Arthur Hoyt, the actor, stage manager and director, who has been identified with the profession sixteen years, has been engaged as casting director at the Triangle Film Corporation's Culver City studio. He has been in the motion picture end of the business about eighteen months, having been featured recently in several productions.

While on the legitimate stage Hoyt was identified with Viola Allen, Eleanor Robson, Henry Dixey and Henry Kolker.

Eileen Dennes, Who Appeared in the Russian Ballet, is in the Cast of "The Unforeseen," an Empire All-Star-Mutual Production

Fox's Aladdin Closes Three Weeks at Globe

"Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," William Fox's picturization of the Arabian Nights tale, last week closed a very successful three weeks' engagement at the Globe theatre, New York. The filmed Aladdin was pronounced one of the most thrilling stories ever screened, and the Fox kiddies received their full share of appreciation.

New Falcon Feature Released by General

Action of the thrilling sort, which has made the Falcon Features released by the General Film Company popular with filmdom, is promised in "The Clean Gun," the current release. It is described as a mystery story, with Kathleen Kirkham, the Falcon star, appearing to excellent advantage in the four reels.

"The Clean Gun," written by Barr Moses, made its appearance as a story in magazine form, and has been widely read. The picturization will no doubt be looked forward to with interest by the majority of film fans who read the most interesting books and magazines.

Miss Kirkham's work as Mattie is said to be unusually good in "The Clean Gun." She is supported by Stanley J. Preston, Charles Edler and Louise Sothern, and other well-known players are also to appear.

Essanay-Ade Fables in Slang Very Popular

The Essanay Ade Fables in Slang, released through General Film Company, continue to be among the most popular series of two-reel subjects. The demand for the entire series of twelve subjects has been very great. One of the most important bookings of the week was with the Maryland theatre, at Baltimore, a B. F. Keith house, which will feature each of the series for one week beginning October 15.

Alma Reubens in Triangle Drama October 21

"Cassidy," Featuring Dick Rosson in Larry Evans' Story, Also Released Same Week—Keystone Comedy Is Not Forgotten

THE Triangle program for October 21 will carry two features which should prove to be good drawing cards, one a western play featuring Alma Ruebens, with Charles Gunn, and the other an adaptation of one of Larry Evans's Saturday Evening Post stories with Dick Rosson in the title role.

How a dainty sprite of a cabaret singer is forced by her ne'er-do-well husband to go out to a western mining camp to fill an engagement, gives the opening scenes of "The Firefly of Tough Luck" a touch of human interest which is sustained throughout the ensuing action. Leaving a private train which carried him westward with a party of joy-larking companions, Danny Ward (Charles Gunn) stumbles upon the Firefly (Alma Ruebens) in the desert, near Baxter City, a boom town long past the heyday of its glory, and claiming the faith of only one citizen, its founder, an eccentric character portrayed by Walt Whitman. The old man's hopes are given a sudden impetus by the discovery of pay ore nearby, and with the location of a missing vein, he and his companion become the nucleus of a revived settlement. Just as Danny's love ripens into a proposal of marriage, the worthless husband appears; but by his own self-interest the man is disposed of in a way which makes the final fade-away a satisfactory conclusion to the plot.

In the second release of the week, "Cassidy," an unusual study of derelict types is made. The youth, Cassidy, arrives in San Francisco hungry and broke, a sorry picture of discouragement. Realizing that his health is gone, he attempts to rob the house of the district attorney in order to make his way back home to New York. He is caught, and by an unexpected turn in events, is permitted to save the attorney's daughter from gangsters in return for a freedom which soon liberates his spirit to the "girl back home." Frank Currier, Pauline Curley and Mac Alexander are members of the supporting cast.

The double life of the city editor of a newspaper by day who assumes the role of "Swami Swobodi," crystal gazer, by night to foil his wife and the public, is the plot of "A Hindu Hoodoo," the two-reel Keystone Comedy of the week in which George Binns, Maude Wayne and Dale Fuller lead the merry-making.

"His Busy Day" and "A Modern Sherlock" will also be released October 21 as one-reel Triangle Komedies on the regular program.

"Magda" at the Rialto, New York

"Magda," Clara Kimball Young's first Select Picture, was presented at the Rialto theatre the week beginning Oct. 7. S. L. Rothapfel signed a contract giving him the initial presentation in New York of all the pictures made by Clara Kimball Young and her own company in her series to be distributed by Select Pictures. There are to be eight of these productions during the coming year. Under this contract the patrons of this house will be the first in New York to see all of the new Clara Kimball Young productions.

"Magda" was directed by Emile Chautard, and Miss Young is supported by a capable cast. Her leading man is Thomas Holding, whose work with Pauline Frederick won him distinction, and the part of Major Shubert, Magda's father, is played by Miss Young's own father, Edward Kimball.

Fox Gets Many Sunshine Comedies Ready for Release

THE several companies making Sunshine comedies for William Fox, under the direction of Henry Lehrman, have, after months of work, prepared for release a large group of what William Fox expects will be voted among the best laugh-provokers ever made. Machinery worth into the thousands of dollars and manufactured especially for the Fox studios, was installed on the big lot at Hollywood to help the players' quest for the elusive laugh.

It is announced that the three comedies shown at the Globe theatre in New York as curtain-raisers for "Jack and the Beanstalk," "The Spy" and "Aladdin and His Wonderful Lamp" will be the first releases. They are: "Wedding Bells and Roaring Lions," released November 11; "A Milk-fed Vamp," on November 18, and "His Smashing Career," on November 9.

Each of this group of photoplays evoked appreciation when they were exhibited at the Globe because of the novelty and the ingenuity of the scores of "stunts" they had. As much care has been taken with the two-reel subjects as is devoted to the five or six-thousand-foot Fox screen drama.

"It is needless to cite the tremendous cost of these comedies," says Mr. Fox. "The expense in making them is almost incredible. A laugh is one of the most precious things in the film world, and we use as much celluloid in getting them as we do the longer dramatic subjects. I am confident that Sunshine Comedies will establish themselves a leader in their particular field."

Acting on William Fox's instructions, Henry Lehrman, who is supervising the entire output of the comedy productions, has engaged a dozen of the chief figures in the realm of screen comedy. The first of these to be announced are Gloria Swanson and Bobbie Vernon.

Tom Mix, the cowboy, who has been added to the roster of stars in Fox exclusive features, made one of the comedies in addition to the three named now awaiting distribution. In the cast are Gertrude Selby, Charles Conklin, Victor Potel, Frank Hayes and Tom Wilson.

Mae Murray on Bluebird Program, Middle of November

Mae Murray, Bluebird

EXHIBITORS of Bluebird will no doubt be interested in the announcement that the expected arrival of Mae Murray, as a Bluebird star, eventuates Nov. 12. Carmel Myers, another star new to the series, will be introduced a week earlier, when Bluebird's "star-cycle" gets under way. Franklyn Farnum and Ruth Clifford also contribute to the November offerings and the "cycle" will be completed when Dorothy Phillips and Violet Mersereau appear in December. Hereafter every Bluebird star will contribute to the series at stated intervals of six weeks, in plays especially selected to fit the individual star.

Carmel Myer's offering, November 5, will be "The Lash of Power," a good, old-fashioned melodrama. Her leading man will be Kenneth Harlan. Harry Solter directed the presentation from J. Grubb Alexander's story and Fred Myton's scenario.

Mae Murray will take her place among Bluebirders November 12 in "Princess Virtue" directed by Robert Z. Leonard, who directed Miss Murray in Lasky features whence she comes in transference of her artistry to Bluebirds. "Princess Virtue" was created, in scenario form, by Fred Myton from Louise Winter's magazine story. Wheeler Oakman will be her leading man.

Bluebird No. 100 will be distributed November 19 on the regular program. Ruth Clifford is its star and its title is "The Savage." Before this feature reaches the series it will be exhibited on prerelease at the Broadway theatre, New York, starting the Bluebird season at that theatre. Monroe Salisbury will be Miss Clifford's leading man in this latest of Rupert Julian productions.

The November issues will be completed Thanksgiving week in the appearances of Franklyn Farnum, with Claire Du Brey and Rosemary Theby his leading supporters, in "The Winged Mystery," a comedy drama based on O. D. Stuart's story. William Parker prepared the scenario and Joseph De Grasse directed the offering.

It is likely that Franklyn Farnum, in Joseph De Grasse's production of "The Winged Mystery," will be the third Bluebird to be exhibited at the Broadway Theatre, New York, in the season of full-week showing that begins there October 21, with the prerelease of "The Savage." Ruth Clifford will be star of the opening attraction, produced by Rupert Julian and featuring Monroe Salisbury as leading man. The second offering will be Mae Murray, in Princess Virtue," when the star will be introduced to the Bluebird flock.

Lebensberger Sells for Famous Players

A. C. Lebensberger has joined the sales force of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., traveling out of Cleveland.

New Director Introduced in "Vita" Comedy

Greater Vitagraph's newest Big "V" comedy, "Riffraff and Rivalry," released on October 15th, introduces a new director in the person of Graham Baker, who formerly confined his time to writing the stories. Baker, besides his directorial activities, will also continue as the author of these short reel subjects, he being responsible for the script of "Riffraff and Rivalry."

The Big "V" riot squad, which has become one of the popular comedy institutions on the screen and which includes Earle Montgomery, Joe Rock and Pietro Aramondo, is again on hand with its display of funny acrobatic antics.

"Riffraff and Rivalry" is a travesty on the old time Western melodrama, with the familiar town bully and general cut-up whose ability to be mean amounts almost to genius. It tells of Snakebite Gideon, who is a blot on the fair name of his home town which boasts of a beanery run by sisters, remarkable examples of nature's capriciousness, in that one is as pretty as the other is homely. The despicable Snakebite delights in making Humble Jake the object of his meanness, and Jake, being of docile disposition, submits. Word reaches the town that the homely sister has been left a large inheritance with the stipulation that she acquire a better half before one o'clock. Gideon sees a chance to live in clover for the rest of his life, but when he tries to find his self-annexed spouse, he learns that she has taken Humble Jake off to a picnic in the woods. From this point forward the story gathers speed and in the end old shoes and rice fly thick and fast.

Hart-Ince Picture Is Booking Very Well

At the New York headquarters of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation last week, Walter E. Greene, president of that concern, expressed satisfaction over the manner in which the initial William S. Hart production, "The Narrow Trail," is booking all over the conutry. "Reports from our exchanges on the large number of bookings on the first Hart-Ince photoplay prove the popularity of this star," said Mr. Greene. "In William S. Hart, Artcraft offers another star of rare drawing powers from a box-office standpoint, which fact is readily appreciated by exhibitors everywhere in the country.

"Bill Hart is a typical American character and his popularity among American people comes as a direct appreciation, on their part, of his talent. Although he is a 'bad man' on the screen, he is one of the best liked characters in the motion picture art. William S. Hart in photoplays that are on par with the Artcraft standard affords the exhibitor a ten-strike in the way of returns. Never before has he appeared in a vehicle more closely identified with his own particular personality than 'The Narrow Trail.' This, perhaps, is due to the fact that he wrote the story himself. No one is better acquainted with Bill Hart's best talents than the popular star himself, so it is only natural to suppose that a photoplay from his own pen will present to best advantage the accomplishments of this beloved actor."

Dorothy Phillips is Starred in the Newest Jewel Production, "The Boss of Powderville"

Two Single Reels from Gaumont Week of October 29

THE first single-reel produced by the Gaumont Company for the Mutual program for the week of October 29 is No. 148 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, which will be released on Wednesday, October 31. Like its predecessors, this number of the Weekly will contain only the latest happenings of interest to the entire country. It will, of course, contain a section devoted to pictures, taken by staff photographers of our soldiers.

The other reel will be the Mutual film magazine, "Reel Life," No. 79, of which will be released on Thursday, November 1. "Building Our Wooden Fleet," which was taken in co-operation with the Southern Pine Association, should go far towards assuring the public that our transportation problem is solved. Southern sawmills paid little attention to the controversy as to whether we should build steel or wooden ships, but ran night and day, and the result is that they are far in advance of the rate promised, and are now ready to complete one wooden ship every working day. As Germany is now sinking only one ship every second or third day, it will readily be seen that if other sections of the country are building in like proportion, the submarine menace is about ended.

The other subject of timely interest is "Important Industries of Argentina." This Southern republic ranks second only to the United States in its production of cattle and wheat, and it is now prepared to do its part towards supplying the nations which will soon be its allies in the war against Germany.

Shorter, but greatly entertaining subjects, describe "A Dry Land Periscope," which will enable a boy to see any ball game, no matter how high the fence; "An Unusual Foster Mother," a cat which mothers chicks, and "Had Your Mining Stock Panned Out," an animated drawing from the humorous weekly, "Life."

Artcraft Has Banner Program for November

Four Super-Attractions, with Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart and Elsie Ferguson, Are Announced—Record Array

THE largest number of feature productions for release in one month since the inception of the company are scheduled by Artcraft for November in an announcement made last week by Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft Pictures Corporation. This schedule, which discloses the banner month for Artcraft, includes as stars Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart and Elsie Ferguson, in features which are said to give them ample opportunities to display to the fullest advantage their respective arts and powers on the screen.

The first release will be Mary Pickford in her new production, "The Little Princess." Staged under the direction of Marshall Neilan, this subject, as in the cases of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and "A Poor Little Rich Girl," is an adaptation from a book and play affording Miss Pickford another child part similar to those in the Kate Douglas Wiggin and Eleanor Gates novels. "The Little Princess" was written for both the book and the stage by Frances Hodgson Burnett, author of many stories bearing on child life.

The second Artcraft release in November will be Elsie Ferguson's new screen play following "Barbary Sheep" and staged by Maurice Tourneur, "The Rise of Jennie Cushing." This is Miss Ferguson's second motion picture for Artcraft and is also an adaptation of a popular book. As Jennie Cushing, the Artcraft star appears in a role entirely different from her first screen portrayal.

Douglas Fairbanks' contribution to Artcraft's November schedule is "Reaching for the Moon." This photoplay, it is announced, presents another original idea in the way of screen stories and is now being staged under the direction of John Emerson. It was for this picture that the entire Fairbanks producing organization crossed and recrossed the continent between Los Angeles and New York, in order to spend two days filming scenes in the Eastern metropolis. Eileen Percy again appears opposite Douglas in this photoplay.

William S. Hart, in his second Artcraft picture, "The Silent Man," is the fourth November release now being staged in California under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Hart's new production is from the pen of Charles Kenyon. It is a story of the big Western country, providing the star with the role of a miner who has prospected the vast desert for years. As "Silent" Budd Marr, Mr. Hart presents another famous type of the West which it is expected will go down as a classic in film history. In this film Vola Vale appears opposite the star.

In speaking of Artcraft's November array, Mr. Greene said: "This is the first time in the history of Artcraft that we have scheduled for release in one month four super-attractions. Three big stars in master plays per month has been our record heretofore, but in November we give the exhibitor four of the most powerful box office attractions ever released, all in one month.

Hearst-Pathe News Brings Cantonments to the Theatre

UNDER the slogan of "See Your Boy In the Army," the Hearst-Pathe News has announced its plan to show motion pictures of all National Guard and National Army cantonments.

There are more than two million homes throughout the United States that have some relative, husband, son or brother in the military service. As the new contingents of the National Army are called from their homes this number will constantly increase. These pictures, therefore, have an appeal to the hundred million people throughout the United States, the greater part of whom will be directly affected if the war should continue any length of time.

According to the plan of the Hearst-Pathe News, every motion picture theatre that is a subscriber to this film will be enabled to show its patrons pictures of the various cantonment camps to which the boys from their locality have been sent, the conditions under which they are living, and the training which they are undergoing.

With the co-operation of the Committee on Public Information the work of gathering this film was undertaken several weeks ago and cameramen were dispatched to every cantonment camp in the country. This work is now practically completed and the films will be released in the regular editions of the Hearst-Pathe News, each exchange receiving prints that will contain pictures of only the cantonment camps in which the theatres they serve would be interested. This will give the New York theatres an opportunity of showing pictures of the New York boys at Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C., while Cleveland and Cincinnati theatres will show the pictures of the boys at Camp Sheridan, Montgomery, Ala.

All pictures of the National Guard cantonments will be shown in the Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 84 and 86, while the pictures of the National Army cantonments will be shown in Nos. 91 and 93.

"Outcast" Brings Letters from Exhibitors

"Outcast," the first of the Charles Frohman plays in motion pictures, and released by the Mutual Film Corporation, appears to be leaving a trail of broken box office records across the continent, according to reports from the offices of Mutual's publicity department this week.

It is claimed that the first of the Frohman productions has set new records in a score of theatres. Exhibitors are writing to Mutual in praise of the picture.

Nell Shipman Returns to Greater Vitagraph

Nell Shipman, star of several Blue Ribbon features, has returned to the Greater Vitagraph fold and soon will be seen in five-reel features. She has already begun work on her first one, the name of which has not been announced.

Miss Shipman, who is the author of many photo-dramas, was the star of "God's Country and the Woman," the special Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature adapted from the story of the Hudson Bay region by James Oliver Curwood, and "Through the Wall." She appeared in other features during her career with Vitagraph and also has been featured in Fox and Lasky productions, having been leading woman for Lou-Tellegen while with the latter organization.

Pauline Curley with Harold Lockwood

Pauline Curley has been engaged by Fred J. Balshofer as leading support to Harold Lockwood, Metro star, in the forthcoming Metro-Yorke production, "Love Me For Myself Alone," a screen version of Francis Perry Elliott's story of the same name. She will have the part of the "wonder girl," Beatrice Forsythe.

Miss Curley recently won approval as the Princess Irene in the Brenon production, "The Fall of the Romanoffs." She has also appeared in numerous Triangle, Fox, Famous Players, Pathe, Reliance, and Pilot features.

Rolin Studios on Coast Make Improvements

Extensive improvements are under way in the Rolin studios at Los Angeles in preparation for the heavy program of Pathe comedies to be taken during the Winter season. Every detail to utilize light has been attended to, and installations are being made for photographing at night.

Second Castle-Pathe Selected from Book

Carolyn Wells, novelist, wrote the book from which the second of the Mrs. Vernon Castle's Pathe plays, "The Mark of Cain," was adapted. This fact, together with that of Antonio Moreno being the male lead to a star so well known as Mrs. Castle, gives special interest to the play. George Fitzmaurice directed the feature, which is in five parts. To Mr. Fitzmaurice's credit are such plays as "New York," "Via Wireless," "At Bay," "Kick In," "The Hunting of the Hawk" and "The On-the-Square Girl."

Vitagraph Changes November 26 Release

Greater Vitagraph announces this week that "Who Goes There," picturized from a story by Robert W. Chambers, will be released on Nov. 26, instead of "The Tenderfoot," the second Wolfville story previously scheduled for that date. In making the change, Vitagraph declares that "Who Goes There" is substituted because of its special appeal and timeliness. "The Tenderfoot" will be released one week later, Dec. 3, it is announced.

"Who Goes There" is a love story set in devastated Belgium, but there is a total absence of battle scenes. Harry Morey is featured, supported by Corinne Griffith, and the cast includes Mary Maurice, Anne Brody and Arthur Donaldson.

This picture was produced to be released as a super-feature, but in line with the Vitagraph policy of putting special features on its regular program at intervals, it will go out as a regular Blue Ribbon feature.

Nazimova Has Good Support in New Feature

Nazimova, who is now working on her first Metro picture, "God's Message," adapted by Ethel Browning Miller from the story, "A Rose-Bush of a Thousand Years," under the direction of George D. Baker, is supported by what is said to be a most capable cast.

Charles Bryant is her leading man, and will play the role of Paul Granville, an American artist. Mr. Bryant was a member of the cast of "War Brides" with Nazimova in both the vaudeville and motion picture versions. Frank Currier will portray the Prior of the Monastery. He has played in many Metro pictures, recently supporting Emily Stevens in her forthcoming production, "Outwitted," and Emmy Wehlen in "The Trail of the Shadow." Bigelow Cooper, for years a player in Edison photoplays, will be seen as De Roche. Fra Augustin, a character role, is in the hands of John Sturgeon. Albert Hall, who plays Pierre, has appeared on the screen for World, Famous-Players, Biograph and Pathe. Mestaire, the inn-keeper, is played by Phillip Sandford and Dave Turner plays the gate-keeper at the monastery.

Mooney Trial Feature of Mutual Weekly

The widely discussed Mooney case, in which the labor man was convicted for the alleged Preparedness Day bomb crime in San Francisco, and which has caused President Wilson to order an inquiry into the trial and conviction, is announced as a feature of the Mutual Weekly Number 146, released October 15. In this subject all the principals in the case, which has become of international interest, are shown, due to some clever and skillful work on the part of a Gaumont cameraman.

The reel is rounded out with news of a war nature, showing scenes at Camp Kearney, a Western cantonment, and with scenes of other topics having more than passing news interest.

Emmy Wehlen Completes Work on "The Outsider"

Emmy Wehlen, Metro star, has completed work on her forthcoming Metro wonderplay, "The Outsider," a six-act production adapted by Charles A. Taylor from the novel, "Nobody," by Louis Joseph Vance. "The Outsider" is said to provide Miss Wehlen with a role suited to her personality, and is filled with color and action. It is presented by B. A. Rolfe. William C. Dowlan directed. This will be his second offering on the Metro program, the first being "Somewhere in America."

In the new production, which will have an early release, Miss Wehlen plays Sally Manvers, a shop-girl who is tired of life as she and her two poverty-stricken girl friends have to live it. Chance takes her into a house full of beautiful and expensive things. Its occupants are away for the Summer. The forlorn girl treats herself to the luxury of a bath in the marble bathroom, puts on some of the handsome clothes she finds in a bardrobe, and then things begin to happen with power and rapidity, and keep on happening right through the picture.

Three leading men support Miss Wehlen in "The Outsider." These are Herbert Heyes, Harry Benham and Jules Raucourt. Mr. Heyes plays the Western millionaire, one of "nature's noblemen," and the other two men have the parts of society adventurers.

Florence Short has the role of an up-to-the-minute adventuress. Ilean Hume, a Metro favorite, plays a girl artist, and Virginia Palmer has the sympathetic role of Mrs. Gosnold, a society leader. Mr. Dowlan has been assisted in the direction of the picture by Benjamin S. Kutler.

Edith Storey's Subject Is Now Under Way

Edith Storey's second starring vehicle under the Metro banner, "The Legion of Death," by June Mathis, is now in the course of production at the West Coast studios in Hollywood, under the direction of Tod Browning, who guided her initial Metro picture. The production is a special feature, with settings of great size.

Charles Gerard, Fred Malatesta and Pomeroy Cannon are the other leading members of the cast. Hundreds of extras will be used in the ensemble and battle scenes.

William Fox Announces New Female Star

William Fox this week announced the acquisition of a new female star, direct—or nearly direct—from Russia.

The star's name is Mme. Markova—given name Sonia—and she has convinced Mr. Fox that she has personality and can act. She has been in the United States but a few months, but it is expected that her work will win immediate favor among the patrons who in the past have appreciated Mr. Fox's screen productions.

The Fox publicity department has placed Mme. Markova's age at twenty-one years, and states that she is in this country as a result of the recent Russian revolution.

Helen Gibson Leads Universal Program October 22

HELEN GIBSON in "The End of the Run," a Gold Seal railroad drama, is scheduled to open the week's Universal program on October 23. In addition to this feature the program will include a Nestor comedy, Universal Animated Weekly, a drama with Lena Baskette, a Victor comedy and a Joker comedy, a two-reel Bison and the second episode of "The Red Ace."

The story in which Helen Gibson is featured was written by T. Shelley Sutton and was prepared for the screen by George Hively. J. D. Davis directed the production and Val Paul, O. C. Jackson and George Williams are prominent in the cast. One of the scenes which promises thrills is when the heroine sets out on horseback to overtake a train and capture a brakeman who does the villainous stunts in the picture.

The Nestor comedy is called "A Fire Escape Finish," and was written by Fred Palmer, directed by Harry Edwards, and features Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. The release date is set for October 23. The picture is described as being a riotous story of an elopement, culminating in a wedding on a fire escape while the jealous rival dangles from the ladder.

Universal Animated Weekly, No. 95, is released October 24th. That is also the release date of a two-reel L-Ko comedy, "Fat and Furious," directed by Vin Moore and supervised by J. G. Blystone. Merta Sterling and Al Forbes are the leading fun makers.

Lena Baskette is the star of the feature for October 25th. "Little Marian's Triumph" is the title of the play in which she will appear. Lena is supported by many experienced players, including Fred Montague, Lydia Yeamans Titus and Walter Belasco. On this same day William Franey and Gale Henry will romp through a Joker comedy entitled "The Tightwad," written by Tom Gibson and Allen Curtis. Gale Henry as the dutiful wife gives her penny-pinching spouse an object lesson in loosening up that should be good for many hearty guffaws.

On Friday, October 26th, Henry Murdock and Mildred Davis will appear in a Victor comedy of errors known as "What'll We Do With Uncle?" written by King Vidor and directed by W. W. Beaudin. The 42d issue of the Screen Magazine will make its appearance on the same date.

Max Asher and Gladys Tennyson are the featured players of "A Wise Dummy," the Joker comedy to be released October 27th. The 24th issue of Current Events, devoted to the latest happenings in the world of work and play, is also scheduled for release on that date.

Neal Hart and Vivian Rich will co-star in a two-reel Bison drama called "The Getaway," written by Alice McGowan and Harriet B. Brandner and directed by George Cochrane. During the week, the second episode of "The Red Ace," Universal's outdoor mystery serial, will be shown in theatres outside of Greater New York entitled "The Lure of the Unattainable."

Rolin Finishes "Bashful" for Pathe Program

Rolin comedies have just completed a one-reel comedy, entitled "Bashful." It was directed by Alf Goulding and is regarded as one of the best efforts of this clever director. Harold Lloyd and Bebe Daniels are featured with other favorites of the Rolin comedies, including Harry Pollard in the cast. It has been completed for Pathe program.

Pathe Offers Trio of Good Things in New Programs

IN "Lonesome Luke from London to Laramie," a two-reel comedy to be released on October 21st, "Rainbow Island," a one-reel Rolin, on October 28th, and "Lonesome Luke in Love, Laughs and Lather," a two-reel comedy for November 4th, Pathe offers to exhibitors the comedians Harold Lloyd, "Snub" Pollard and Bebe Daniels in three comedies that, it is said, are sure to please every exhibitor and tickle his public.

"Lonesome Luke from London to Laramie" shows Lloyd as the valet to an English Lord, played by "Snub" Pollard. The pair arrive in the untamed West and become very suddenly initiated into the ways of sundry barbarous cowboys, of bucking bronchos and primitive ways of living.

"Rainbow Island" takes the fun makers to the South Sea Islands, where they run afoul of various and sundry brown-skinned natives in deshabille. They escape the perils of the meat pot only to fall afoul of husband-seeking females of peculiar unattractiveness. Their efforts to escape this new and hardly less to be feared danger are bound to produce many laughs.

"Lonesome Luke in Love, Laughs and Lather" shows Lloyd in the new and comical role of a barber. Every man, unless he cuts his own hair and shaves himself, will find this burlesque on a business with which he is in almost daily contact laughable in the extreme. Harold Lloyd shines as the dandified barber, who is less a slave to his profession than he is to the beauty of womankind.

Cabanne to Direct Own Company Beginning November 1

CHRISTY CABANNE, of the Metro directing staff, has branched out into the producing end of the industry, with the formation of a new company to make photoplays, and, beginning about November 1, will start a production work on the initial photoplay of the organization.

The new producing company is known as the Zenith Film Corporation, and has been incorporated under the laws of Delaware. The personnel of the officials of the company is J. Sanford Harger, president; William Christy Cabanne, vice-president; W. John Baird, treasurer, and Robert J. Huntington, secretary.

Executive offices have been opened in New York, and announcement has been made that it is the intention of the officials to produce at least six features of five to eight reels each year. About November 1 production work will begin on "America's Mission," the title of which was suggested by Samuel Gompers, it is said. The story was written by William Atherton Dupuy, now in the service of the United States. It is also understood that the Zenith organization will have the co-operation of certain Government officials in making the production.

Mr. Cabanne wrote and directed "The Slacker" and "Draft 258" for Metro.

Seventh Episode of "Seven Pearls"

The seventh episide of Pathe's "The Seven Pearls" is called "The False Pearl," and in it Ilma, the heroine of the story, portrayed by Mollie King, and the hero, Harry Drake, played by Creighton Hale, continue to find adventure in the search for the pearls.

Pioneer Days in Hart Feature

In "The Narrow Trail," the first Thomas H. Ince production for Artcraft, starring William S. Hart, some interesting episodes of early pioneer days in California are promised. These give intimate glimpses of a phase of American life that has completely passed away.

Current Essanay Releases Look Good to Box Office

CURRENT Essanay productions, released on the Perfection Pictures program through the George Kleine exchanges, include comedy-dramas starring Taylor Holmes, Bryant Washburn, Virginia Valli, Helen Ferguson and little Mary McAlister, and a new George Ade fable.

The comedy-dramas, entitled, "Fools for Luck," "The Fibbers," and "Young Mother Hubbard," contain the two predominating human appeals.

"The Fibbers," in which Mr. Washburn and Miss Valli play the leading roles, deals with the adventures of a young married couple, and is full of amusing situations. At the same time, the picture carries a plot so strong that it is promised the interest of the spectator will be held until the last foot of film.

Taylor Holmes and Helen Ferguson have made a good screen production of Kennett Harris' story, "Talismans," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, the title on the screen being "Fools for Luck."

"Young Mother Hubbard" tugs at the heart strings through its dramatic interpretation of the plight of four little orphans, abandoned by their stepfather. Little Mary McAlister plays the role of little mother to the three other orphans. While the picture is of the type that brings tears, it is by no means a gloomy one, and contains many a laugh, timed to relieve the sadder phases of the story.

The Ade fable should be of especial interest to movie fans, for it deals with movie fans themselves. The picture, "The Fable of the Film Fed Family," unfolds the story of a family too proud to visit the movies. They spent all their money on high-priced theatres. Then, one by one, they began to sneak to the movies. They meet each other in the movie theatre, and finally admit that they were wrong in ever condemning the screen as beneath them.

World Series Scenes in Universal Film

A record of the opening games of the world series baseball championship in Chicago, October 6 and 7, is the outstanding feature of the 93rd issue of the Universal Animated Weekly. It was announced by Universal this week that about twenty-eight scenes are shown in this reel, including a large percentage of the crucial plays.

Felsch's fatal homer, which put the first game on ice for the White Sox; George Burns, singling twice as the lead-off man for the Giants, and Lew McCarthy's injury at the plate in the second contest when he attempted to block off Liebold are but a few of the exciting moments promised.

An equally complete series of scenes of the games staged at the Polo Grounds in New York were taken, and were released as one of the features of the 22nd issue of Current Events on Saturday, October 13.

Von Meter to Assist Director Ingraham

Joseph Von Meter has been engaged by the American Film Company to assist Director Lloyd Ingraham with the Margarita Fischer productions.

Romayne Company Makes Preparations for Big Subjects

THE Romayne Superfilm Company, although not a new candidate for favor within the motion picture industry, is launching unusually ambitious plans for the future. According to the announcement made by the company last week, it has grown to such goodly proportions that the launching of something out of the ordinary on a large scale is entirely timely and to be expected.

It is the purpose of Romayne to stage a number of spectacular productions with the idea of making them among the most gigantic ever filmed. The creations will include, according to plans, historical, allegorical, mythological and industrial pageantry. It is estimated that each of these cinema subjects will cost above $100,000.

In order that this enterprise may be carried out successfully the Romayne Superfilm Company has closed a contract with George L. Hutchin, who will be supervising director of all his creations in spectacle and pageantry. By his artistry he has marshalled armies of participants in the portrayal of a single theme and has always registered success. His skill as a director of big spectacular events stamps him a Napoleon in his class.

George L. Sargent, one of the best known and most successful directors familiar to the industry, has been given a contract to direct the pictures projected by the Romayne Superfilm Company. Many of the most artistic and masterful photo creations of later years are the result of Director Sargent's great genius. Wishing to attempt even greater work than ever undertaken, he has joined the forces of the Romayne Superfilm management. He is assisted by a corps of cameramen and assistant directors.

Mr. Hutchin received a fundamental training in super-spectacular work at the Mardi Gras that has endured for more than 100 years at New Orleans. He did "his bit" for the Columbian Exposition, Chicago; the Veiled Prophet parades at St. Louis; the Knights of Electra, Milwaukee; the Hudson-Fulton Exposition, New York; the Lewis and Clark Exposition, Portland, Ore.; the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, Seattle, and other national events, and for two years he conceived and built many of the most pretentious pageants, parades and spectacular features of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition of San Francisco. Mr. Hutchin conceived and built the Rose Festival at Portland.

The Romayne Superfilm Company, through H. Y. Romayne, president, has closed an option on a twenty-acre tract in Hollywood with the intention of constructing one of the largest and most complete studios in America. The present studios are at Hollywood and the general offices in the Marsh-Strong Building, Los Angeles.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Infinite Pains in Petrova Picture to Get Atmosphere

AN announcement from the publicity department of Petrova Pictures this week claims that the first Petrova Picture, which is to be released the latter part of this month, through the First National Exhibitors Circuit, will mark the first time that a motion picture production is being put upon the screen with all the technical detail and requisite atmosphere worked out with the consummate skill of a connoisseur. The story, dealing as it does with court life, calls for several foreign settings of great beauty.

In these scenes, the "business" transacted is said to be absolutely true to locale and national custom—not guesswork. There are scores of officers, diplomats, functionaries and dignitaries of all kinds. The hussar is expected to be hussar all through, not infantry as to trouser legs and naval as to tunic. Baron Dewitz, the regisseur, and Director George Irving have taken infinite pains to comply with Mme. Petrova's desire to have all the details correct.

The diplomat is apparently all diplomat and not 50 per cent nondescript. The Crown Prince is a human being, not an impossible regal automaton, and being a captain in the Royal Navy he is dressed in strict accordance with his rank, while his aide-de-camp is two stripes lower as a sub-lieutenant. Moreover, the Crown Prince is not suffered to prance about in full dress uniform all the time. He only wears gala when the occasion requires it. Otherwise he is arrayed in smart, snappy fatigue uniform or mufti, as the occasion may require. His aide follows suit, of course. Even the royal orders and decorations worn by the Crown Prince are changed according to the uniform he wears. There are a thousand details of this caliber throughout this production.

Mary Pickford Completes New Picture

Once again Miss Pickford will be seen in a child part such as in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and "A Poor Little Rich Girl." In characters of this type Mary Pickford always meets with public favor.

H. W. Berman, manager of the New York Jewel office, is making an extensive trip around the country visiting all the Jewel exchanges. He stopped over in Chicago for a day last week and seemed very much pleased with the splendid results that Eli Van Ronkel, Chicago manager, is getting.

H. K. Somborm, general manager of the Longacre Distributing Company, who purchased the Alice Howell comedies, dropped into town for a few days last week. He is on his way to the Coast and expects to stop at many other cities to meet the exhibitors.

The money getters among the loop theatres last week were Doug Fairbanks in his latest, "The Man from Painted Post"; Marguerite Clark in "Bab's Diary," at the Castle; "Intolerance" on a return trip at the Orpheum; "The Garden of Allah," at the Milford, and Walt Whitman in "The Tar Heel Warrior."

The Wholesome Film Corporation has moved its office from the Consumers' Building to 207 South Wabash avenue, sharing the suite with the Celebrated Players Film Exchange. This is the second new film office to be established in the College Building recently.

Robert R. Ray has been appointed general traveling representative for the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation out of New York. He closed the deal with President Lamb while the latter was on a visit to Chicago last week.

Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer announces that the Central Film Company has acquired the Italian battle front pictures recently seen here at the Auditorium.

Greiver-Herz Buy Rights to Three Features

The Greiver-Herz Film Company, one of the youngest and most active of the independent film exchanges in Chicago, is commencing its Winter drive with some excellent ammunition. For the Central West territory it has secured three features in the last week that will be exploited greater than anything else the company has ever handled. These features are: "Whither Thou Goest," the rights having been purchased from Klotz and Streimer; "Mother Love and the Law," from the Crystal Photoplays, and "Trooper 44." Mr. Greiver announces that he will start out a special squad of salesmen this week on these pictures and hopes to achieve big results.

Greiver-Herz are handling the Ford Pictorial Weekly in their territory. It is given to the exhibitors without any charge, and there is a growing demand.

Chicago Exhibitors Put Ban on Copyright Music

At an open meeting held by the Chicago branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League last week, all of the exhibitors present voted to use only the music of independent publishers. President Joseph Hopp in an address on the question loudly deplored the fact that many of the biggest and most important exhibitors and owners of theatres in Chicago had signified their willingness to use the music of the American Society of Authors and Composers and to submit to the lately imposed tax that goes with it.

The Chicago exhibitors at the meeting offered to help out the independent composers by advertising their musical wares on programs and screens, gratis.

American Standard President Visits Exchanges

H. W. Lamb, president of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, with headquarters now in New York, made a five-day stop-over in Chicago last week while on his way by auto through the Central West and South visiting the company's exchanges and exhibitors.

Mr. Lamb, accompanied by his family, started from New York the first week in October. He does not plan to finish the trip until near the end of the month.

"I already find," said Mr. Lamb, "that this trip with its ability for close observation and heart-to-heart talks with exhibitors and exchange men has been most valuable to me and my company and should also prove very fruitful."

The American Standard is planning a new program policy announcement for the near future, but Mr. Lamb would not say just yet what it is to be.

THE WORLD MARKET

Foreign Territory Opening to Fox Features

Corporation Now Uses Ten Offices for Handling Foreign Trade and as Headquarters for Trade—Spain and Portugal Added

THE recent announcement of William Fox that "A Daughter of the Gods" and other Fox Standard pictures and special features have been contracted for in South Africa and other British possessions throughout the world, emphasizes the growing ramifications of the Fox concern.

Fred Lange is foreign manager of the Fox Film Corporation and his offices on the fourth floor of 130 West 46th street, are a busy place for buyers for the foreign film markets. The department has been recently enlarged and a suite of ten offices is established for the handling of the foreign trade. Trade representatives from all parts of the world make their headquarters in Mr. Lange's office, receive their mail and are made welcome.

Spain and Portugal have been recently opened to Fox pictures. Fox pictures are being shown in Lima, Peru, in Bolivia, and Chile, of the South American coast. In Central America, despite the handicap of delivery, Fox pictures are entertaining the natives of those countries.

The transportation companies will not guarantee the safe receipt of films, and it is necessary in many cases to send them to the inland cities by special messengers.

The Fox forces are negotiating with exhibitors in India, Burma-Ceylon, Egypt and the Straits Settlements—and in countries where there are more denizens of the forests than humans. Fox pictures have been opened to the Fox clientele of world-wide cosmopolitans, emphasizing the fact that Fox films are universal.

Scandinavia and Russia are being sold in part, as are other parts of the civilized world. The attention of the foreign buyer is called to this fact. "Jack and the Beanstalk" is offered the enterprising foreign buyer with all the Fox Standard pictures and special features.

Cromelin Becomes President of Inter-Ocean

Succeeds Henry J. Brock, Who Recently Died in Automobile Accident—"Business as Usual" Is New Executive's Slogan

Paul Cromelin, President and General Manager, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation

PAUL H. CROMELIN, until recently Vice-President of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation was elected President and General Manager at a meeting of the board of directors held last week. Mr. Cromelin is the successor of Henry J. Brock, who was killed a few weeks ago in an automobile accident while motoring near West Point.

Mr. Cromelin, who is a film man of long experience, told a reporter from MOTION PICTURE NEWS that it is his intention to conduct the affairs of his company along the same progressive lines followed by his predecessor.

"Mr. Brock's death was a severe shock to us all," said Mr. Cromelin, "and a gap exists in our organization which we feel can never be properly filled. Nevertheless, 'Business as Usual' will be our slogan, and we hope to make the Inter-Ocean and its connections greater than ever and carry out the broad plans laid out by Mr. Brock."

The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, with offices at 220 West Forty-second street, is one of the most important concerns engaged in the foreign trade. Offices of the company are established in London, Paris, Petrograd and other important world centres.

State Rights Sales

It maintains a complete Independent Field department from which the following statement was issued last week:

The state rights department of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation announce that their attraction, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," has been sold to the Louisiana Enlightenment Company of New Orleans of which George J. Diefenbach is president and general manager. The Louisiana company has purchased the state rights for Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas.

Harry Cummins of the Longacre Building has also purchased territory for "Enlighten Thy Daughter" for the following states: Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

The Casino theatre, Washington, D. C., opened with the subject for the entire week of October 8th.

Schlesinger Advertising Manager

An unfortunate error crept into the caption under the photograph of Leon Schlesinger in this department last week. Due to a printing error, the word "advertising" was omitted before the word "manager," so that Mr. Schlesinger was placed in an embarrassing position. There is no such office as "manager" of the Inter-Ocen Film Corporation. Mr. Schlesinger has been, is, and will continue to be the live wire advertising manager of that concern.

Brockliss Arrives in London Safe

J. Frank Brockliss, foreign representative of the Billy West King-Bee comedies, has cabled his safe arrival in London. The trip was not without incident. It took seventeen days to make the trip. The boat was delayed at Halifax to take on three thousand soldiers and one hundred nurses. A submarine was sighted, but did not attempt to torpedo them.

Inter-Ocean Not a Party to Russian Film Suit

The Inter-Ocean Film Corporation's offices are expanding so rapidly as a headquarters for film activities of all sorts that a regrettable slip of the typewriter occurred in last week's NEWS story regarding the court action in the Russian Revolution pictures.

The account gave the impression that the Inter-Ocean was a defendant in the suit started by another company. As a matter of fact M. Epstin, of 729 Seventh avenue, is the promoter of the Kerensky-Russian pictures which were the basis of the action, and Inter-Ocean was in no way a party to the court proceedings.

The error was due to the fact that in many of the negotiations concerning the picture the wide facilities of the Inter-Ocean organization have been used. This did not, however, bring Inter-Ocean into connection with the suit in any manner, the Second Avenue Amusement Company being the defendant in the action.

Allens Distribute Select Pictures in Canada

Jules and J. J. Allen, of the Famous Players Film Company, have secured the rights for Canada for distribution of Select Pictures, according to an announcement from Toronto this week.

HOW PICTURES ARE BOOKING

Essanay Releases Are Booking Very Well

"The Fibbers," with Bryant Washburn and Virginia Valli, and "Fools for Luck," with Taylor Holmes and Helen Ferguson, Essanay's recent comedy-drama releases, are booking beyond expectations, according to reports from George Kleine exchanges all over the country.

Exhibitors are of the opinion that "Fools for Luck" is even better than Mr. Holmes' first Essanay comedy-drama, "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," which made such a hit everywhere it was shown. Movie patrons, pleased by the subtle wit of Mr. Holmes and the excellence of his first picture, were awaiting the arrival of the second, "Fools for Luck."

Exhibitors generally have expressed their approval of the new Essanay policy of producing comedy-drama instead of the heavier problem pictures. Theatre managers have found that their patrons have responded instantly to the idea, and that their business has increased as a result.

The Essanay Chaplins, of which new prints have been made, and the George Ade fables are continuing as popular as ever, exhibitors report.

McKenny Books More Bluebirds in Canada

J. R. McKenny, manager of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., in the Toronto, Ont., offices, last week returned to Toronto from a short trip through Eastern Ontario in the interests of his department, and announced that he had succeeded in booking several houses for Bluebird service.

Circle in Indianapolis Books Ade Films

The new George Ade "Fables in Slang," made by Essanay for release through the General Film Company, have been booked for the entire series at the Circle theatre in Indianapolis, Ind.

Branch Manager Theodore F. Holland, who reports this booking, says that the house plays all the Fables from three to seven days per week, the only difference in duration being caused by the length of the feature picture. But the Fables are used at least three days even with the longest feature offering.

Geronimo Books Helen Hesperia's "Camille"

The six-reel production of "Camille," in which Helen Hesperia starred, has been booked by Councilman Geronimo for his Alhambra theatre in Stamford, Conn., the booking being made by Billy Hart, General Film's representative in New Haven. The engagement is for three days. It is said that Mr. Geronimo heard such good reports of this production of "Camille" that he engaged it with promptness.

Elsie Ferguson Certainly a Winner, Says Greene

Elsie Ferguson's first photoplay released by Artcraft, "Barbary Sheep," has captured the country, according to the records at the New York headquarters of the distributing organization. In speaking of Miss Ferguson's initial efforts before the camera Walter E. Greene, President of Artcraft, said: 'The requests for return engagements on Miss Ferguson's first Artcraft picture speak louder than words. Our records show an unusually large number of return dates on this production, which, considering the fact that it is Miss Ferguson's first cinema effort, is out of the ordinary.

"The screen adaptability of Elsie Ferguson was immediately appreciated by all of us who viewed a few hundred feet of film disclosing her first work some two months ago. We anticipated great things from this artist but that her initial production would immediately score such a success could hardly be expected. The work of Maurice Tourneur is also largely responsible for the demand for this production and his artistic touch has had a great deal to do with the success of the film."

Educational Pictures Are Booking Well

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Film Corporation of America, in speaking of how his pictures are booking, made the following remarks: "Our pictures are meeting with the approval of both the exhibitor and the patron. We have a unique way in checking this up which comes from the exhibitor voluntarily. Almost on every bill we receive the highest comments on the showing of the scenic by the exhibitor. One of the recent comments was received from Mr. L. L. Levine of the Regent theatre, Brooklyn, which reads as follows: 'This I consider one of the finest and most interesting reels I have ever seen. The interlocking of a little comedy with the educational subject is the apparent key to the success of the educational subjects. (Signed) L. L. Levine, Regent theatre, Brooklyn.'"

Small Houses Get Goldwyn Films Sooner

One of the reasons given by Goldwyn for the flood of contracts signed with that company by the smaller exhibitors of America is that, owing to the large number of first run prints utilized by Goldwyn for its big first runs, the small houses can obtain the big Goldwyn features a great deal earlier than they have ever before been able to obtain big productions.

During the past few days Goldwyn offices throughout the country have poured into the home offices of the company a deluge of small contracts.

French War Picture Stands Behind Its Bookings

Satisfying engagements are reported throughout the country for Pathe's three-reel French war picture, "In the Wake of the Huns." It played a week in Detroit at the Madison theatre, and other big houses have booked it.

The presentation in Denver was said to be one of the most interesting that has been made, since in connection with the exhibition of the picture, Charles A. Johnson, who recently returned from service with the American Ambulance Corps in France, spoke.

Assistant Manager H. E. Jameyson, of Pathe's Kansas City office, makes an interesting suggestion to exhibitors who want an unusual lobby display on this picture. Getting a big first run in Kansas City, he went to the newspaper office and after a few minutes' search in the "morgue," found a very large number of pictures showing ruined churches, orchards, railroads and bridges. He borrowed them and used them as a lobby display in the first run house.

"Manx-Man" May Establish Booking Record

The Manx-Man Company, which distributes George Loane Tucker's picturization of Hall Caine's story, "The Manx-Man," through Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, is in receipt of contracts for this production from every part of the United States. Mr. Tucker's picture bids fair to establish a booking record of almost unparalleled character in this country.

"Seven Pearls" Pleases the Exhibitors

The verdict of exhibitors who stand with their eyes on the box-office receipts and their ears open for any complaint from their patrons, is setting the seal of approval on "The Seven Pearls," the Pathe serial released in September. Bruce Fowler of the Olympic theatre, Buffalo, after signing up "The Seven Pearls" for a six days' showing of each episode in his theatre wrote:

"A remarkable feat and an illustration of the superiority of Pathe serials is our long list of serial successes. We have shown more serials in conjunction with our regular vaudeville program than any theatre in Buffalo, and each serial has had from a six to seven day run.

"Seven photoplays in serial form is our record, and with the exception of two they have all borne the Pathe trademark, "The Red Circle," "Who's Guilty?" "The Shielding Shadow," "The Double Cross," and now "The Seven Pearls" have all played to capacity business.

"Pathe deserves praise and we are pleased to know we can help give it. Pathe serials mean overwork for the sign of the S. R. O."

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

P. A. Bloch Thorough Student of Conditions

Since his recent appointment as manager of the New York Exchange of General Film Company, P. A. Bloch has been very busy organizing his forces for an enlargement of business by this branch and in establishing contact with the exhibitors in his new field. He comes to the metropolis after a successful regime as head of the Philadelphia branch of General Film, and has been from the beginning of his film career an energetic student of trade conditions in every phase of the industry.

A number of years ago Mr. Bloch was engaged in business in Bay City, Texas, in a line far removed from the film game, by day. By night he conducted a motion picture theatre in that town. He branched out into state rights activities in the Southwest, which he kept up for some time. He was, however, not satisfied with results, and suspending operations, made a point of going to New York to investigate the film game at its very headquarters in order to broaden his outlook upon it. He then went to Dayton, Ohio, where he undertook the management of the new Audubon Duplex theatre. Of this he made a success for the owners. He entered the exchange field then at Cleveland, becoming manager of the World Film office. After a term there he went to Philadelphia for the General, and has been shifted now to New York.

In a part of the basement a miniature theatre has been arranged, with machine, seats, screen and other equipment the company supplies. "We will not only use it for demonstrations, but exchange men wishing to show pictures may have the use of it at any time, free," said F. A. Van Husan, manager of the company.

Canadian Famous Players Supplies Camp

It was learned last week that the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., at Calgary, Alta., has been and is supplying the Y. M. C. A. Sarcee Camp, without charge. The Triangle Film Service has opened an office in St. John, N. B., from which to serve the Maritime Provinces of Canada. Arthur K. Mundee, a showman of long experience, is in charge and has already mapped out an energetic campaign. Mr. Mundee put over one of the most effective advertising stunts worked at the recent convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Maritime Provinces, held in St. John, when he provided all exhibitors and guests with a lapel button bearing their name, and home town, printed in black over the Triangle crest. It was an excellent medium for self introduction and found much favor.

Philadelphia Exchanges Making Things Hum

Among the exchanges of the Quaker City all is hustle and bustle, with the result that things are flourishing in great shape. Ben Amsterdam, manager of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, is doing some live work on his King Bee-Billy West comedies by using new and timely ideas. Already 104 contracts are signed for the Billy West films.

Pathe has felt the big impetus given its "Retreat of the Germans at the Battle of Arras" by the booking of the picture for the entire Keith circuit. Every vaudeville house in the whole of Philadelphia is running the film for a week.

The latest Bluebird to fly right close to the hearts of Philadelphia folk is "Mother o' Mine," it having proven the most popular Bluebird in that section recently.

Pathe Makes Changes in Branch Offices

IN AND OUT OF WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. JESSEN

Davis Returning East

H. O. DAVIS, general manager and vice-president of Triangle, is departing early during the coming week for New York for a conference with officials of the Triangle there. Mr. Davis has been on the coast since shortly after taking his present position with the Triangle, and during this time has supervised the reorganization of the producing forces. Practically all of the units at the dramatic studio at Culver City are new to the Triangle. In addition the producing force is larger than ever before at this studio, and production is continuing in a most successful manner.

What is true with respect to reorganizing the dramatic forces, is also applicable to the Triangle-Keystone plant. Players and directors for this organization have been taken from the former Mack Sennett-Keystone forces, and other studios of the coast. Seven directors and companies are at work here, and have proceeded in production so satisfactorilly that releases are now being made for December.

Within the next week or two, the comedy and dramatic forces of the Triangle will be merged at the Culver City Studios, which is undergoing a great change under the supervision of Mr. Davis. Recently sixteen additional acres were purchased and plans have all been completed for the construction of additional stages, dressing rooms, property storerooms and scene docks. The very large enclosed stage will be completed at Culver City within a week. This is to be used exclusively by the comedy section.

Numerous other plans have been perfected by Mr. Davis, including a survey of the motion picture field of the world, an exhibitors help department, and other features that will greatly aid in the popularizing of Triangle subjects.

Gittins' Story Handicapped

Tides, storms, and an actual fire, caused the Triangle Company under the direction of William Gittins, no end of trouble this week, while they were making scenes for "The Everlasting Mercy." The barkentine "Freemont" was used for the fire scene, and when something went wrong, and the boat actually caught fire, the heroic work on the part of the crew and all members of the producing company, saved the vessel from total destruction, and probably the lives of several of those on the boat who would have been unable to swim to shore. The film secured is reported to have a number of marvelous shots. The "Freemont" was built at Philadelphia in 1850, and first used in slave trade. For a time it plied between San Francisco and Honolulu, but since 1912 has been in use almost entirely as a motion picture "prop." When not in use by the Triangle companies, it is serving as a training ship at the training station at San Pedro.

"Up and Down" is the title selected for the ex-convict story being filmed by Director Lynn Reynolds, with George Hernandez featured. This is a Western drama, the plot of which provides how "Dollar Mike" furnished the "big idea" to an author without an idea.

G. P. Hamilton, the latest addition to the Triangle directing forces, is working on his first subject now, which at the present is known as "The Maternal Spark." Irene Hunt, Josie Sedgwick and Roland Lee have been selected as leads. The story reveals how a woman that was not all bad, saved a matrimonial wreck in which a vain young attorney was the principal. George duBois Proctor is author of the scenario.

Roy stewart, Triangle's Western star, is now working in "The Learnin' of Jim Benton," and the company which includes forty cowboys, is now working at Oceanside, Cal., at the O'Neil ranch under the direction of Cliff Smith. Many of the cowboys of this ranch will take part in scenes for this play. There are about sixty-three thousand head of cattle at the O'Neil ranch.

Work will be commenced by Director Jack Conway on a story, titled "Because of the Woman," which will have Belle Bennett as star. She has just completed scenes for the subject made by Director Walter Edwards, which is titled "The Fuel of Life," in which Miss Bennett was starred.

Director Walter Edwards, Ferris Hartman, Jack Dillon and E. Mason Hopper will begin work on new Triangle subjects during the coming week, titles and casts now being selected.

Arthur Hoyt has been engaged by General Manager H. O. Davis, and will serve as casting director at the Triangle Studio. Hoyt was identified with the speaking stage as actor, stage manager and director for sixteen years, and has been in pictures for the past eighteen months.

The Eugene Manlove Rhodes story, "Prince for Tonight," has been prepared for the screen by Jack Cunningham, and will shortly be produced.

Joseph Roach of the Triangle scenario staff, has passed the physical examination, and is subject to twenty-four hours call for the Liberty army.

Keystoners 'Way Ahead

The seven companies engaged in making Keystone and Triangle comedies at the Hollywood Studio, are now more than two months in advance of release. The first one to be issued is coming out the week of October 8. This means the producing unit has completed eight two-reel subjects, and fully twice that many one-reel comedies since the studio was opened in August. Among those now ready for release are: "Pearls and Perils," which was made by Harry McCoy, who plays the featured part, supported by Lloyd Bacon, Alatia Marton, Kathrine Kirkwood and Lyde Crommie; "His Disgusted Passion," a foreign spy story, with a big cast in which appear the names of Bob Milliken, Fritz Schade, Dora Rogers, Claire Alexander, Joseph Callahan, Jack Henderson, Dave Anderson and James Roe; "Haunted by Himself," a farcical tale of the effect of whiskey on both an automobile and its driver, has been completed by H. Raymaker. The cast for this includes George Bins, Maude Wayne, Dale Fuller, Eddie Gribbon, Blanche Payson, Tom Pearce, Jack Perrin and others. "False to the Finish" is a comedy made by Reggie Morris. Ray Griffith has the important role in this, appearing as the owner of a modish shop. Myrtle Lynn, Martin Kinney, Lullah Hart and Alatia Marton are included in the supporting cast. Another Keystone is "Their Under Cover Paper," a burlesque on a detective story which has a number of unusual situations. Practically the same cast that appears in "False to the Finish," take part in this.

Several additions have been made to the Triangle-Keystone forces. Alice Davenport and Martha Crick have been added to the stock company, and will make their first appearance in pictures now in production by Harry Williams and Reggie Morris. Both players have been identified with Keystone comedies almost since their introduction to the film field.

The scenario department has been increased to eight writers by Production Manager Albert Glassmire. The recent additions are J. Farrell Macdonald and Walter Newman. Both have had a wide experience in the film field. Macdonald has served with a number of companies as director, and has also written many subjects for the screen.

Bert Lund, former assistant to Director Harry Williams has been called to the colors, and Duke Reynolds has been selected as his successor.

Director Charles Avery has established a record by producing twelve one-reel comedies in twelve weeks at the Triangle-Keystone Studio. His latest picture has for its cast, Harry Depp, Claire Anderson and Blanche Phillips.

Mal St. Clair, Alatia Morton, Eddie Gribbon, Alice Davenport, Max Asher, Dora Rogers, Dade Holland and William Irving from the strong cast for the latest Triangle-Keystone Comedy which is being directed by Harry Williams.

New Paralta Plant

Work has been commenced on a new plant for the Paralta Producing Company on Melrose avenue in Hollywood, immediately north of the Clune Film Producing Studio which Paralta has used since beginning production. Ten acres have been secured with option for fourteen additional acres adjoining.

Plans which have been completed for sometime, provide for the erection of five enclosed steel and glass stages with administration building, shops, property storerooms, laboratories and all other buildings necessary. An attractive residence which is now on the lot, will be used by the scenario department which has already been moved to this new location.

Prior to the departure of General Manager Robert Kane of the Paralta Studios, who was called to the colors, Nat I. Brown, secretary and general manager of Paralta Plays, arrived from the East to succeed Mr. Kane as executive director of the producing plant. It is reported Mr. Brown and President Carl Anderson of Paralta, will alternately spend several months at the producing studio supervising the same. Robert Brunton, who has been production director since the opening of the studios, will continue in that capacity, being directly in charge of the supervision of all productions.

It is now definitely stated the production of Paralta will be increased to fifty-two subjects annually. Five reels will be the minimum size, and seven the maximum. Six directors are now busy on the filming of productions, and it is probable the staff will be increased later. Reginald Barker is in charge of the Clara Williams Company, Raymond B. West is directing Bessie Barriscale, Oscar Apfel has just started a new picture with J. Warren Kerrigan, Rex Ingram has Henry Walthal and Mary Charleston, Rhea Mitchell and Howard Hickman are co-stars in a subject directed by Wallace Worsley, and Emmett J. Flynn has just completed the direction of "Alimony," starring Joseph Wittell.

Prior to the departure of Mr. Kane on Thursday of this week the studio staff entertained their chief at a dinner given at the Los Angeles Atlethic Club. A special song dedicated to Mr. Kane, was written by Kenneth O'Hara and Bert Crossman, and sung by Howard Hickman, Raymond B. West, Albert Cody and Mr. Crossman.

Change at Universal

The photoplay colony was all upset this week by the numerous rumors concerning great changes at Universal City. Investigation brought out that ninety-nine and forty-four hundreds per cent were untrue. The management stated there would be practically no change, but the Universal Company was merely carrying out the policy adopted in former years.

The cause of the rumors was the dismissal of a few players, a director or two, and one or more writers. In the past it has been the policy of the Universal to produce pictures during the summer, far in advance of the needs of the several programs. When California days grow short, cloudy, and the weather is unsatisfactory for picture making, the number of producing units is decreased according to the absolute needs of the company. The shorter days have come now, and as a result the production is being decreased, so that the over-production of the past few months can be used up during the winter.

Fire caused a damage estimated at ten thousand dollars by officials of Universal City this week. It started in dry grass and spread to a big western set which was being torn down. From here sparks spread to the open air stages, and setting thereon. The fire started south of the dressing room building, and portions of different buildings were found on fire, four or five hundred feet north of there. The prompt response of the company's fire department, and the fifteen hundred employes, saved the company a great loss.

The complete cast has been selected for the western serial which has been given a working title of "The Bull's Eye." Besides Eddie Polo, who is to be the featured player, Vivian Reed, Ray Hanford, Hal Cooley, Frank Lanning, Billy Walsh and Noble Johnson are appearing in important parts. The story for this serial was conceived by Henry McRae, production manager, and Harvey Gates prepared the screen version, or scenario. James Horne is in charge of directing.

Universalites on the Road

Plans have been made for two companies of the Universal to go to Seven Oaks in the Bear Lake Valley for the filming of subjects. One will be under the direction of Rupert Julian, with Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury as leads, and the second will be directed by Elsie Jane Wilson, who in private life is Mrs. Julian, with Ella Hall and Emory Johnson as the featured players. The Julian story is an original one by Elliot J. Clawson, while Mrs. Julian will film one by Waldemar Young. The Elsie Jane Wilson Company has just completed the five-reel Christmas story, titled "Uncle Oliver's Christmas," in which Ella Hall and Zoe Rae play important parts with Harry Holden appearing in the characterization of the uncle.

Douglas Gerrard, who was recently added to the Universal forces as a director, has begun work on his first story which is titled "Madam Spy," and adapted from a story by Lee Morrison. Harvey Gates prepared the scenario. Jack Mulhall and Donna Drew are to be the featured players, with a cast supporting including Claire DuBray, Maude Emory, Clyde Benson, George Gebhart, and Wadsworth Harris.

The past week has been a strenuous one for the Mae Murray Bluebird company, as Director Robert Leonard has been making scenes which required filming at night under the artificial light. These are for the second Mae Murray release, titled "Face Value," which will be completed within the next week. Fred Myton, who wrote scenario for the first Murray production, is also author of the scenario for this, while Leonard wrote the story.

The Richard Harding Davis story, "The Scarlet Car," has been adapted for the screen by William Parker, and the subject is now in production under the direction of Joseph De Grasse. The role of Billy Winthrope is taken by Franklyn Farnum, and Edith Johnson, who formerly appeared in Universal subjects, has been engaged to play the opposite leading role.

Hart to Film "Silent Man"

"The Silent Man" is the title selected for the second William S. Hart production on the Artcraft program by Thomas H. Ince. While making interior scenes at the studio this week, Mr. Hart fell victim to one of the first accidents since he appeared before the camera. The business required that Hart should jump through a window to escape from a court room while trial was in progress. A piece of wood, instead of breaking clear, splintered and made a very painful wound in his breast, and also another portion cut him badly on the forehead. The injury was so painful that Mr. Hart was unable to work for several days. Vola Vale, Bob McKim and Milton Ross are the principals of the second Hart release. During the absence of Hart from the studio, the producing company made a number of scenes on the Mojave desert, fifty miles north of Los Angeles.

Another title selected by Mr. Ince is "The Edge of Sin," which is for the second Dorothy Dalton release. The story and scenario are by Shannon Fife, a member of Mr. Ince's scenario staff. Thurston Hall, William Conklin and Dorcus Matthews take the important parts in support of Miss Dalton, and Mr. Ince will personally direct this subject.

The third Thomas H. Ince company, that, headed by Charles Ray, is working at the Edendale studio recently leased of the Selig Company, where the interior scenes for "The Hired Man" are being filmed. Doris Lee, who made her debut as leading woman for Ray in "His Mother's Boy," is playing opposite in this photoplay which is from scenario by Julien Josephson. The company spent several days of the past week at Bakersfield attending a county fair, where some excellent atmospheric scenes were secured.

Filming of the adaptation from the Al H. Woods play, "The Guilty Man," which is an adaptation from the French production, "Francois Coppe," has been completed at the Thomas H. Ince studios. Space was rented by a company under the management of Mr. Wood, with William Garwood and Vivian Reed taking the leading parts. Gloria Hope and Charles K. French are other members of the cast. Irwin Willat directed.

Sennett Enlarges Staff

Mack Sennett has increased the producing staff engaged in the making of Sennett-Paramount comedies, by the addition of William Campbell as director. Mr. Campbell was formerly identified with the Sennett organization in the making of Keystones, and served there for more than three years in the capacity of writer and director. Mr. Campbell is now working with Manager of Production Hampton Del Ruth on his first story which will have Polly Moran in another "Sheriff Nell" characterization. Ben Turpin is also scheduled to appear in this picture which will be of a decided western atmosphere.

Priscilla Dean is the Universal Heroine Who Suffers All of the Horrors in the Serial, "The Gray Ghost"

The present title for the comedy being made by Fred Fishback is "An International Sneak." This is a burlesque on wartime profits, and promises a number of thrills, as explosions of various kinds are scheduled. Ethel Teare and Charles Conklin are the principals, and Billy Armstrong has been specially engaged to appear in the subject. Mack Sennett has discovered another dog that is as wise as Teddy, but it's just an ordinary cur dog. This "purp" will make his screen debut in the Fishback comedy by returning the lighted bombs to the parties who threw them.

First Fazenda

The first Louise Fazenda-Sennett-Paramount, "Are Waitresses Safe?" has just been completed by Director Victor Herrmann, and a cast that includes Slim Somerville, Ben Turpin, Glen Cavender, Teddy, the Great Dane, and "Pep," the studio Maltese.

Eddie Klein with Charley Murray, Mary Thurman and Weland Trask are having a lot of laughs every day in the making of "That Night." Whether this refers to a sub-title frequently seen in films, or to something else, the studio publicity department refuses to state. However, Klein is authority that it will be even better than "The Bedroom Blunder," with situations equally as delicate and laughable.

The fifth Sennett-Paramount director, Clarence C. Badger, who filmed "The Pullman Bride," will shortly begin work on a new subject.

Hayakawa Stands Pat

Emphatic denial is made by Jesse L. Lasky concerning the stories of Sessue Hayakawa having contracted to appear in subjects for another program. Mr. Lasky states Mr. Hayakawa is under contract until far into 1918 to appear in Paramount subjects, and that Mr. Hayakawa states he has no intention of leaving the Lasky company or breaking his contract. Mr. Hayakawa is shortly to begin work in a new production which will be the third of a series of eight to be made during the year. The two now completed are "The Call of the East" and "The Secret Game."

Announcement was made at the Lasky plant this week of the engagement of Louis Gottschalk, whose duties will be the preparation of incidental music for all western-made Paramount subjects. Mr. Gottschalk is a very well-known musical director and composer. He was conductor for the original "Merry Widow" company in the United States, and for eight Victor Herbert operas, and three by Reginald De-Koven. For several years he was with the Klaw and Erlanger organization, and left there to serve as musical director for "The Century Girl." He wrote the lyrics for "The Wizard of Oz" and "The Tick Tock Man of Oz." The engagement was negotiated by Jesse L. Lasky, and Studio Manager Milton E. Hoffman is now arranging for a private projection room for Mr. Gottschalk, where he will view all subjects. Mr. Lasky is of the opinion this will prove a great aid to exhibitors desiring the best music possible for their subjects.

Members of the photographic department of the Lasky studio were entertained at a dinner given by Albert Palm in celebration of his signing a two-year's contract to remain with the Lasky company since it was opened. It is now running two shifts and producing twice as many prints as the capacity provides.

Chaplin Vacationing

Charles Chaplin has departed for a vacation of several weeks, which he will spend by taking a trip to Honolulu. He was accompanied by Rob Wagner, Saturday Evening Post contributor, and Thomas Herrington, Mr. Chaplin's secretary. It was the intention to be away from Los Angeles for at least one month, and there is a probability that he may cable for his producing company to follow him to Honolulu at a later date.

Prior to Mr. Chaplin's departure, he made all arrangements for the organization of his company, naming John Jasper, former general manager of the Lone Star Corporation, as general manager of the new company, and Jasper and Sid Chaplin are now completing negotiations for a studio site in Hollywood. They will have a plant ready for production as soon as the star returns. Mr. Chaplin also gave out the information that Edna Purviance, who has been his leading woman in all subjects made during the past two years, is to continue in that capacity. Eric Campbell, the giant of mirth, has also been contracted, together with Henry Bergman. E. T. Mazy will be head of the scenario department, Roland Totheroh, superintendent of photography, and Carlyle Robinson, publicity director.

Selig Starts Two

Two productions will shortly be commenced at the Selig studios. Script is now being prepared by Colin Campbell for a seven or eight-reel children's picture which is of a costume nature. Some of the scenes for this require such large settings that the need of an additional stage, larger than the present ones at the Selig studio, made necessary the building of a new stage. This immediately adjoins the former stages, and will be a big improvement to the Selig plant.

The novel, "The Claim Jumpers," is to be filmed by Director Al Green, who is at present preparing scenario. This story has both an eastern and western atmosphere. The cast has not been selected for either subject.

Kenney with National

Colin Kenney, who played an important part in the first Lois Weber state rights production, has been engaged for a prominent role in "Tarzan of the Apes," which is being produced by the National Film Corporation, under the direction of Scott Sidney. Louis Morrison is another widely known actor to whom has been recently assigned a part. The company is spending three days making water stuff, having sailed from San Pedro on board a schooner.

"Du Barry" Nears Completion

All scenes for the nine or ten-reel Fox Standard photoplay, "Du Barry," in which Theda Bara, the star, appears, will be completed by October 12, for on that date Miss Bara plans to leave for the East in order to be in New York at the opening of her first western-made subject, "Cleopatra." Director J. Gordon Edwards will not be able to complete all of the scenes of the photoplay before Miss Bara departs. Many of these require a large number of extras and will be taken later.

The principals of "Du Barry" are Charles Clary, who appears as King Louis XV, Herschel Mayo as Jean Du Barry, the villain; Genevieve Blinn as the Duchess DeGammon, the villainess. Joseph King takes the role of Duc D'Choiseul, one of the conspirators; Hector Sarno is Le Bel, the king's tool, and Fred Church will be seen as Cosse Brissac, the romantic hero part Scenario for the production was completed by Adrian Johnson.

Mr. Edwards will probably remain at the Hollywood Fox studio for fully another month before returning East to direct further pictures starring Miss Bara.

Manager A. Carlos, of the William Fox studio, departed Friday, October 5, for New York, expecting to be absent from the studio about two weeks.

Cast for the Fox film now being produced by Bertram Brecken, "The Awakening," which has Gladys Brockwell in the feature role, has been announced to consist of Louis J. Cody, Vivian Rich, Colin Chase, Willard Lewis, Gloria Peyton, Fred Whitman and Barney Fury in the principal roles.

Scenes of an electrocution room in a prison were filmed by Director Richard Stanton for "Responsibility," which will offer Enid Markey as star. The company will need at least ten days to complete this picture.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

WHILE ponderous of person, Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, star of Paramount-Arbuckle comedies, is not lacking in agility of brains and his intellectual gymnastics are always the wonder and amazement of his brother stars. Since poring over the reviews of a recent paper-covered work entitled "Pistols for Two," by Owen Hatteras, in which the author delves into the lives of a pair of editors, Arbuckle bursts forth with the alarming statement that he sees a great similarity between himself and these gentlemen, and he regards the book as a vindication of temperament.

The result of this announcement was that just before boarding a train for California the other day "Fatty" gave imperative instructions that a number of books should be purchased, and also left a list of the names of friends to whom they were to be sent.

GORDON GRAY, who is Commodore J. Stuart Blackton's right-hand man these days at the Brooklyn Studios, where interior scenes for the Sir Gilbert Parker novels are being screened for Paramount, is a busy young man these days. He has the work of the office and studios at his finger tips in addition to assisting in the direction, and as a consequence he is in almost constant demand.

PENDING the completion of the interior fittings of his new Brooklyn offices, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton is finding it difficult to find a quiet corner where he may work undisturbed or indulge in a private chat with important visitors. As he enters the door he is obliged to run the gamut of dozens of men, women and children, seeking employment or information.

With his accustomed courtesy, the Commodore greets each one with his ready smile, but he is a busy man these days, with the productions of the Sir Gilbert Parker novels for Paramount, and can not possibly stop to talk to every one.

But partitions will soon be up and the door with that magic word "private" will soon be in position, and behind its protecting shield the producer may remain undisturbed.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN, Metro star, who is insured for almost his weight in gold, has purchased forty acres of land, adjoining his estate of one hundred and twenty-five acres at Bushmanor, Maryland. This makes his place one of the largest in Maryland. It is valued at $150,000, exclusive of the horses and cattle and the planting of this season.

The new land is devoted to the raising of potatoes. To this part of farming, Mr. Bushman has paid especial attention. He estimates that the crop for this season, which will be a late one, will bring him close to $10,000.

MABEL WAGNALLS, author of "God's Message," Nazimova's initial Metro starring vehicle, and Florence Short, who plays Mrs. Standish in support of Emmy Wehlen in "The Outsider," are great chums, and both appear delighted with their association with Metro.

Mrs. Wagnalls' first memory of Florence Short is that of seeing her playing in improvised theatricals in the garden of her mother's home in Asbury Park, New Jersey. Two pins was the price of admission. Florence was leading lady, manager, and author combined. She took the strenuous requirements of her position very seriously. Mrs. Wagnalls' interest in the child of ten has developed into a friendship of years' standing. She has been a helpful guide and critic of Miss Short's career, and this has led to their doing much work together.

MAXINE ELLIOTT, the Goldwyn pictures star, whose generous war relief work has drawn praises and thanks from the Kings of England and Belgium and the President of France, makes a plea for generous treatment of the man in khaki.

"Take the boys in khaki to your heart, and make pals of them," pleads Miss Elliott. "They are fighting your battles as well as their own, and the best you can do for them will still be less than theirs.

To the movie fans of the country Miss Elliott has a special word to say regarding the soldier boys.

"Don't forget that the movie is the soldier's entertainment. Never go to the movies alone if you can find a lad in uniform to take with you."

THE long standing friendship between Oscar Hammerstein, the man who gave so much to musical New York in the days of the Manhattan Opera House, and his star, Mary Garden, brought a message of welcome and encouragement to the diva upon her first day in the Goldwyn studios at Fort Lee, N. Y.

Mr. Hammerstein wrote: "Here is to your first appearance on the Goldwyn screen. When you sang 'Thais' first it was a tumult and a joyous scream. Your 'Thais' of the screen will be memorial—an everlasting dream. Both will never be forgotten."

Miss Garden begins work on "Thais" under the joint direction of Hugo Ballin, the artist, who has given his entire attention to picture work since the founding of the Goldwyn Picture Corporation, and Frank Crane, the well known moving picture director. In Miss Garden's supporting cast are Hamilton Revelle, Crauford Kent, Charles Trowbridge and Lionel Adams.

PROBABLY the most indefatigable worker on the screen and stage is the popular and talented Emily Stevens, star of the forthcoming Metro wonderplay de luxe, "A Sleeping Memory." For practically three years this exquisite star has been constantly at work, with scarcely a moment to call her own.

On the screen she has never appeared in anything but Metro wonderplays, but her career on the stage has been shared under the management of several of the best known producers in the world.

WHEN Madge Kennedy signed a contract to appear in Goldwyn Pictures, the officials of the corporation congratulated themselves on the acquisition of a personality. They predicted great things for the star of "Fair and Warmer," "Overnight" and "Twin Beds." But even Madge Kennedy's admirers in the councils of the company were unprepared for the nice things that were to be said about her by critics all over the country, and for her leap to the stature of a universally popular star of the screen in a night.

THREE of the feminine members of the cast selected by George Broadhurst for his revival of "What Happened to Jones," announced to open shortly the new season at the Forty-eighth Street theatre, New York, are players who of late have been active in screen work.

They are Josie Sadler, famous as the original Swedish servant girl on the speaking stage, a character in which she continued her popularity in the movies; Marcia Harris, who in the past two years has supported nearly thirty stars before the camera, and Leila Frost, who since her last stage appearance in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," has been almost exclusively in pictures, being more recently with the Metro.

JUST FOR FUN

Somerville Explains

ROY SOMERVILLE, author of many fiction stories and photoplays, has burst into song with "I Like It" the most popular number in the Anna Held and "Bringing Up Father" shows. The music was arranged by Fred Hutchinson but this story deals altogether with Roy. When cornered in Rector's recently he finally admitted authorship but begged for secrecy.

"I wrote some poetry once and it took two years to live it down," he explained. Then glancing around furtively and lowering his voice to a whisper, asked: "Do you believe in unconscious appropriation—telepathic theft—intellectual larceny, as it were? I can't sing a note—play a note, and yet—these lyrics! I have heard the number a dozen times in rehearsal and can's sing the tune even now. Whence came the inspiration then? I have but one solution—that's why I demand that you keep it dark. You see, when I was out on the coast, Bessie Love tried to teach me to play the ukulele. My fingers got tied into so many knots that I must have held out some notes on her."

JANET HARVEY, of Mayfair, we are told by Fred Beecroft, can pass the buck as well as any advertising manager in the business. And then he adds that she is to be married soon. Not that the two facts are in any way connected.

LOUIS R. REID and Helen Scott Dickey, both of the Dramatic Mirror, are the latest ones, at the hour of going to press, to take the matrimonial plunge. They were married last Thursday evening at Grace Church, New York City, and are, by this time, far away from these parts. Such occasions as weddings always inspire us to coin new phrases of great brilliance, and so, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Reid, we spring the line, "All happiness on the sea of matrimony," wishing this sentiment upon them whether they appreciate it or not.

BY reason of his two home runs in the fourth game of the world's series, Benny Kauff of the Giants collects a hundred dollars' worth of Liberty Bonds from Clara Kimball Young.

LIGHTNING struck the building housing the Fox publicity department in Los Angeles and Tom Mix was right on hand to extinguish the small blaze which the bolt started. We always entertained the fondest appreciation for the gallant Tom, but such an act as saving a publicity department from destruction seems to stamp him as a villain of the deepest dye.

THE following is one of fifty famous stories which Marie Dressler is graciously offering to the press of the nation through the medium of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. It is so full of humor, expressing such an unusually clever thought, that we could not bear to keep it to ourselves and so we pass it on to our host of readers. It is entitled "An Army of Supers." Let's go:

"Speaking of London, as somebody was only recently, I am reminded that I once spent a set of Christmas holidays on the estate of Sir Daniel Gooch. When we started out for the hunt there were so many beaters I thought I had run into the rehearsal of a young comic opera."

Detectaphone Adv.

HAROLD EDEL, manager of the Strand theatre, missed his train from Atlantic City last Monday and was unable to be present at the first concert of the week rendered by the Symphony Orchestra. A detectaphone was placed on the stage, its wires connected with the telephone and Mr. Edel listened to the concert over the long distance wire. A few minutes afterwards Adriano Adriani, the conductor, was surprised on receiving a telegram of congratulations from the manager.

"BABE" Hardy, of King Bee Comedies, has determined to take on fifty pounds more weight. This decision was reached after a conference with L. B. Burstein, president of the company, at the studio. A new contract was drawn up whereby Burstein agrees to pay the comedian two dollars per pound for each additional pound gained by "Babe" after the signing of the contract and also agrees that at the end of six months, if fifty pounds have been gained, he will pay a bonus of $250. At three o'clock yesterday afternoon "Babe" weighed in at 260 pounds, and then proceeded to eat two big custard pies that had been used in the making of the new Billy West comedy, "The Pest."

This story reads very well, except for the fact that the pies eaten were "used." Personally, if we were hungry for custard pie, we would hesitate about absorbing one after it had spread itself all over some comedian's countenance.

THERE is a lady entitled Mrs. Moon in Larkin, Fla., Box 8, who writes in part as follows to the Lucas Supply Company of Atlanta, Ga.: "I have two of the finest birds on earth; you can go the world over and I know you couldn't find just the birds I have. They would make some fine movies and would surprise the world over. The male will chatter and scold and he will crow and he will say "why" when I do, and he will fight me and he will be angry and jealous when I take the female, etc."

Here's a fine chance for some enterprising producer. Talking birds in the silent drama. Maybe the Bluebird company would like to take a chance. At any rate, the opportunity is open.

Another from Pat Dowling:

"Abe McIntosh, who has been a successful plumber on the east side, startled his friends at the Union meeting last Tuesday night by announcing that he was going into the moving picture business. His friends warned him against giving up a lucrative occupation for anything so foolhardy and bade him think of his wife and children. But Abe was obdurate. 'I have made up my mind,' he said, 'and know what I'm doing.'

"Associated with Abe in his new venture are Joe Scott, an ex-butcher, who is going to direct the pictures and hire actors, and Sam Isbery, formerly treasurer of the Teamsters' Guild, who will play leading parts and act as business manager of the concern."

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"The Mark of Cain"

(World Film—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MRS. VERNON CASTLE'S second Pathe picture produced by Astra is a murder mystery story, swift of movement like its predecessor and rich in thrilling, melodramatic situations. The first reel is employed in casting suspicion on various characters so that in the second, after the murder has been committed, any one of them might be accused of the crime on grounds of one sort or another. The unraveling of the mystery, which includes proving the innocence of the hero and the guilt of the villain, is done after a clever fashion to the tune of rattling fast action.

If one cares to become analytical it requires no tremendous figuring to place a finger on the murderer, even before the author reveals his identity. The various premature alibis put forward by the judge determine beyond a doubt that he is the guilty man. However, the wealth of fast action covers up any let down in suspense that may occur because of this. There may be some who will wonder why the police failed in locating the hero after his escape from their clutches when he constantly appeared in public, but this, too, is a minor point when the picture is considered as a whole.

The only prominent point that might possibly be cited for adverse criticism is embodied in the fact that the picture moves backward as much as it moves forward. There is a constant supply of evidence produced by various characters throughout the entire five reels necessitating the use of the Pathe traveling disolove. Still, whereas this might serve to lesson the interest in a picture of merely average strength the rapid trend of "The Mark of Cain" serves to discountenance to some small measure, even this bit of technical structure.

Mrs. Castle receives most competent support in the persons of Antonio Moreno as hero, J. H. Gilmour, as expressive as ever, as old Trowbridge, Elinor Black as the housekeeper and John Sainpolis as the judge. The staging given the picture by Director George Fitzmaurice is highly commendable.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Trowbridge (J. H. Gilmour) is mysteriously murdered. His nephew, Kane (Antonio Moreno), is accused of the crime, but makes his escape from the police. Trowbridge's adopted daughter, Alice (Mrs. Vernon Castle), bends every effort to free Kane of the crime. After Kane has escaped from the clutches of the law, they work together on the case and soon come upon the fact that the judge, a great friend of the murdered man, and an ardent admirer of Alice, is actually the guilty man. It is not long after this that they confront him with the accusation and he, unnerved, confesses. The picture ends happily for Alice and Kane.

"The Love Doctor"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY JOSEPH L. KELLEY

FROM a purely dramatic standpoint, "The Love Doctor," a Blue Ribbon feature from the Vitagraph Studios, with Earle Williams and Corinne Griffith in the starring roles, is employing an old familiar term, "bang-up" and will stand the "acid" test with some of the highly touted 'hundred percent productions. Those who demand flashes of real, honest-to-goodness stage dramatic in screen productions, are assured their fill by a review of this Vitagraph picture. It can boast of truly dramatic moments, and these moments come in such logical regularity and are so brim-full of natural action and depict, so realisticly, vital moments in the every-day lives of the present generation, that from the flash of the initial title to the familiar monosylabic notice "End," there is not a moment given any, excepting those whose business it is to look for defects, to debate with him or herself, whether or no the picture should be adversely criticised for presenting for discussion on the screen such a wholly improbable subject. The scientist will say, "all wrong"—and he is right. The student of medicine will rise with the scientist and conclude, likewise. But the person who has come to the theatre for a "corking" good exposition of dramatics on the screen, will rise in opposition and exclaim, "it may be 'all wrong' scientifically but it's a 'corking' good picture even though the author did ascend into the realms of future for means to an end."

The improbability lies in the subject matter presented for discussion. Perhaps there are some over jealous and optimistic medical surgeons who will hold that to transfer brain cells from the brain of one person to the other, thereby implanting the habits of the one in the other, is possible, but the fact remains that it has never been done and therefore the reviewer can safely assume that it is not alone improbable but impossible. And since this point is the foundation of all that goes to make up the plot of the story, the statement is here made that, through it all, runs the improbable. But this fact does not, necessarily, take from a picture the value of entertainment and again it is stated that "The Love Doctor" is an exceptionally good picture, given a good production, and careful, detailed direction by Paul Scardon. The photography is not any better, but it is as good as the best, and the out-door scenes have been chosen with an eye for all that is beautiful in nature and landscape artistry.

Earle Williams, Corinne Griffith, Patsy De Forrest and a girl whose name is not given on the program but whose name should appear in "caps" give exhibitions before the camera that are especially commendable. Miss Griffith's work is super-fine. She portrays the refined, fickle wife of the man she does not love and then the temptress, the vampire who cares not for the eyes of the world so long as she gains the love of the man whom she desires with a subtleness, with a sense of dramatic artistry that few acting before the camera appreciate. Other members of a good cast are Webster Campbell, Evart Overton and Frank McDonald.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Dr. Brandt (Earle Williams), noted specialist in brain surgery, loves Rose Deming (Patsy De Forrest). She is cold, passionless and does not enthuse over Dr. Brandt's suggestion of marriage. Blanche Hildreth (Corinne Griffith), the young, vivacious wife of an invalid (Frank McDonald), is madly in love with Brandt. While motoring, Rose meets with an accident and Dr. Brandt concludes that her only chance to live lies in operating. He decides to take advantage of her condition, and secretly, while visiting Mrs. Hildreth, whose husband has died, drops a certain dope into her tea, and after she becomes unconscious, he pronounces her case serious and has her taken to the hospital. He operates and transfers brain cells from the brain of Rose to that of Mrs. Hildreth. The two women recover and Dr. Brandt's theory proves correct. Mrs. Hildreth becomes the cold, passionless woman and Rose the loving, affectionate woman of unrestrained passions. Rose falls in love with a former sweetheart and leaves Dr. Brandt. She goes to the underworld and becomes an outcast. Mrs. Hildreth retires to a life of homely happiness. Rose's mind becomes a blank and another operation is performed, this time the cells from the brain of Dr. Brandt, himself, are transferred to her brain and she recovers. She enters a convent in contentment.

"Bab's Diary"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY R. E. PRITCHARD

MARGUERITE CLARK, whose past work has stamped her as the most charming interpreter of young girl roles, scores a new success in "Bab's Diary," the first of the series of Famous Players-Paramount pictures made from the delightful stories by Mary Roberts Rinehart which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Miss Clark fits perfectly into the part of "Bab," a seventeen year old girl who belongs to the "flapper" class, made famous in recent fiction.

In most pictures the titles are tiresome, and some producers have arrived at the conclusion that the picture with the smallest amount of reading matter is closest to the perfect picture. Yet one of the strongest points in this picture is the title work, quotations from the "diary." Almost as fast as they appeared on the screen the audience gave the returning laugh. These are mostly quotations from the story as it appeared in magazine form.

J. Searle Dawley has given the picture splendid direction. The continuity is perfect and one never has to "wonder why." The settings are at times brilliant and the situations sometimes highly dramatic. Probably one of the funniest little bits in pictures comes after "Bab" has been taken from the bath in the bachelor flat and the policemen debate whether she is dead or alive. The flash from the diary adds appeal to the laughing force of the cast. Next to the star Guy Coombes supplies the most pleasing work.

Miss Clark herself takes the greater part of the time before the screen, but there is a splendid supporting staff. The same players will appear in all of the "Bab" series. Here is an excellent opportunity for exhibitors to make a strong appeal. Not only have they the popularity of Miss Clark, second to no one on the screen, but they have the added drawing power of a series of stories which have proved one of the most appealing ever printed in the Saturday Evening Post. These pictures should be advertised heavily by the exhibitor and the result is certain.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Bab Archibald (Marguerite Clark), just returned from boarding school, resents the manner in which she is treated by her mother, because her sister, Leila (Helen Greene), is a debutante and entitled to the attention of society. She is not allowed to go to parties or even to wear a dress with a "V" front and back. So Bab determines to invent a romance for herself. She writes herself love letters, sends flowers to herself and finally installs the picture of her suitor, bought on a postcard stand, in her room. Half of the name, "Harold," she, as she says in her diary, "picks from the air" and the last half of it, "Valentine," she takes from the brand name on a malted milk bottle. But in order to cinch the romance, she writes a poem to "her choice." Her mother (Isabel O'Madigan) and her sister are terribly worried by the turns things have taken, and Bab is promised a "V" dress and party privileges. The father (Frank Lossee), understanding the imaginative creations of his daughter, simply stands by to forgive when the time comes. In the meantime, Carter Brooks (Nigel Barrie), suspects that the whole love affair is false and announces that he knows Harold Valentine well, because he has discovered that the picture that Bab has is that of the leading man of a local stock company. He induces the actor (Jack O'Brien) to come to a party to which Bab has been invited, as Harold, and then numerous complications ensue which convince Bab that she is in trouble, because Harold has the love letter which she has written. She then deserts the party and starts for the supposed Harold's apartment to recover the letter, but through a jumble in the numbers she gets into the wrong place. Here she wins Harry (Guy Coombes) and persuades him to go up to the actor's apartment, three floors above, by way of the fire-escape, to find the love letter, but once there Harry finds such an array of love letters that he is unable to pick out the right one. Therefore, he summons Bab, who also comes the fire-escape route, but in opening the window the burglar alarm is set off. Police break in the doors and Bab hides herself by falling in a tub of water, and feigning suicide is taken home as dead. At the door they are met by the family returning from the party, Carter Brooks and Valentine and all is straightened up and Bab goes back to school in disgrace, but only after she has received a bouquet from Harry.

"Camille"

(General Film—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE WORTS

WHAT will be of uppermost interest to the box office man concerning this latest film treatment of Alexander Dumas's romantic tragedy is that "Camille" is immortal, and, it must always be confessed, somewhat immoral. A certain number of people can be relied upon to attend "Camille" however and whenever it is shown, and for several specific reasons this particular version should go over well.

While Helen Hesperia, who appears as Camille, is perhaps not so well known in America as in Europe, the exhibitor can do well to feature her, in the words of the publicity man as "the internationally renowned beauty and emotional star."

The play, judging from the character of the acting, was made abroad, either in France or Italy. Emotionalism of the French or Italian stamp carries the frequent unconvincing parts of the picture where repressed American acting might not have been so sucessful.

"Camille" either has been edited in the cutting room, or else it was made with polite audiences in mind. Several times the word "mistress" creeps into the sub-titles, but none of the scenes are in any way offensive or suggestive, and you can safely let your twelve year old daughter see the play without the slightest danger to her moral outlook.

If Alexander Dumas's masterpiece should be considered solely in the light of contemporary screen productions, one would be compelled to criticise it for lacking surprise. However, the book is so well known, so well read, and it has been so liberally plagiarized by author-admirers of Dumas, that its many trite situations are excusable.

The narrative is told in that style sometimes given the name "frame story." That is to say, one of the participants is supposed to sit down and tell the author what took place, and the author interpolates the action with his own philosophical comment. It is not a new device, but the manner of its use is somewhat effective.

Helen Hesperia took advantage of every opportunity and the supporting cast was well chosen. The photography was rather below average.

"'49-'17"

(Butterfly-Universal—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE OLD WEST PER CONTRACT," the title under which this story appeared in the Argosy Magazine seems much more descriptive of the picture's contents than the abbreviated one given it by the producers. It portrays the manner in which an entire wild [illegible] was hired to populate a deserted town to gratify the whim of a judge who was active in the days of '49 and how, even in this commercialized crew, there turns out to be a villain to endanger the final happiness of hero and heroine.

This type of plot extends many possibilities, both of a humorous and a dramatic order to the picture producer, and Universal has chosen to place almost entire stress upon the latter element. The results are satisfactory though it must be confessed the introduction offered such a rosy prospect that they fail to come up to expectations in every department. The scenes seem to lack a certain snap and sustaining power that, if present, would have welded them into a much more powerful whole. Even as it is, however, "'49—'17" offers entertainment consistent with its companion Butterflies and there are places where the originality of the idea carries it to stronger heights.

There are no star names among those present in the cast, but at least all those who appear in the principal parts give capable performances. The original story was written by William A. Cook, while Ruth Ann Baldwin adapted and directed it.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Judge Brand (Joseph Girard), an old Westerner living in the East, commissions his secretary, Tom (Leo Pierson), to revive the town of Nugget Notch as it was in former days. Tom visits a fair and secures the services of Castle's '49 Camp. He shortly falls in love with Ann (Donna Drew), a member of the organization and notices that she resents the attentions of Jim Rayner (Jean Hersholt), who runs the gambling hall. When the judge arrives, he finds a fairly live old-fashioned town ready to greet him. Raynor turns out to be a villain in reality and attempts to make away with all the ready cash in town. He is captured by the judge and Tom and a mystery surrounding the identity of Ann and the hold that the villain has over Ann's parents is cleared by his confession.

"The Trouble Buster"

(Pallas-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

VIVIAN MARTIN appears as a newsie again in "The Trouble Buster," a photoplay written by Gardner Hunting and Tom Forman and scenarioized by the former. It is a comedy-drama of an unusual type containing any number of colorful little touches due to the fine performance of the star and her opposite, Paul Willis. This young actor has played boy parts in a number of features, notably "The Fall of a Nation," and his acting throughout "The Trouble Buster" stamps him as a finished player in every respect.

Miss Martin, a wig pulled down over her curls, goes through several scenes dressed in boys rags with a pack of newspapers under her arm. Later, though, she blossoms forth as a full fledged sculptress who refrains from claiming honors for her work because of her love and pity for her one-time playmate, "Blackie" Moyle, another newsie. "Blackie," struck between the eyes while defending her, has been rendered blind and so she allows him to be the hero of the hour, until, his sight restored, he discovers the truth.

The story remains interesting throughout, the skilled performances of leads and support, registering every point with effect. It may be obvious from the first, yet this hardly detracts from the entertainment provided by its incidents. Frank Reicher directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Michelna Libelt (Vivian Martin), an immigrant, after the death of her father (James Neill) makes friends with "Blackie" Moyle (Paul Willis), a newsie. He shares his piano box home with her and the girl takes up selling papers too. She proves adept at modeling with some clay given Blackie by an artist. Morgan (Charles West), a crook, discovers that "Mike," as Michelna calls herself, is a girl and lures her to a deserted room. Blackie comes to her rescue and in the fight that follows he is rendered blind by a fierce blow between the eyes. While he is in the hospital Mike takes the little statuettes they have modeled to an art exhibit. Hers, which she has called "The Trouble Buster," catches the eye of a dealer who popularizes it a la Billiken. Fame and fortune are Mike's for the asking, but she gives all credit to Blackie. With the money derived from the sales he secures the services of an eye specialist and his sight is restored. In the meantime Mike has been having a hard time with Morgan, who threatens to tell the world that Blackie is not the real sculptor unless she gives him money. The sudden arrival of Blackie puts a crimp in Morgan's plan as the young fellow has told the world the true identity of the statuette's author himself.

Louise Harris, Mary Mersch and Vera Lewis appear in other parts.

"The Lost Express"

(Signal Mutual—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THE fourth chapter of "The Lost Express" serial, "The Oil Well Conspiracy," shows Helen Holmes fully up to form in her unique character. This serial started out well and so far has not flagged an instant, on the other hand new hazards, risks and thrills are being unfolded with each chapter. Helen Holmes has already proven herself a mistress in the art of taking long chances, but in this episode she is shown in a trapper's cabin which is entirely demolished by a train of oil tanks which have been derailed on a down grade. She also shows great detective ability.

The photography is good in its entirety, both interiors and exteriors being selected with full regard as to their import.

Exhibitors will make no mistake in booking this serial.

"For Sweet Charity"

(Strand-Mutual—One Reel)
REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

BILLY RHODES and Jay Belasco have wonderful opportunities in this latest Strand comedy, and they both take full advantage of the same. Billy is interested in some charitable cause and decides to invade every office in the building where her sweetheart is located. He (Jay Belasco) tries to dissuade her, but she has pledged herself to raise $100 and starts out. In three instances she is grossly insulted and having notified her beau of this he decides to avenge her wrongs. The result is that after having beaten the three mashers to a pulp, he is arrested and fined for his assaults. She then accepts his check for the amount she has pledged herself and quits that branch of endeavor even "For Sweet Charity's" sake.

The plot is well conceived, nicely directed, and doubtless will be met with favor wherever shown.

"Cassidy"

(Triangle—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THERE'S many a man with God's own soul who never had a chance," opines Larry Evans, author of "Cassidy," and subsequently proceeds to portray a little slice of the title character's life up to the point where he gets his chance. "Cassidy" is in many respects a remarkable picture. The leading character is drawn convincingly and as true to life as the most exacting might demand. He is a drifter—a good-for-nothing because Fortune has never glanced upon him. He is sick in mind and body, a stranger in a strange city, longing for a sight of his home—New York. His experience with the district attorney, into whose house he walks uninvited with intent to rob and from which he goes having gained a friend and, incidentally carfare home, and the manner in which he returns favor for favor, by saving his benefactor's daughter from disgrace and death at the cost of his own life, form a story of unusual strength, with an abundance of pathos and sincere sentiment.

Yes, we didn't make a mistake, Cassidy dies finally and he hasn't married the girl. Such an ending would have weakened the entire structure as, too, would the introduction of any comedy scene no matter how light. So some may think "Cassidy" depressing but only the very conventional, single track thinkers. Actually it combines strength, realism and pathos to a remarkable degree. The sole drawback to the story is its footage. It is so simple that it demands little space and more than simplicity is needed to meet the demands of five thousand feet of film.

But counterbalancing this, with only the exception of the first reel are the excellent performance of Dick Rosson in the stellar role and the production, rich in atmosphere, given it by Arthur Rosson. The rain stuff is admirable, the new meagre settings typical, the types introduced equally so. John O'Connor as the bartender, Eddie Sturgis as the bull, Mac Alexander as the boss, Frank Currier as the District Attorney and Pauline Curley as his daughter carry their roles with striking effect. And the supporting supernumeraries most of whom appear as bums or gangsters lend an altogether realistic atmosphere.

In fact "Cassidy" is a very fine picture. As an alternate from the week in and week out sugar-seasoned and final-embrace-clutch-and-kiss number it should be heartily welcomed by an audience willing to be entertained by something entirely serious in tone. It was made in the east under the supervision of Allan Dwan.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Cassidy (Dick Rosson) drifts into a western city in a drenching rain, penniless and friendless. He finds no welcome at a home of derelicts and going out into the wet again hits upon a house to rob—it happens to be District Attorney Grant's (Frank Currier), who is campaigning against the vice trust. He breaks in, is surprised by Grant who is waiting up for his daughter (Pauline Curley). At first Grant takes him for one of the vice gang but Cassidy explains and the other believes him. He gives him money to go back to New York. Cassidy leaves and goes to the saloon where he left his one companion—a dog. There he discovers Grant's daughter in the hands of the gang. He does the natural thing—makes a tremendous fight for the girl and rescues her. Wounded himself he takes her to the door-step and leaves—not for the New York that he dreams of—but for another world.

"The Seven Pearls"

(Pathe—Seventh Episode)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

A NEW method of escaping from villains is introduced in this number of the serial entitled "The False Pearl." Ilma, closely pursued by Stayne, Kismet and a few others, takes a boy's kite and, jumping in the lake, is towed along by it. Harry in the meantime has a knife fight with one of the pursuers under water, eventually getting the better of him.

No real progress is made during the course of these two reels other than the alliance of Perry (Leon Bary) and the murderer Stayne, in behalf of whom Harry had previously fought. Several of the people change hands more than once but at the end events are located in just about the same place at which they started.

Mollie King continues a charming heroine and Creighton Hale an energetic hero.

"Baseball Review of 1917"

(Presented by Marty McHale—Released by Shepard and Van Loan)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE BASEBALL REVIEW OF 1917" may be obtained either in installments of one reel or as a complete five-reel feature picture. Marty McHale, ex-pitcher of a number of big league baseball teams visited a number of games during the season just past and secured pictures of practically every star player in each of the eight clubs of the American and National Leagues. Such picturues will by no means be amiss at the present time, and there are many fans of both the baseball and moving picture variety in every town who will flock to see it.

The scenes are humorously described in any number of instances by "Bugs" Baer of the New York Evening World, one of the funniest baseball writers in the country. He knows facts concerning every player shown and whenever he has a chance he says something comical about them. These inserts add much to the value of the scenes and will specially be appreciated by the audience familiar with baseball and all the slang terms of the diamond.

It would be useless to run through the long list of players and managers who have been caught by the cameraman. Leading pitchers, leading sluggers, crack fielders, star men of every description have been caught in action. Players from New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Washington, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Brooklyn and Detroit; the managers of each team; stars of the game who have figured prominently in world's series of the past and even in the inter-sectional clash only just completed, are shown.

In this respect it can be added that Mr. McHale and his associates have an unusual opportunity by making a few changes to reap even a greater harvest of dollars than they have if they leave the picture in its present state. The players of the Giants and the White Sox teams should be given featured prominence. Subtitles should be inserted telling what each player did in the recent world's series. Perhaps this portion of the film might be put out as a separate release with more lucrative results. The country over will welcome such a picture within the next two weeks or so—will even jump at it.

And so a picture of Benny Kauff swinging his bat should be preceded by a line telling just how many home runs he made in the series, a closeup of Eddie Cicotte pitching would be much more interesting if his fine pitching record in the series was referred too, to say nothing of the other members of both championship teams who come in for honorable mention. The distributors are overlooking a great chance if they fail to take advantage of the publicity given this recent baseball conflict.

"The Curse of Eve"

(Corona Cinema Company—Eight Parts)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE CURSE OF EVE" is propaganda against the double standard. It would also excuse illegal operations when conditions warranted after thorough investigation.

It opens with a reel of prologue showing the Creation of the world and the expulsion of Adam and Eve from the Garden of Eden. It is rather a materialistic prologue as handled, and will hardly jibe with the generally dim illusion conjured up in the minds of students of the Bible.

Subsequently the story launches forth and so forth. The central figure is a young girl whose mother neglects her. She meets a sad fate when she places confidence in the villain. The doctor operates against his better judgment, after taking the hero into his confidence. Then comes their conviction, finally their freedom, the reunion of hero and heroine and the ultimate idea that such things shouldn't be.

Decidedly they should not be. Particularly when handled as they are here. Such material is not offensive to most of us although Pa, Ma and The Family would hardly choose it as an evening's diet. But as handled here it is grossly mistreated when it comes to the dramatic angle.

The story is developed with little skill, there are false leads, unconvincing situations, bare and obvious mechanics, and the players with only a few exceptions walk through their scenes with little appreciation of what they mean.

The scenario appears to have been done by an amateur, and the direction shows to little better advantage when staging is considered from all its various angles.

There is to be sure, the typical dope scene, the flashes suggesting the unfortunate predicament of the girl, the cabaret scenes—these are unusual in that they are laid in the resort conducted by a Japanese—the intercepted letters, the relentless adventuress, etc. But such incidents fail to create much of an impression unless provided with a continuity that strings them together logically.

Enid Markey is featured. She does her big scenes well, but these are few and far between. The support, headed by Jack Standing and Ed Coxen, seems to have been overpowered by some strange lethargy, although theirs is hardly the fault after all.

"The Curse of Eve" is by no means a best bet. It could be luridly advertised, but even a preachment or an appeal to the baser sensibilities of an audience must possess a dramatic continuity which is lacking in this case.

The story was written by Wycliffe A. Hill, scenarioized by Joseph Anthony Roach, directed by Frank Beal and photographed by William C. Thompson. The last named does the best of all associated in the picture's production.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Eva Stanley (Enid Markey) is engaged to Gilbert (Ed. Coxen), an engineer. He goes West on business and hires Marie (Clarissa Selwynne) as his secretary. She hankers for his attentions and intercepts Eva's letters. Eva writes, breaking the engagement. Finally Gilbert discovers Marie's deceit and returns to explain to Eva. But it is too late. The girl has trusted Spencer (Jack Standing), a profligate, and has paid. She visits Dr. Burton (William Quinn), who only consents to lend his help after the urging of Gilbert. Eva refuses to tell the name of the guilty man. Later Marie, enraged at the hopelessness of her case with Gilbert, tells the story of the operation to Spencer's brother (Raymond Nye), a lawyer. He prosecutes and convicts Dr. Burton and Gilbert. Released from prison, after serving his time, Gilbert returns to Eve claiming her as his own. The lawyer discovers the guilt of his brother.

This is told in the form of a sermon delivered by a minister to his congregation. He advocates some reform for such conditions as a finale.

"Bondage"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"BONDAGE" tells the intensely interesting story of a girl who married an old-fashioned man after taking a big fling at the Bohemian life of New York. Dorothy Phillips acts the part of the girl with that rare skill which has brought her to the front in the ranks of screen stars and William Stowell as the man shines with equal brilliance.

Ida May Park received inspiration for the story of "Bondage" from a suggestion by Edna Kenton and directed the picture as well. She has turned out a most skillful piece of work in every department.

"Bondage" has more than the usual share of dramatic moments. It is told clearly and concisely and beneath the story there is a sound idea that lends force to the many crises of the story.

J. B. McLaughlin is the right type for Bertie Vawtry, editor of a more or less sensational magazine and he handles the part well. The other principals, including Gretchen Lederer and Gertrude Aster acquit themselves commendably.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Elinor Crawford (Dorothy Phillips) has gotten no further in the literary world of New York than a job as special writer on a sensational daily. During one of her assignments she meets Kilvert (William Stowell), a lawyer from her home town, who is shocked at her rather free mode of living. She has little but scorn for him and turns her attentions toward Bertie Vawtry (J. B. McLaughlin), editor of a racey weekly. He professes to love her, but before long Elinor hears of his marriage to Eugenia Darth (Gertrude Aster), a rich society woman. Bertie writes her telling her that after his honeymoon he will return to her. This strikes Elinor as being a little bit too broad. In sorrow she leaves her friends. Later she again meets Kilvert and accepts his proposal. After her marriage the conventional existence begins to weary her and she sees Bertie again. She decides to elope with him but, repenting at the last minute, secretes herself in a poorer quarter of the city. After a long time Kilvert again finds her in a poverty-stricken condition. Though believing her cast off by Bertie he again offers her the shelter of his home. Visiting Bertie's apartments, Kilvert proceeds to horsewhip the truth concerning the innocence of his wife from him.

"The Firefly of Tough Luck"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

HERE is an entirely different type of Western, rich in humor, stirring in its climaxes and generally entertaining from title to finale. It is seldom that an author has assembled such a varying array of characters as are seen in it, weaving about them a drama of such extraordinary interest. The locale, the familiar western town, the heroine a cabaret entertainer from a metropolis, the hero formerly a waster from another metropolis, with two old denizens of the desert to complete the quartette of principals. A masterly characterization of one of these fellows, "Tough Luck" Baxter, is given by Walt Whitman. He brings out the quiet humor of the role to a degree of perfection that will win him heaps of praise.

It is really the humor that is the dominating element of the picture. It is so real, so unaffected that it will make a cynic smile. The scene where the three men watch the Firefly perform in the deserted old opera house has loads of it and pathos, too. Perhaps that is the reason why all the humor registers so well—because it is mixed with just the slightest portion of pathos. At any rate, every point scores a real success and whatever the technical reason they unite to make a mighty pleasing picture.

Alma Reubens as the girl shares honors with Mr. Whitman and Charles Gunn and Jack Curtis run them both close for highest honors. J. G. Hawks wrote the story and prepared it for the screen and E. Mason Hopper has given it a production about which there seem to be no faults to find.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Firefly (Alma Reubens), a cabaret entertainer, loses her position in the city and, forced by her worthless husband, Wilcox (Darrel Foss), journeys to fill a long vacant position in the mining camp of Baxter. Arriving at the mainline station she finds not a soul in sight and undertakes to make the trip across the desert on foot. Danny Ward (Charles Gunn), traveling west in the party of the son of the president of the road, gets up from a poker game drunk and proceeds to fall off the train at the same station. Together they arrive in Baxter and fall unconscious from exhaustion.

"Tough Luck" Baxter, mayor of the deserted town of Baxter, arrives with Happy Jack Clarke (Jack Curtis). The four make one of the deserted homes again habitable. Firefly enjoys the new life, as does Ward. When gold is discovered the four are rich. The town fills up again and Firefly entertains in the dance hall. When Wilcox, her husband appears, trouble begins, for he demands all the girl's money. To save it Baxter tells her that the mine has petered out. Wilcox attempts to rob the assayer's office and is caught. Ordered to leave town, Firefly decides that her place is by his side. He deserts her on the desert, taking all the water and money. Baxter, Happy Jack and Ward follow to bring the girl back. Wilcox is poisoned by rattlesnakes and free at last Firefly accepts Ward.

"The Sea Master"

(Mutual-American—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM J. McGRATH

A PICTURE where William Russell is at his best and doing some superb acting is what my judgment on "The Sea Master" dictates me to say. It is a story of the sea and the men who sail it. It calls for some virile and red-blooded action. Director Edward S. Sloman has seen that it is there.

It has many unusual phases that add to the total of its interest and it is the type of a story that will please just as much as the famed tales of Morgan Robertson in the past. Like all William Russell pictures it is abundant in thrills and tense moments. A fight aloft on the rigging of a yacht between Russell and Pedro is chief among these. The supporting cast is all that can be desired also. Francelia Billington is an excellent opposite to Mr. Russell as the misunderstood young woman. George Ahern, George Fisher, Joe King, Clarence Burton, Rena Carlton, Helen Howard and Perry Banks are the rest of the supporting cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Bull Dorgan (William Russell), skipper of the Southern Cross, is a master of men. Emma Gordon (Francelia Billington) has been called to the bedside of a dying friend in a notorious dance hall. The owner attempts to keep her there. Dorgan hears her cries, goes to her rescue and carries her aboard his ship in making the escape. Dorgan doubts the girl's story of her presence in the resort. Circumstances work against her proof. He forces her to marry him, but later regrets it when he finds her Bible and note sent by her friend summoning her to the resort. He tries in vain to win her forgiveness. A child is born to them. The baby falls ill. Dorgan suspects his wife's fidelity. A mutiny on board his ship brings out Dorgan's manhood, and because of his great love for the baby the girl throws her arms around his neck and forgives him for the past.

"The Penny Philanthropist"

(Wholesome Films Corporation—Seven Parts)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM J. McGRATH

THIS production is the best proof of the increasing quality and the sincere desires of the Wholesome Film Corporation to furnish the best they have. It is a dramatization of a well-known story by Clara Laughlin, a Chicago writer of note. The story as made for the screen is ingenuous, contains the original moral of Miss Laughlin's story and is interesting.

Wholesome showed their initiative and enterprise when they contracted with Ralph Morgan, star of the stage play "Turn to the Right" to play the lead in this film drama. Morgan may not have had much film experience, practically none I think before this, but he just brought his excellent ability to play and the result is that his work is a big part of the picture. Working with him is Peggy O'Neill, another player well known and liked.

The original story has been followed as closely as possible for the screen. The result has been a mirroring of human nature and life that is bound to find an appeal. It is a story of blame for crime misplaced. Tom Oliphant and Peggy, his Irish sweetheart, start to find the guilty one and remove the stigma from Tom's father. Peggy accomplishes most of the results that brings happiness to them all and shows up the villainy and purpose of the guilty and conspiring ones.

"Southern Pride"

(Mutual-American—Five Parts)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM J. McGRATH

THIS latest Gail Kane screen vehicle is a type of drama that is quaint and likable. It is chock full of southern atmosphere even to the mint juleps, and the plot unwinds itself with increasing interest until the end. There are a few slip-ups in continuity here and there, but none of them are outstanding enough to mar the whole to any great extent.

Gail Kane is just as statuesque and finished in her pose and acting as ever and instilled with the necessary theme of the story —southern pride—she makes a striking figure as she progresses through the picture. There is the usual fine selection of locale and elaborate properties that generally characterizes American Film products to this program and the supporting cast to Miss Kane give her excellent aid. There is Cora Drew, Jack Vosburg, George Periolat and Spottiswoode Aitken who scintillate prominently alongside of Miss Kane.

Admission Boosters Gain Courage—Few Falter

Quinn has had a wide experience as manager of Los Angeles theatres. He ran "Hypocrites" for weeks at one theatre at twenty-five, thirty-five and fifty cents, giving six shows daily and reserving every seat in the house. When he opened the Rialto, "The Garden of Allah" was the attraction, and for four weeks he played it to capacity at twenty-five cents and one dollar prices. He is now running Goldwyn pictures every two weeks at twenty cents for the front five hundred seats, and thirty cents for the three hundred in the rear of the house.

Fall business, while it has really not opened in Los Angeles, promises to be better than in the past. The people have not shown any disposition to tire of pictures, according to Manager Quinn, who is of the firm belief that if the producers continue to deliver the goods, there is no cause for alarm of business of motion picture theatres declining.

Failure in Harrisburg

Failure of one or two of the owners of leading theatres in Harrisburg to agree with the others to raise their admission prices above the prevailing ten-cent rate is, in the opinion of many exhibitors, the only reason why prices have not been advanced to 15 or 25 cents in this city.

Peter Magaro, manager of the Regent Theatre, 140-142 Market street, took the bull by the horns and undertook to raise the prices at his house, but none of the others had the temerity to follow suit, mostly because they feared the loss of business to a few who, they knew, would hold out for the existing low rate even if there were to be a general movement in the direction of higher prices.

Mr. Magaro figured that, with all-star programs, he could charge 15 and 20 cents even if all the other houses remained at ten. His experiment lasted six weeks, but today he announced through the newspapers a return to the prevailing ten-cent charge.

In an interview with the MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative, Mr. Magaro explained his return to ten cents:

"While I have been giving all-star shows, and had hoped by that means to be able to keep the crowds, I have found that it cannot be done in the face of ten-cent opposition in all the other theatres. Of course, I cannot control all the first class shows, and although I have stars of the first water all the time, the other houses have first class stars some of the time—just enough of the time to keep the public interested

"Some of the patrons, of course, are discriminating enough to be willing to pay a little more to attend shows in a house where they know that every show is sure to be first class, but the majority of theatre attendants are not so discriminating and will go where it costs them less money even if the standard of the show is not always maintained at the top notch."

Tax as Every Exhibitor Must Meet Its Rigors

ber tax, in January for the December tax and so on through the months in which the tax will be taken. REMEMBER on and after NOVEMBER 1, 1917, accurate box-office records must be kept by the exhibitor or theatre manager, in accordance with the above instructions.

The Government has not, at this writing, issued the form which prescribes the penalties for the violations of any part or parts of this act relating to the collection of tax on amusement admissions but it is understood that one penalty, at least, which falls to the lot of the exhibitor or house manager who turns in a false report concerning the box-office receipts, is assured and worthy of more than passing notice by the one who is responsible for the rendition of such report.

Violators Severely Punished

The person whom the law says is liable for such report—and he is the exhibitor or house manager in the case of motion picture theatres—is liable for the crime of perjury, if he be convicted of turning in such false report, the penalty for which crime is twenty years in prison. Various other acts by those responsible for the collection of this tax, with the intent to defraud or embarrass the Government in the collection of its due, are made crimes or misdemeanors. These will all be set forth in the forms which the Goverinment will issue as soon as the Treasury Department at Washington can have them printed.

It is important that the exhibitor impress upon the minds of the public that the admission tax is on the PURCHASER OF THE TICKET. He should make it clear that the tax is not imposed through his (exhibitor's) suggestion but that the law says so—that the United States Government, to defray expenses in the present war, has laid this tax, that the public's representatives in Congress have carefully debated every detail in reference to this tax and that they decided that it would be a proper and fair step for the Government to take and that in view of this fact, a bill was passed by Congress and signed by President Wilson on the third day of October, 1917, and that this bill specifically says tat a tax must be paid on and after the first day of November, 1917, on all amusement admissions.

Purchaser Must Be Told

So that the public may fully realize the fact that the admission tax is on the PURCHASER OF THE TICKET, it has been suggested, that, where practicable, the exhibitor should have printed on his admission tickets, an explanation of this fact. It can be a brief statement, setting forth the fact that Congress has passed a law which says that the tax must be collected from the purchaser of the ticket. If your admission price is ten cents, have it noted on your ticket that on every ten-cent admission charge to a motion picture theatre, the Government requires a tax of one cent. Or if your admission price be fifteen or twenty cents, note on the ticket that the tax on such admission price is two cents and so on up the scale of prices. If this method is followed, it will obviate all questions in the minds of the patron as to your right to collect such tax and will convince them that it is not the exhibitor who is charging the tax but the United States Government which makes it obligatory on your (exhibitor) part to collect such tax.

Another important feature of the law, which although perfectly obvious to the one who has carefully studied the different clauses, might be overlooked by the one who merely considers the outstanding, salient points, is the clause containing the general statement that there is to be no tax on five-cent admissions. This is a clear, plain statement, obvious to everyone. But it may be that in some theatres there are different admission prices for different parts of the theatre. This is not only possible but as a matter of fact, such a course is followed in almost every motion picture theatre. Let us assume that you have a section reserved at a flat rate of five cents. Regardless of the section of the theatre to which this rate applies, there is no tax to be collected from any person paying this admission price of five cents. But in another part of your theatre you may, and in all probability you have, a section reserved for those paying a ten-cent admission price. If so, you have to collect a tax of one cent on all such tickets sold. And, further, you may have a third section reserved at a rate of fifteen cents. The tickets sold for this section will call for a tax of two cents, to be collected from the person buying such ticket. In short, there are many exhibitors who will have many admission prices of five cents, paid by their patrons, for which they will not have to turn in a report—that is for which they will not have to account to the Government, for tax. In all probability the exhibitor will have to show on his report the number of five-cent admissions collected so as not to confuse the report on the other admissions which exceed five cents and upon which a tax is due.

Exhibitor Can Pay

It is well to bear in mind, the fact that the, although the law says that the tax must be collected from the purchaser of the ticket, the exhibitor may continue charging his regular rate of admission and pay the tax himself. But he must remember that if he so decides he must, in making out his report, note this fact. In other words, he must, if his admission price be fifteen cents, report thirteen cents is for admission and two cents for the tax. And he must so notify the public that the flat rate of fifteen cents includes the tax of two cents which is required to be paid on a fifteen-cent admission.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Pay no Attention to this Lamp

—After It's Installed

When your projecting apparatus has been equipped with this new NATIONAL MAZDA lamp, the operator can run through the entire program without giving a moment's attention to the light. Once focused, it requires no adjusting. It leaves "nothing to watch but the film."

The pictures are made doubly enjoyable. The light is brilliant, steady, flickerless. The screen is evenly illuminated to the farthest edges. The pictures are sharper. The eyestrain is gone.

At small expense your machines can be rebuilt to accommodate these lamps. The lowered operating cost will repay the entire investment within a few months.

As in the lighting of homes, theaters, factories, stores, trains, autos, streets and other places, NATIONAL MAZDA has inevitably supplanted older illuminants, so will it be in motion picture projection. Why not investigate at once this newest and most efficient light-source?

Society of Motion Picture Engineers

ON Monday and Tuesday, October 8 and 9, respectively, the latest meetings of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers were held at the Hotel Astor, New York City. The efforts of the Society to standardize cine machinery and cinematographic practice are going steadily forward, and at the Hotel Astor meetings the following were in attendance: C. F. Jenkins, Graphoscope Co.; E. K. Gillett, MOTION PICTURE NEWS; A. C. Roebuck, Enterprise Optical Co.; Max Mayer, M. J. Wohl & Co.; E. F. Murphy, Universal; S. C. Porter, Edison Lamp Works; Dr. Hermann Kellner, Bausch & Lomb; H. A. Campe and H. M. Wible, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co.; J. C. Moulton, General Electric Company; Henry Joy, Urban Spiroraph Company; A. S. Cory, MOTION PICTURE NEWS; Dr. C. Akeley, Akeley Camera Co.; W. R. Rothacker, Rothacker Film Company; W. C. Kunzman, National Carbon Co.; J. T. Caldwell, National Lamp Works; C. L. Gregory, Motion Picture World; W. C. Smith, Nicholas Power Company; J. E. Robin, American Standard Motion Picture Machine Co.; R. L. Dennington, Westinghouse Lamp Company.

The morning session, October 8, was opened by President C. Francis Jenkins, who drew attention, in his address, to the fact that the Society was now one year old.

Sundry business was then disposed of, an important amendment of the by-laws being that applicants for membership in the society require the endorsement of only one member upon their application, instead of two, as formerly. The classification "associate member" has also been abolished by the society so that all members are now "active members," and, as such, are entitled to vote and take part in the society's proceedings. This move reflects credit upon the class of technicians represented by the membership of the society.

AT the Monday afternoon session the election of officers was taken up with the following result: President, C. Francis Jenkins (re-elected); Vice-President, Max Mayer; Secretary, E. Kendall Gillett (re-elected); Treasurer, W. C. Smith. Messrs. H. A. Campe and J. C. Moulton were elected to the Board of Governors for the term of two years, while A. C. Roebuck was elected a governor for one year to fill a vacancy.

The committee on cameras, represented by C. L. Gregory, reported progress and promised a paper for the next meeting. Mr. D. J. Bell, chairman of the committee on cameras, was detained in Chicago.

Dr. Hermann Kellner, of the Committee on Optics, reported on the accuracy with which projector lenses should be marked. It was pronounced feasible and recommended by the Society that "approved projection objectives shall have the equivalent focal-lengths marked thereon in inches and quarters or halves of an inch, in decimals, with a plus or minus tolerance not to exceed 1 per cent. of the designated equivalent focal length, also indicated by the proper sign following the figure."

Following further suggestion by Dr. Kellner the lens tube diameters of 38, 46, and 65 mm., adopted at Chicago, were eliminated from the recommendations of the society, and following a suggestion of the President a lens-holder forming part of the machine-head and having an opening $1\frac{1}{8}$ inch diameter was recommended as a standard to replace the three diameters of lens-tube which had been proposed at Chicago. The proposed built-in jacket or lens holder of $1\frac{1}{8}$ inch diameter is practical because it corresponds with the diameters of numerous lens tubes, while tubes of small diameter may be readily provided with an adapting collar. This recommendation was adopted.

The subject of a standard projection screen surface, to which other screens could be referred for purposes of comparison, was introduced by the President, but was laid over pending further and more detailed investigation.

The Society decided that the most efficient type of film reel, for 1,000 foot lengths of film, should conform to the following dimensions: Diameter 11 inches, interior width $1\frac{1}{2}$ inch, diameter of hub 5 inches; center hole $\frac{5}{8}$ inch wide provided with a key-way $\frac{1}{16}$ x $\frac{1}{8}$ inch extending all the way through the reel.

A standard take-up tension was also recommended, this being, for 1,000 foot reels of film, not to exceed a pull of 15 ounces at the end of a five-inch lever (the 5-inch lever representing the radius of a 10-inch, or 1,000 foot, film reel of common type.)

ON Tuesday morning, October 9, the Auditors' report for the past year was read, and showed the Society of Motion Picture Engineers to be in healthy financial condition. It was decided to purchase and distribute to all members in good standing, gold buttons bearing the insignia of the Engineers.

After Committees on Auditing, Publicity, Cameras, Projecting Machines, Optics and Electrical Devices had been appointed, the question of the next meeting place of the Society was considered, and Rochester, N. Y., was selected by popular acclaim. Dr. Kellner will therefore be the guardian angel of the Engineers upon the occasion of their next meeting (in March or April).

During the course of the Tuesday morning session further recommendations as to standardized apparatus were approved by the Society. Standard reels of film were described as having black film leaders and tinted (red, green or blue) trailers, and it was, moreover, recommended that in the case of multiple reel productions, each reel should end with a sub-title and that the following reel should commence with the same sub-title. These similar titles can be simultaneously screened when "changing over" from one projector to another, and, in fact, this recommendation of the Engineers is one of the best solutions of the elimination of the "punch-mark" evil.

Action was also taken on the standard dimensions for the apertures of cinematograph cameras, and after extensive consideration it was decided to adopt, for the dimensions of a standard camera aperture, the same dimensions as were recommended by the Engineers at Chicago for the Standard projecting-machine aperture. These dimensions are, as is well known, 0.906 inch by 0.68 inch. The dimensions finally decided upon for the apertures of positive printing machines will probably be different from the above, for practical reasons, but this subject does not come up until next year.

AS good progress had been made at the Monday sessions and the Tuesday morning session, the Tuesday afternoon session was occupied with the reading and discussion of papers. The first paper, read by J. T. Caldwell, Engineering Department of the National Lamp Works, covered the subject of screen brilliancy and Mazda projection lamps. Mr. Caldwell had the subject at his finger tips, and demonstrated his points with the aid of a shadow-box equipped with lights of various powers. He also demonstrated a portable photometer, or illumination meter, which has proven of great value in investigating the lighting conditions in theatres and factories. Some important points in Mr. Caldwell's lecture were illustrated by lantern slides.

Although Caldwell's paper was very comprehensive he did not exhaust the subject of Mazda projection globes, for Mr. Dennington, Westinghouse Lamp Works, who spoke next, was able to bring out some more points in connection with this subject.

A most important communication was next read, this being the report of the Committee on Electrical Devices read by Chairman Wible of that committee. This committee consisted of Messrs. Wible, Campe and Moulton, and the compilation of their report,

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

National Anti-Misframe League

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

This notice does not apply to those who have already sent in this information, but it is for those who have neglected doing so, many of whom have merely given their name and name of city, without any street address, making it impossible for the post office employes to deliver the letters addressed to them. Now let us all get together and raise our "Army of 1,000," and show that we are sincere in our efforts to better conditions in general. I. G. S.

Outside Shutter for Simplex

LEAGUE MEMBER 246, writes: "I believe the Anti-Misframe League if rightly encouraged will be the means of saving the industry many dollars each year due to the great loss now sustained by the careless handling of film. The worst condition we have to face now is the condition of the reels on which the film is sent out by the exchanges. Some day they (the exchange) will wake up and see where they are wrong in sending out one hundred and fifty dollars' worth of film on a broken-down reel, when a new reel, which would cost not more than twenty-five cents, would insure against film damage due to the scratching, scraping etc., which occurs when reels that are not in first-class condition are used. Now for a little question that has been worrying me of late. I have in operation an old model Simplex with the enclosed type of shutter, and I want to know if it would be practical to install the new type of outside shutter on this machine. It seems to me that by installing new shutter driving gears this should be an easy matter. Of course, a new shutter and spider would have to be installed also. Thanking you for any information you may give, I will close with best wishes to the National Anti-Misframe League."

ANSWER: It is indeed a sad commentary, that the film exchanges WILL send out a valuable product, such as a feature film, on reels that are in such a condition as to totally unfit them for service. An instance of this kind was my experience one evening recently, when I and another operator were putting on a show in a private residence "somewhere in Connecticut." The picture was a first run and the emulsion was still green; machine was hand driven, and of course, when we struck the bad reel there was nothing to do but turn the crank with one hand, while turning the take-up reel with the other, and that was not fun, I can tell you, especially when the current was A. C. If the operator had been alone, it would have been almost an impossibility for him to have shown that reel of film. In the city he could not have done so, for it is against the fire department regulations to operate a projector with the doors of the magazine open. The laxity on the part of some film exchanges in this respect is only equalled by their lack of inspection of the film itself. But there will be, as there must be, a change for the better, and this change can be made possible by the earnest co-operation of every member of the N. A. M. L.

Regarding the installation of an outside shutter on your old type Simplex projector, it is not only practical, but possible. However, it is too difficult a job for the operator to attempt, as tools which he does not possess are required to perform the operation. I would suggest if you want this change made that you send in your mechanism to the Precision Machine Company, and let them do the job right. They will, I think, loan you a mechanism to use while the change is being made. I think it is false economy to keep a machine in service for so great a length of time, especially when we consider the various improvements that are being made in all kinds of projection machines. Figuring that the average admission charged by the theatre is ten cents, it is only necessary that ten admissions per day be taken and laid aside for the purchase of an entirely new projector at the end of the year; while, if we figure closer, this can be reduced to five admissions per day, for each machine is sent out with a one year guarantee, and there is no projector on the market today that will not live up to its guarantee if given any care at all in the hands of the operator. At, or just before the expiration date of guarantee, the machine may be returned to the factory for a general overhauling, without charge, when the machine will perform satisfactorily for another year. At the end of the second year, however, a new machine should be purchased if a theatre is to keep up-to-date, and the money that has been placed in the "fund," together with that obtained from the sale of the old machine, for which a purchaser can always be found, will be found more than enough to purchase an up-to-the-minute equipment.

Power's Incandescent Outfit at Safety and Sanitary Exposition

THE Nicholas Power Company was the only motion picture manufacturer to install an exhibit on the floor of the Fourth National Safety and Sanitary Exposition, held under the auspices of the American Museum of Safety and the National Safety Council, at the Grand Central Palace, New York, during the week of September 10.

One of the drawing features of the Exposition was the program of motion pictures, given twice daily, illustrating safe and unsafe industrial methods and practices.

These pictures were projected by a Power's Cameragraph No. 6B, equipped with the new incandescent lamp equipment. The excellence of the projection, and the ease with which the machine was operated demonstrated the suitability of the new outfit for use under all conditions.

In the Nicholas Power Company's booth in the Exposition hall, a duplicate Power Cameragraph with transformer and switchboard was set up in conjunction with an atmospheric screen, to show the illumination of the incandescent system of lighting.

The 110 volt 7 ampere current at the supply line was transformed to 25 volts 30 amperes, giving 750 watts consumption at the lamp. The switchboard was equipped with an ammeter showing current consumption and permitting the interested observer to see how the outfit was drawing on the supply when the proper illumination was registered on the screen.

The Nicholas Power Company advises the use of the new system for a throw of from 75 to 85 feet and a picture of from 14 to 15 feet in width. The outfit as shown evoked much interest from visiting manufacturers who are contemplating installing projecting outfits in their plants as an adjunct to their educational system.

Being Able to Help You Is Our Thanks

MR. J. E. THOMAS, Wisconsin, writes: "I am after some information and am willing to pay for it if you will let me know the cost of same. I am showing a 12-foot picture, throw 65 feet, using 60 amperes through an economizer. I have been told that with this size picture and the distance which it is being projected, I should use 70 amperes, which is of course impossible with the outfit now being used. Can you tell me if direct current will in all cases reduce the flicker and give better satisfaction in general than will alternating current? I shall be pleased to have your opinion on these two points, and, as I said before will pay you for your trouble."

Answer: Before I attempt to answer your questions, I first want to say that MOTION PICTURE NEWS pays me a salary to answer questions, procure information and give that information to our readers without cost to them. Our being able to help you is all the thanks necessary, and now that I have gotten that off my mind here goes to try and answer your questions. It is a common thing for operators all over the country to use all the amperage they can get, and in many cases they use entirely too much current. In your case, with a picture as small as 12 feet, it seems to me that 60 amperes is sufficient; if you are using a reflecting type of screen then the amperage could be cut down to a considerable degree, and when I say "considerable" I mean within ten or fifteen amperes. With 45 or 50 amperes and using the proper carbons there should be no difficulty in obtaining and keeping a well illuminated picture upon the screen. If, however, the screen is of muslin or plaster then you will need every bit of 60 amperes, although it is a question in my mind as to whether there would be any great advantage in going over this amount with such a short throw. Undoubtedly direct current is superior to alternating in so far as the projection of pictures is concerned, as with D. C. there is a purer and softer tone to the light than there is with A. C. You evidently confuse the word "flicker," for in your case I believe you mean to say fluctuations or the alternations of the current cycle which is not so noticeable with a current of high frequency, say 120 or even 60 cycles as it would be with a 25 cycle current. Flicker is directly traceable to the action of the revolving shutter on the projector. It should, then, become a part of your work to see that the shutter is properly apportioned and adjusted. If you were to strike your arc, open the gate of the mechanism and turn the crank very slowly, without a film in and projecting only the white light to the screen you will see where the "flicker" enters. With the machine in operation at a higher speed, say 50 or 60 revolutions per minute, there should be an absence of all flicker, if as I have said before, the shutter is properly apportioned and adjusted. For your kind wishes, which modesty caused me to omit, I thank you.

Enterprise Progressiveness

TWO noticeable factors have been responsible in the last three years in placing the Enterprise Optical Company, of Chicago, on the motion picture map and brought about astonishing popularity and demand for their main product in this field—the Motiograph. First has been the quality of that machine and secondly the organization and executive ability of O. F. Spahr, the general manager of Enterprise Optical.

It was an impossible task in a recent interview to persuade Mr. Spahr to talk at any great length. He predicted the future of the motion picture; talked of the qualities of the Motiograph, and of the condition of the supply field.

"There is an unlimited and unguessed field for motion picture machines and supplies," said Mr. Spahr in discussing the outlook. "New possibilities are showing themselves every day and we at Enterprise Optical are seeking out these new fields all the time. The manufacturer of motion picture machines and supplies no longer has to depend on the theatre for the bulk of his sales.

"Schools, churches and manufacturing plants are coming to see the need and value of the motion picture method in their educational and propaganda work. The latter, especially, are taking up the motion picture means to create efficiency. Now Uncle Sam through the Y. M. C. A.'s all over the country is creating a demand for machines in the numerous military training camps and cantonments. In the last several months we have placed about 350 Motiographs in military cantonments. And there are more orders coming in every day. The outlook is proving itself and there will be plenty of orders and increasing demand for all the makers of motion picture supplies for many days to come."

Canada Sets a Record

FROM Brandon, Manitoba, Canada, comes a letter as follows: "I have been reading MOTION PICTURE NEWS for some time now and am very much interested in the Anti-Misframe League, and would be very glad if you will accept my application for membership in same. I may say I am a member of Local 299, Winnipeg. I never permit a mis-frame or bad patch to pass through my machine the second time, but should I attempt to cut out all the punch marks I have found in some films, I really do not believe I would have enough film left to give a show. Punch holes every few feet! I cannot imagine why they were ever put in the middle of a reel as I have oftentimes found them. However, I do not get so many now; and I believe the A. M. F. L. has had something to do with the extinction of this menace that has visited so many operating rooms—namely, "Punch Holes"—which have ruined many good films. I have been reading the Projection Department for some time now, but of late I am sorry to say have not seen very muuch on real projection troubles. I presume, however, that the League is becoming thoroughly organized before other things are dealt with in regard to projection problems, and I also believe the League will be a blessing to many good operators who are constantly experiencing trouble with films that are in bad condition, and, believe me, there are many such films up here in Canada. Some of us make as many as sixty or seventy-five patches in a five-reel feature and sometimes we go over the mark [That's a bad enough record, I should say—Ed.] and make one hundred or more. This, however, depends considerably on the exchange from which film is received."

ANSWER: You have been made a member of the League, and I want to compliment you on putting your film in first-class condition after the first showing, which every operator who has any interest in his work whatever will do. It was my pleasure to meet, the other day, a man who had just returned from an extensive trip through the provinces, and with what he told me and what you have written I can well believe that you boys are the sufferers at the hands of the film exchanges. We flatter ourselves that the League has played no small part in the bettering of those conditions in various parts of the country. As to the projection troubles, if you remember, some time ago I began a series of articles under the heading "A. B. C. of the Operating Room," and I am frank to admit that I started off half cocked; those articles were commended by many operators, but unfortunately I had not sufficient data on hand with which to continue them. As you will note by the copy you now hold in your hand, I am taking up the topic again, and as I have received much data I believe the series will be of great value to the operator who is really desirous of qualifying for a better position, by increasing his knowledge and brushing up on the fundamental principles of his profession.

Question and Suggestion

LEAGUE Member No. 34 writes: "What size condensing lenses would you advise me to use with an 80 foot throw; size of picture about 9:6 x 13:6 and a 5½ inch focus objective? I am using a 6½ and a 7½ combination. Kindly instruct me how to use the Anti-Misframe labels. I have a suggestion to make for the "change over," and that is to "cue" the picture as you would cue stage performances or acts using a spot light. I don't believe in putting gummed paper or anything else on the film. It is just as easy to watch for the movement of some person on the screen as it is to watch for a peeper or punch hole."

IN REPLY: I would suggest that you use two 7½ inch condensers, placing them in the mount so that they are separated about ⅛ of an inch. Also, see that the lower carbon is slightly in advance of the upper, and that you have a good crater. It is absolutely necessary that a perfect crater be formed if perfect results are to be obtained, no matter what condensers are used. In using the labels of the N. A. M. L., it is recommended that one be placed upon each single reel can; the several reels then placed in the shipping case for return to the exchange. The suggestion you make, while practical, is not always practicable. It is sometimes impossible to catch the "cue" quickly enough to make the "change over" without its being noticeable, and that is what all operators are after. However, I am passing your suggestion along for the consideration of those who may possibly agree with you. Thanks for the names of new members you sent in.

White A. C. Special Carbon

FOR MOTION PICTURE WORK

GIVES PURE WHITE LIGHT AND NOISELESS OPERATION, REQUIRES MINIMUM OPERATING ADJUSTMENTS

THE introduction of the new White A. C. Special Carbons for motion picture work has meant much to those operators who have been looking forward to such an improvement for many years. Hitherto, A. C. operation has always meant an inevitable and annoying accompaniment of flickering light, roaring noise, and a generally dissatisfied audience.

The White A. C. Special Carbon changes all of this. By a patented process the light is held absolutely steady—so steady in fact, that many operators have been sure that the lamp was operating on direct current. Not only is the light steady and flickerless, but the old roaring noise is gone. And with it has gone the dissatisfaction of the audience. With White A. C. Specials at work, no operator need fear that his screen definition will not be perfect—both in intensity and steadiness.

The quiet burning and steady white light of this carbon reduces the necessary adjustment during operation to a minimum. In more ways than one operators are unanimous in feeling that the White A. C. Special will give alternating current a new lease of life in the motion picture industry.

Write for our new booklet describing these White A. C. Special Carbons.

FOR D. C. OPERATION

the National-Silvertip combination is the standard everywhere. Silvertip means perfect projection the country over.

With these two carbons, both unique in their fields, and designed especially for use with A. C. and D. C., we can fill every requirement in the motion picture industry!

which described the efficiency of various rectifier and motor-generator sets, represents a great deal of time and labor. When its text is published some valuable data on electrical devices will be available to operators and others, and the gentlemen of the Committee on Electrical Devices are deserving of the best thanks of the industry in addition to the high appreciation in which their work is held by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

THE concluding paper was the report of the Committee on Booths, prepared and read by the President, C. Francis Jenkins. Mr. Jenkins made the radical suggestion that projection machine booths should be made of glass, so that the audience can keep tabs on the carefulness with which the operator fulfils his work. This, it is stated, will be instrumental in securing decreased insurance rates, as well as increasing the safety of the audience. Coming from such a student of affairs as is Mr. Jenkins, the suggestions contained in his paper are certainly worthy of consideration.

All papers read at the meeting will be published, complete with diagrams, etc., in the forthcoming printed Transactions of the New York Meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and, upon the publication of the Transactions, attention will be drawn to the same in these columns.

N. C. R. Shows Films to Employees' Wives

MOVING pictures were used this week at the plant of the National Cash Register Company in Dayton, O., when the wives of the selling force of the company were entertained. The company, for the first time in history, took the wives into the confidence of their husbands' employers. The expense of all the women were paid by the company.

Two new films recently released by Essanay, "The Troubles of a Merchant and How to Stop Them," which was made at an expense of $10,000 and "The Functions of a Cash Register" were shown for the first time. The pictures were shown in the company schoolhouse which has a seating capacity of 1,200.

Projection with MAZDA Lamps

The New Type I Compensarc Developed especially for use with Mazda Lamps.

After many months of experiment the General Electric Company now introduces projection equipment which has for its lighting unit the well known Mazda Lamp.

The control equipment consists of the new Type I Compensarc illustrated herewith. This device is very compact (dimensions 20 by 9 by 6 inches) and can be mounted on the wall close to the projection machine, giving the operator instant control.

A three point starting switch limits the rush of current, and a multi-point rheostat and ammeter enable the operator to keep the current adjusted accurately at all times.

The Type I Compensarc is rated at 750 watts, 110 to 120 volts, alternating current, and will operate either the 20 or 30 ampere Mazda lamps that have been developed especially for this work.

Sensitometry

THE relative rapidity, or sensitiveness, of various brands of photographic plates and films is a subject of interest to all users of such materials, but beyond the "speed numbers" (so called) printed on boxes of plates, and the tables of comparative plate and film speeds supplied with the various exposure-meters, very little data on the sensitiveness of his materials is within the hands of the average photographer.

While it is a common thing to hear photographers speak of the H. & D. speed of a given film or plate, the fact remains that they do not know how this value has been derived, nor is it generally known that the speed numbers given out by the various manufacturers are not comparable, one with another, because most every maker of sensitive photographic goods employs speed testing methods which, while similar in principle, are modified in practice.

The quantitative investigation of the sensitiveness and other characteristics of photographic emulsions is known as sensitometry, and modern methods of scientific research have made possible the intimate investigation of photographic materials and the theory of photographic processes.

Into all phases of the subject we do not at present enter, but in response to numerous requests we shall endeavor to present in concise and non-technical manner an outline of the modern methods of film or plate speed determination.

In the earlier days of the gelatine dry plate the rapidity of various batches of plates was specified by saying that they were so many times faster than wet collodion plates, but in 1881, or thereabouts, devices were invented by Spurge, and by Warnerke, wherewith the sensitiveness of photographic plates could be compared. Spurge's sensitometer consisted of a bundle of miniature cameras, containing diaphragms or holes of increasing size, the plate being exposed with this device in contact and the deposits beneath the various sized openings examined after development. Such a device has its limitations, for exposures can only be made to diffused light.

The Warnerke sensitometer consisted of a glass plate bearing numbered squares of increasing density. This was placed in contact with a photographic plate and exposed to the light emitted by a phosphorescent tablet which had been previously excited by burning before it a given length of magnesium ribbon. Upon developing the exposed plate, the highest number visible (the numbers increased with increasing density of the squares on the sensitometer plate) was taken as the speed of the emulsion tested.

It is obvious that this method could not well be standardized, but the Warnerke principle of observing the least visible deposit in the developed plate was incorporated by Scheiner into his method of sensitometry (1894).

In the Scheiner system a plate is given a series of varying exposures to a constant light source by exposing it behind a revolving sector-wheel having 23 steps or openings which increase in angular extent in the ratio of 1:1.27. After exposure behind this sector-wheel, and subsequent development, the plate shows a series of exposures of decreasing density, and the least perceptible deposit, when the plate is laid in contact with a piece of white paper, is termed the "Schwellenwerth" or threshold value of the plate. Although it was considered for a time that the Schwellenwerth represented the very faintest light action detectable in a photographic emulsion, this method of observation must naturally vary with different observers, and it has further been proven by microscopic examination of developed test plates that light-action occurs far below the so-called threshold exposure. The Scheiner method of sensitometry has been employed by Dr. J. M. Eder in his elaborate researches, and still remains the standard in Europe.

In 1901 H. Chapman Jones introduced a modification of the Warnerke sensitometer, which has become well and popularly known, and is termed the Chapman-Jones Plate Tester. It consists of a glass plate bearing a series of 25 squares of increasing density; a series of four colored squares and a gray strip, all of equal luminosity; a further series of colored squares transmitting various spectral regions; and a square containing portions of a line and a half-tone negative. With the Chapman-Jones Plate Tester the sensitiveness, range of gradation and chromatic qualities of plates are compared by placing photographic plates in contact with the device, exposing to a standard candle at 1 foot distance, and examining the developed results. Exact speed determinations are not possible by this method, however, nor is any strictly scientific method of plate-speed testing in use today except the Hurter and Driffield system, which was proposed in 1890, and, with suitable improvements, is the method now employed in England and the United States. The literature on the Hurter and Driffield system has been reviewed in the Camera Department[1] and may be consulted by those desirous of going thoroughly into the subject.

For the benefit of Camera Department readers we proceed to outline the Hurter and Driffield system of plate and film speed testing as practised by the modern maker of photographic materials. It was proven by Messrs. Hurter and Driffield's investigations that there is a definite relationship between the opacities of a correctly exposed photographic plate and the light intensities which formed them. They therefore proposed the following terminology and definitions whereby to describe the action of light and development on the photographic plate:

OPACITY is the optical property of a substance (the silver image in the case of a photographic film or plate) which impedes the passage through it of incident light. The mathematical expression for opacity is, therefore:

$$O = \frac{\text{Intensity of Incident Light}}{\text{Intensity of Transmitted Light}} = \frac{I}{I_t}$$

TRANSPARENCY is the inverse of opacity, and is measured by that fraction of the incident light which the substance transmits.

$$T = \frac{\text{Intensity Transmitted}}{\text{Intensity Incident}} = \frac{I_t}{I}$$

DENSITY is the relative quantity of silver deposited per unit area and is expressed as

$$D = -\log_{10} T = \log_{10} O$$

The relationship between density and opacity is defined by saying that the density is the common logarithm of the opacity. (In practical work common logarithms, to base 10, are used, but in theoretical researches hyperbolic or Napierian logarithms are sometimes employed.—ED. Camera Dept.).

The term density is loosely and sometimes inappropriately used in describing the appearance of a photographic negative. It should be here emphasized that a "dense negative," according to the foregoing terminology, is one on which the "opacities" are so great that it possesses very slight "transparency." The "density," according to Hurter and Driffield's notation refers, as above stated, to the amount of silver per unit area, a point upon which the scientific value of the H. & D. system of measurement is based and which should be kept in mind.

An opacity of 10 (transmitting one-tenth of the incident light) is therefore represented by a density (weight of silver deposit) of 1.0, because 1.0 is the common logarithm of 10. If, for example, we have a plate with light of intensity 100 incident upon it, the foregoing definitions will be represented as follows:

I	I_t	T	O	D
100	10	.1	10	1
100	1	.01	100	2
100	.1	.001	1000	3

From this we see that

$$I \div O = I_t$$

and

$$I \div I_t = O$$

[1] "Photographic Bibliography," Camera Dep't., April 28, 1917, pages 2708-2709.

(Stock solutions must be kept in dark).

now by putting $\frac{I}{I_t}$ into logarithms we have

$$\log I - \log I^t = \log O = D, \text{ or density.}$$

Taking as an example a plate which transmits half of the incident light:

$$\frac{I}{100} \div \frac{I_t}{50} = \text{Opacity } 2$$

$$\log I - \log I_t = \log O = \text{Density}$$

$$\log 100 = 2.000$$

$$\log 50 = 1.699$$

$$0.301 = \text{Density or D}$$

$$\log I - D = \log I_t$$

$$\log I_t + D = \log I$$

In a correctly exposed negative, which faithfully reproduces the tonal gradations of the subject photographed, the density, or amount of silver per unit area, should be proportional to the logarithm of the light intensity if the foregoing definitions hold true.

As we have now outlined the theoretical basis of Hurter & Driffield's system, we must next see how the method is carried into practice when determining the speeds of photographic films or plates. In the practice of sensitometry by the H. & D. method the following instruments are essential:

(1) Some form of standard light for making exposures.

(2) An exposing machine, used in conjunction with the standard light to impress upon the photographic plates a series of exposures of known value.

(3) A thermostat, or other suitable means, for keeping the developing solutions at constant temperature.

(4) Some form of photometer for reading the densities of the developed test plates made in the exposing machine.

For their standard light source Messrs. Hurter & Driffield used the British Standard candle, burning 120 grains of spermaceti wax per hour, and having the height of the flame regulated to 45 mm. from its tip to the point where the wick begins to blacken. The candle flame is subject to severe fluctuations, however, and its spectral quality shows a preponderance of yellow, orange and red rays. It is obvious, therefore, that the standard candle is only suitable for speed-testing with ordinary non color-sensitive of emulsions, and that it would give inaccurate values in the case of orthochromatic and color-sensitive plates.

Various standard light sources have been used in dry plate sensitometry, but the one now in use by photographic manufacturers is the acetylene flame. This was formerly produced with a Bray "Elta" burner, giving a flat flame, but the most suitable type of flame is a cylindrical flame and the latter has now come into use[2]. The maintainance of a steady flame of constant intensity requires extensive precautions as to the pressure at which the gas is supplied, but by the use of a manometer the intensity of the flame may be controlled to within 1 per cent of absolute constancy. In common with most other light sources which have been employed in sensitometry, the acetylene flame is richer in red and yellow rays than in blue rays, so in precise work its spectral composition must be made to approximate daylight, which is accomplished by placing light-filters of appropriate color between the light source and the sensitive plate. The exact construction of these filters will vary with the acetylene generating equipment and burner used; as an example of the type of filter required to make the spectral quality of the acetylene flame approximate daylight we give the consistency of those used by Mees and Sheppard[3]. They found that two screens were required to reproduce the spectral characteristics of daylight with the acetylene flame. The screens were composed as follows:

1.	(a) Gentian violet	2 grams
	Distilled water	1,000 ccs.
	(b) Acid green	1 gram
	Distilled water	1,000 ccs.
	(c) Mandarin orange	1 gram

	(d) Rose Bengal	4 grams

A New Handbook

"The Guide to Kinematography," by Colin N. Bennett. Publisher, E. T. Heron & Co., Ltd., Tottenham street, London, W.1. Price, $1.50.

This handy treatise is a successor to Bennett's well known "Handbook of Kinematography," and is a rather more concise volume than its predecessor.

While some of the material which appeared in Bennett's earlier treatises has been omitted, much new data and numerous illustrations of recent British apparatus are presented in the new volume.

As in the case of the previous editions, a variety of subjects are considered, e. g., camera work, laboratory work and projection; each of these subjects being treated in a concise manner designed to be well understood by the novice or student.

Of particular interest are the illustrations of British cine cameras, laboratory devices, projectors and accompanying accessories, a large number being described, including some types which have appeared since the publication of Mr. Bennett's previous handbooks.

In a series of diagrams toward the end of the book are illustrated and tersely described a considerable number of handy devices and attachments for projectors and operating rooms, which the operator can readily construct for himself.

We note, in connection with Fig. 228, Page 240, Bennett's observation that some of the light which passes through the film image at the projector aperture is diffusely scattered beyond the limits of the aperture, in its passage to the rear surface of the projection lens. In connection with this (Page 148-149) Bennett states that an objective of increased aperture will transmit this scattered light, thereby increasing the illumination at the screen. Since a number of American writers upon cinematographic projection have arrived at similar conclusions, a few words on the subject may not be amiss.

It is true that an objective of increased aperture will collect and transmit a percentage of this widely diffused light, but any light which has spread beyond the aperture boundaries is, at most, only slightly specular in character, and when it is projected to the screen it will illuminate the shadows, as well as other parts, of the projected picture, thereby veiling the screen image and lessening its contrast.

This is but a small point to take issue with (although an important one in the optics of projection) and in no way detracts from the interest and value of Mr. Bennett's latest work, which will find a ready welcome amongst the students of cinematography and motion picture projection. A. S. C.

Colorado City to Get Fine New Theatre

MAJESTIC THEATRE, Grand Junction, Colo., long one of the most popular houses in that section, is soon to give way to a new show place which will cost $100,000. Announcement is made that the Rex Amusement company, owners of the Majestic, has acquired the additional ground leases necessary. William H. Swanson and H. T. Nolan are the heads of the Rex company and Charles Decker the manager.

According to the plans as prepared the auditorium will occupy a space 67 by 125 and will have a spacious balcony, giving a seating capacity of 1,400. It is said that the front of the house will be similar in design to the decorative effects of the Rialto and Strand theatres in Denver.

Special attention will be given to the seats and it is said that these chairs involve a contract for $8,400. There will be a $10,000 pipe organ installed, indirect lighting system and every modern appliance will be brought into use.

MUSIC AND THE PICTURE

Opportunities for Small Publishers

THE present time offers splendid opportunities for small publishers with good songs, for the big houses have their eyes peeled to grab anything that looks like a hit. A short time ago, "Long Boy," a rube war song, was purchased from a small firm out West, and the New York house that acquired the publishing rights is reported to have paid out $5,000 advance to get it.

While New York City is the ideal spot for a music house, still one does not have to be here to win success. Your goods count for more than your location. Take Fred Vandersloot, for instance. He did business in New York about fifteen years ago, where he published "On a Saturday Night" and other hits. Then he gathered up his belongings and returned to Williamsport, Pa., and ever since then he has been doing a flourishing business, his "I Wonder How the Old Folks Are at Home" having sold over a million copies up to date.

Pace and Handy, another out of town firm, has been making barrels of money from their Blue songs. This pair of writers appears to have a corner on the "Blues" market, and as yet the firm has no New York office. What it could accomplish with an office here is problematical.

The average small publisher does not appear to know enough about the song game to get his numbers going. He looks for national sales on a little local advertising, and except in few cases is not prepared to meet the demands of performers and musicians with proper orchestrations. Performers and musicians are your salesmen, they exploit your wares gratis (now) and you should be ready to supply them with what they need.

The little publisher does not understand why he cannot get listed with the five and ten-cent syndicates and why the phonograph companies do not use his songs. The five and ten-cent stores care nothing for songs for which there is no demand. They do not exploit music, and they do not wish to have their shelves stocked with music that they will not be able to sell, any more than a grocer cares to stock up with a cereal for which there is no call. And this applies to the photograph companies. But occasionally the phonograph companies will use a song that is not being exploited simply because it makes a good record, and in order to have the phonograph firms use your songs you will have to send something out of the ordinary.

Just now the little fellows in the publishing business make the mistake of putting out songs that appeal to them personally rather than the kind that will fit the needs of performers. And it is a sheer waste of time and money for them to try and popularize songs having to do with the obvious titles like "U. S. A." and "Old Glory," for performers as a rule steer clear of this type of song, fearing that the public will think they are trying to bolster up weak acts with patriotism. Surely the war offers other angles besides patriotism, and the small publisher has just as good a chance to dig up a novelty title as the big writers and publishers, and it is the novelty number that will bring performers flocking to your office and dimes to your coffers. If you doubt it just ask Harry Von Tilzer.

E. M. WICKES.

American Songs Popular in France

EVERY song "plugger" that you meet these days will swear by all that is holy that his firm has the biggest war song hit in France, and if these statements were true there would be at least fifty American hits in France. But they are not, and a musician just back from the other side said that the songs that have won popularity in France are: "Good-by, Broadway, Hello, France," "Over There," by George M. Cohan; "Joan of Arc," "Where do We Go from Here, Boys?" and one of L. Wolfe Gilbert's jazz numbers.

"But the soldiers don't buy music," a "plugger" from a house without a hit on the other side remarked, when told of the real winners in France.

Maybe they do not; and it isn't likely that they purchased many copies of "Tipperary," but it is mighty nice to have reports coming back to this country through the Associated Press saying that your numbers have hit the public's fickle fancy across the big pond; and besides, there is a class in France and England that do buy sheet music, and like to buy the kind that has become popular, but hits are not made in America or France by raving about them—it's hard work that lands them.

Leo Feist intends to make an international hit of "When It's All Over," which he just puruchased from another New York firm, and it will be interesting to note what he does with it, in view of the fact that two other firms could do nothing. And if he turns it into a winner it will be cogent proof that his method of doing business has a lot to do with his success.

The fact that Feist always has one or more hits does not mean that he is constantly blessed with the best songs on the market, and no one knows this better than Leo Feist. Only the other day Mr. Bitner, the general manager, said: "If we had some of the songs that are dying on the shelves of other publishers we could clean up a fortune."

"Then why don't you buy them?" he was asked.

Mr. Bitner smiled and shook his head.

"If we were to go after them the publishers would want more than they would be worth to us. The mere fact that Mr. Fiest wanted the song would tend to jump the price far beyond reason. Had we been fortunate enough to get them from the writers in the beginning or be able to buy them for a reasonable sum we could make a nice profit, for we feel that some of them are really big numbers."

"THE WARRIOR"

1. This "Music Cue Sheet" is not intended to solve every musical requirement of the film, but it should serve as a help and guide to the "Motion Picture Musician." It divides the film into various sections—according to character and action, and gives the musician an opportunity to get acquainted with the film from a musical standpoint.

2. These Music Suggestions comprise a selection of compositions obtainable wherever music is sold.

3. To enable the musician to follow the suggestion without the necessity of purchasing any music (unless he wishes to do so) we have in every case mentioned "a substitute" for the music number mentioned—and in many instances we simply quote the character of music to be used such as "Battle Hurry," "Agitato," "Galop," etc., and we leave in such cases entirely to the musician to select a number out of his library.

4. This "Music Cue Sheet" is issued to help you all—and is not intended as an advertising medium for any of the music publishers.

Crandall's Knickerbocker Theatre, Washington, D. C.

Knickerbocker Opens in Fashionable Washington District

CRANDALL'S KNICKERBOCKER, the newest and most up-to-date picture theatre of Washington and without doubt the most beautiful residential house in this section of the country, opened to the public on Oct. 13. This is at the junction of Eighteenth street and Columbia road, in the midst of official and diplomatic Washington, and is in keeping with its surroundings of spacious private homes and large apartment houses.

The Knickerbocker occupies the entire ground space of 140 feet on Eighteenth street and 143 feet on Columbia road, giving the structure an elongated triangle in shape. This gives two sides of the building to public view, affording an excellent display of graceful lines of Indiana limestone and Pompeian art brick, of which it is built.

The auditorium has a seating capacity of 1700, including the mezzanine and private box section, on the first floor. This latter section will be held for advance reservations, which is an innovation in picture houses, but is quite essential in catering to fashionable Washington. The reserved section is separated from the mezzanine by a broad promenade. A number of loggias projecting from mezzanine lounge overhang the auditorium, giving space for additional boxes. A Japanese tea room is located at the rear of the second floor.

The screen is located on a stage placed in the apex of the triangle shaped auditorium. It is in artistic setting of scenery and lights. There is ample opportunity in the make-up of the stage, special mountings for large productions. The proscenium arch is of attractive design, in keeping with the general scheme of interior decorations.

An innovation is found in the lighting system, which permits of the theatre being illuminated with varying tints. These will be used to secure "atmosphere effects" of the pictures being presented. Such toning of lights and colors will be very effective in scenes of moonlight, sunset, dawn, and night. The auditorium may also be made as brilliant as desired.

The lobby is of rectangular shape, very attractive with lights and a color scheme of pale buff and gray. The posters are set in artistic frames and easels, in keeping with the architectural lines of the structure.

The interior decorations are attractive. The color scheme is a blending of silver and gray, with gold and a touch of blue. The central dome is of silver leaf. The seats maintain the gray color scheme.

A selected orchestra accompanies the pictures. Arthur Robb, who has many years' experience in theatre management with motion pictures and theatrical houses, is manager of the Knickerbocker.

The Knickerbocker Theatre Company is controlled by the following men: Harry E. Crandall, managing director; Barry Buckley, George T. Smallwood, and Fred S. Swindell.

The building is constructed of brick, limestone and cement, and occupies a plot 90 by 150 feet on one of the most prominent corners, opposite the city's largest department store. The Strand seats 1,200 on the main floor and 1,000 in the balcony. The seats were furnished by Haywood Brothers. Location of the building gives opportunity for two lobbies, one of which is 15 by 50 and the other 11 by 50. There are two automat ticket selling machines.

Powers 6 B machines are used in the projections room, with a throw of 140 feet. The theatre has a Fort Wayne motor compensarc 250, D. C., 80 amperes. The screen is Glass Mirror.

The Palace is now giving five shows each day, the program including 12 to 13 reels. Ten and fifteen cents is charged at the matinees and ten, fifteen and twenty-five in the evening. Paramount and Artcraft productions are being used.

Newark Theatre Planned by Strand Architect

NEWARK, N. J., now has one of the finest theatres in the country in the New Newark, which was opened at the end of September. It occupies the site of the old playhouse which was built by the late H. C. Miner.

New Newark Theatre

Max and Edward Spiegel are the principal owners of the new house, the name of the corporation being the Market and Beaver Realty corporation. The property was purchased from the H. C. Miner estate for $450,000. Work of demolishing the old structure was almost immediately begun. All of the old building was razed with the exception of the side walls.

The Spiegel Brothers are prominent stockholders in the Strand, New York city, and the Newark theatre has followed very closely the decorative scheme of the metropolitan house. The general coloring is gold, ivory and red, and these are blended skilfully throughout the house.

Thomas W. Lamb, of New York, was the architect. He designed the New York Strand, and when the Spiegels decided to build the local theatre they at once secured his services.

The theatre has frontages on two streets and two spacious lobbies lead from Market street and Beaver street into the huge auditorium. The building is fireproof, and every precaution has been taken to insure the safety and comfort of patrons. There are sixty exits ready for use in an emergency, and there is an asbestos curtain which can separate completely the stage from the auditorium.

There is a two-story rotunda and mezzanine in the front of the house. On the second floor promenade is located a big open fireplace, with rest rooms and smoking rooms adjoining.

The drinking water supplied is filtered and cooled in a mammoth refrigerating plant located in the basement, and sanitary cups are provided. Fountains are on every floor in convenient places.

Small shafts are cut underneath the seats, and in the hot season cooled air is forced up through these openings from the refrigerating plant by an immense fan. In Winter the same fan is used to supply warm air. The Ideal Heating Co. installed the system.

The lighting system is indirect and a most beautiful effect is produced. The lights are arranged so that the house may be thrown into glare-like bright sunlight or into semi-darkness, at the will of the operator.

The theatre has a seating capacity of 2,200 and splendid chairs, which were furnished by the Wisconsin Seating company.

Simplex machines are used, the throw being 140 feet to a Gold Fiber screen.

In addition to an orchestra of twenty-five pieces theer is an Austin organ. Automatic ticket selling devices are used.

The New Newark, which has a total of sixty employees, gives five shows a day, consisting of seven reels each. Paramount and Artcraft services are being used. The prices for the afternoon are 10, 15 and 25 cents, and for the evening, 15, 25 and 50 cents. The theatre is confining its advertising to the newspapers and house program.

The Man who has done more than any other individual for the Motion Picture Industry

Of him, Mr. Robert Grau, in his book, "The Theater of Science," wrote: "Edwin S. Porter will go down in the history of Motion Pictures as the father of the present form of photoplay."

Twenty-two years ago in the season of 1895-1896, Edwin S. Porter began his career in the motion-picture business by operating the Edison Vitascope at Koster & Bial's Theater, New York; this being the first exhibition of motion pictures in any theater in the United States.

In 1897 he began manufacturing Motion Picture Projectors; machines that were remarkable in that they contained features now accepted as standard by all manufacturers to-day, such as the Single-Pin Movement, Movement Immersed in oil-bath, Outside Shutter, Rollers instead of velvet to keep film on sprockets; while his Framing Device is used on some American and on all European machines. His machines were in use in the houses of the Proctor and the Percy Williams Circuits, and also in the Eden Musee, where he met Francis B. Cannock, of whose career we gave a few glimpses last week.

In 1898 Porter and Cannock designed and built the Machine that was used in the Eden Musee for over twelve years.

In 1899 Porter was engaged by the Edison Mfg. Co. to design Projectors, Cameras, and Perforating and Printing Machines.

He was also manager of motion-picture production for this Company until 1909. Scenics and comics, from 50 to 300 feet long, had been the only subjects up to that time; but he produced the first photoplay as we know it to-day; with a definite plot, elements of suspense, heart interest, etc.

In 1902 he produced The Great Train Robbery, a film play that will never be forgotten, and which opened up a new era in motion pictures.
In technique his first pictures have hardly been surpassed to this day. There were switchbacks, close-ups, double exposures, dissolving one scene into another, and fade-outs.

He was the first to take pictures at night, to use back lighting, silhouettes, fireplace scenes, and the first to take stop-motion pictures, from which the animated cartoons and other trick pictures developed.

In 1909, with Francis B. Cannock, he invented the Simplex Projector and organized the Precision Machine Company.

In 1910 he organized the Rex Motion Picture Company, whose productions Mr. Robert Grau, in the book mentioned above, pronounced the most artistic of that time.

In 1912 he was one of the prime movers in the merger of independent companies into the Universal Film Mfg. Co.

In 1913, realizing that the single-reel film had reached its limit, he determined to produce five- and six-reel pictures, with well known stage stars in them, and for that purpose he, with Joseph Engel and Adolph Zukor, organized the Famous Players Film Company, of which Porter was the General Manager and Treasurer, until in 1915 he disposed of his interests, and retired from the production end.

Now Edwin S. Porter is putting into the Simplex the result of practical experience extending over a period of twenty-two years

What we have told you goes to show, that the Simplex is made by men who know.
